I do resent the fact — and I question the motives; I will have to be frank — of a commission of 15 members that will be overwhelmingly Republican in nature, that will be operated from the time this convention ends up until election day in November. I think we have had entirely too much politics in this convention to date already, and I agree with the remarks made by Delegate Martin from Grand Rapids, which he made here on Friday and intimated again tonight. I question where the responsibility rests, though, in line with what Mr. Martin said.

I think it would be bad. I think it would not be good — and I don't say this is going to happen but if it should happen, and I can foresee it happening — that we have a 15 member commission, all of this staff, the public information group, at the tune of $1¼ million, running all over the state selling a document that might not be, might not be acceptable to the majority of the people. I hope that it is. I am not trying to prejudge the document here yet. We still have a lot of work to do even in committee of the whole and on second reading and third reading, and I am hopeful that some of the mistakes we have made already can be corrected before we complete our work here in this convention, and I hope that we will proceed with a little more caution on those yet remaining, so that we don't make some of the same mistakes that we have made heretofore.

But I question whether or not the taxpayers of the state of Michigan should expend somewhere close to $1¼ million for this purpose. I think that we should prepare our message to the people. I think we should make arrangements to submit that message to the people. I think we should retain a staff here if that is necessary to dispose of the equipment and to complete the final work. I don't think it is necessary to have one continue for 7 months, and I think I will make the same charge in reverse that Delegate Martin made on Friday. I am not so sure that this isn't politically motivated.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, as Mr. Marshall says, we still have a lot of work to do. I move the previous question.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Van Dusen moves the previous question upon the resolution as amended.

A DELEGATE: Division.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Division has been demanded. Is the demand supported?

SECRETARY CHASE: Forty-two, a sufficient number.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The demand is supported. The question is now: shall the main question be put? All those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no. The previous question is ordered.

MR. HODGES: I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Hodges demands the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the resolution as amended. Is the demand supported? The demand is supported. All those in favor of the resolution as amended will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and record the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of Resolution 70 as amended, the yeas are 85, the nays are 35.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Resolution 70, as amended, is adopted.

Following is explanation of nay vote submitted by Mr. Binkowski:

In compliance with my rights as delineated in rule 65, I, the undersigned, hereby submit for publication in the journal my reasons for voting "nay" on the question of post constitutional convention commission budget on the evening of February 19, 1962.

The people of the second senatorial district elected me as their delegate to this constitutional convention. I have continually returned to them to discuss the overall problems that the convention faces, to get their recommendations, and their approval of the positions I have taken in committee and on the floor.

In voting "no" I reflected not only my own concerns but the fears and doubts of the people I represent. It is for this reason that I have elected to go on record on this matter and to "wait and see" if the document completed by this convention is worthy of further effectuation.

As an example, the recommendations made by the committee on finance and taxation, of which I am a member, and as modified and adopted by this convention, more nearly represent the philosophy and scheming of the horse-and-buggy era, when a fair and forward looking governmental tax structure is needed in Michigan to thrust it ahead in the age of space exploration, electronics, and a secure life for all citizens.

Therefore, because of the backward look inherent in this committee's recommendation, I cannot in good conscience advocate the adoption of any proposed document which contains these unrealistic and unfair provisions.

Should it take more time to come to agreements which will bring about a fair and equitable constitution to meet the needs of all the people of Michigan, I see no reason why the arbitrarily designated deadline need be maintained. In fact, by removing both the pressures of an artificial completion date and the desire of some to mold the constitution into a campaign document, it might be better to delay the finalization of this basic law by a few additional weeks of hard work and sincere compromise.

We have already spent about a million and a half dollars for the one sided document we now have. I am voting against establishing a budget for a post convention commission because I do not believe in buying a "pig in a poke" for myself, my constituents, and the people of Michigan. There is no justification, at this time, to pour additional money into a machine which would "sell" the 1962 constitution to the people, if it will be a poorer document than our present constitution.

Following is Resolution 70 as amended and adopted:

A resolution of the constitutional convention establishing a budget for post constitutional convention expenses.

Whereas, It is necessary that the post convention commission meet on a regularly scheduled basis to formulate policy and make many decisions as to the disposition of the convention property and the printing and distribution of the official convention documents; and

Whereas, The commission will also be charged with informing Michigan's citizens of the work of the convention and a simplified explanation of the proposed document; and

Whereas, The commission will be assisted by an executive director who will supervise the administrative and housekeeping division, as well as coordinate all 3 divisions with the commission itself; and

Whereas, The executive director will supervise the renovation of the civic center in order that it may be returned in the same condition as leased and the disposition of convention property in a manner most beneficial to the state; and

Whereas, The other full time employees within the administrative and housekeeping division will be a secretary to both the executive director and the commission and a finance officer who will continue to handle the accounts of the convention and the commission; and

Whereas, The secretary's office will be in charge of preparing the official record and proceedings of the convention and the bound volumes of the daily action journal and the delegates' proposals, which record shall consist of a single convention record consisting of the verbatim proceedings, plus those portions of the daily action journal needed to make the record complete, will be prepared and 3,000 copies of this 3 volume work will be produced by letter press printing. After distribution to delegates, colleges, universities, libraries, research centers, certain state officers and legislators, the remainder will be offered for public sale by the secretary of state. The 100 bound copies of the daily action journal and the 100 bound copies of the delegates' proposals will be distributed to libraries and research centers to make their records complete. The secretary's office estimates that it will take 3,000 man hours to prepare the convention proceedings for the printer. Bids will be accepted on the printing of the proceedings and other volumes; and

Whereas, The purpose of all post convention public information activities will be to prepare and distribute, through all possible media of communications, objective, factual data, of a purely informational character, on all aspects of the constitutional convention. This data will be prepared solely from the official convention record and the committee reports; and

Whereas, It is anticipated that the public information division's activities will embrace the following:

1. The preparation and distribution of 1 million copies of the official address to the people on the work of the convention;

2. The preparation and distribution of informational bulletins to all press media, interested civic groups, educational institutions, etc.;

3. The production of tape recorded informational bulletins to radio stations;

4. The production of suitable artwork, graphs, charts and other visual aids, to illustrate topics dealt with in informational bulletins;

5. Distribution of the documentary film on the work of the constitutional convention;

6. Assistance to working press members in preparing material on the constitutional convention;

7. Assistance to television stations in producing educational programs on the constitutional convention;

8. Fulfilling all requests for informational data from groups and private citizens; and

9. Providing all other necessary services of an informational character; now therefore be it

Resolved, That the convention adopt the following post constitutional convention commission budget:

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON (continuing): General orders of the day. The gentleman from Ionia, Mr. Powell.

MR. POWELL: Mr. President, fellow delegates, I move the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for consideration of the items on general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Ionia. All those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will convene, and the gentleman from Ionia, Mr. Powell, will preside.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The committee will be in order. The Chair would remind the delegates and our visitors tonight that on Friday afternoon and this afternoon we were considering the report of the committee on education. We were working on Committee Proposal 98, A proposal pertaining to the educational institutions of the state. We had passed sections a and b and were considering proposed amendments relative to section c. We have disposed of certain amendments and the Chair will ask the secretary to read the next amendment in order.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Norris offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, lines 10 and 23, after "vote" by striking out the comma and "and preside at meetings of the board" and inserting a period and "The board shall elect one of their number as chairman".

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair will recognize Delegate Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the amendment which I offer here proceeds with fidelity to carry out the intent of the section which we now have before us. The general idea is that the board shall elect one of their number as chairman instead of saying that the principal executive officer, namely, the presidents of the instant universities, shall preside.

Now, what we are doing here in these provisions is to grant constitutional status to these universities and when we accord them constitutional status, we are saying they occupy status coequal with the governor, the legislature, the judiciary of this state. We are saying that these people are to have supreme authority with regard to the operation of the university. Now, if we the people are going to elect boards of regents, boards of trustees, governing boards, then we ought to say that the regents ought to express their regency; the trustees, in fact, ought to be trustees; and the governing boards ought to in fact govern; and that they ought to elect one of their number to act as the presiding officer in order that we might see that the constitutional mandate is carried out.

By this I don't mean to suggest any imputation with regard to the character of the presidents of their respective universities now or at any time in the future. They are very competent individuals now and I am certain that they are going to be very competent people in the future. But the fact is that when we give these institutions constitutional status, we, as the people, ought to recognize that they have a supreme responsibility, and they just can not sit there as boards of trustees or boards of governors or boards of regents and listen to an agenda which is shaped up by the presiding officer, where the main considerations which are introduced for discussion are introduced by the presiding officer, and, as a matter of fact, where pragmatism indicates that many of the results are preordained by the presiding officer.

Now, I suggest to you that the amendment which is contemplated here would say to these respective boards, "We the people of the state of Michigan have elevated you to a constitutional status and we expect you to exercise every ounce of energy, every ounce of discretion, every ounce of responsibility with regard to these key institutions."

Now, I do know that there has been some discussion in the committee with regard to these matters. I know that there has been considerable discussion, but I don't see any minority report on these matters. Also I note that, in the volume which was distributed to us in the early part of this convention on higher education in Michigan, there is a reference to a most extensive study of higher education in Michigan that was made in recent years by one John Dale Russell and a staff for the Michigan legislative study committee on higher education. This staff report was published in July of 1958. In that report Dr. Russell states ". . . that it is wiser for each governing board to choose its chairman or presiding officer from among its own number." This report recommends:

> . . . that when a convention is called for a general revision of the constitution, consideration should be given to the elimination of the provisions in the present constitution making presidents of 3 of the state universities the presiding officers of their governing boards.

And I submit, Mr. Chairman, that what we have here is simply an issue of whether or not the governing boards are in fact to govern, whether or not they are to set the tone and the responsibility and exercise the constitutional mandate, and do this without impugning any of the ability, character or aspirations or competency of any of the presidents involved.

I urge, respectfully, Mr. Chairman, support for this amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes Chairman Bentley on behalf of the committee on education.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, the Norris amendment pretty much covers the same ground that we discussed this afternoon when the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kalamazoo, Mr. Allen, was before us; but it is even more restrictive than the Allen amendment, which, of course, was voted down in committee of the whole, in that the Allen amendment was permissive. The Norris amendment is mandatory. It would forbid the presidents of these institutions to preside in any and all cases.

I might also point out to the gentleman from Detroit that, although he was talking about regents, governors, and trustees, his amendment would only affect the other 7 institutions supported by the state. It would not affect the University of Michigan, Michigan State University and Wayne State University, since the section relating to those 3 institutions has already been passed.

The language of the committee proposal, Mr. Chairman, was approved unanimously by the committee on education, and we ask that the Norris amendment be voted down.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the Norris amendment. Delegate Lawrence is recognized.

MR. LAWRENCE: I might say that I put in Delegate Proposal 1071, relating to Eastern Michigan University. At that time I had in the proposal these words, "The president shall preside at the meetings of the board and be the executive officer of the university."

Dr. Elliott got in touch with me regarding this and said that he did not care to be chairman of the board, that as far as he was concerned, his job was to administer the affairs of the university, make recommendations to the board of trustees or what you will, and answer inquiries, get information for them, and so forth; but that he did not think that he would care to be presiding officer.

Subsequently, on the copy I have here, the words "preside at the meetings of the board and" are crossed out, so that it read, "The president shall be the executive officer of the university"; and these words were inserted, "A chairman of the board of governors shall be elected annually from the board. He shall preside at meetings of the board."

Now, I am sorry I cannot tell you how that got in there, except that I understood that that was what the committee at that time at least was considering, but I am certain that any president of a university, if ordered by the constitution to act as presiding officer, would do it; but at least I can say that as far as Dr. Elliott is concerned at Eastern Michigan, the preference would be that the presiding officer would be elected from the board by the board.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: If the gentleman will yield for a comment, Mr. Lawrence, Dr. Elliott gave no such indication to the committee on education of his feelings. It is our belief that the language which the committee has before it was approved by all the institutions affected.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: I understand that, Mr. Bentley; I am inclined to think that that was given to me at a luncheon in Ypsilanti as what he preferred, and if there has been any dereliction of duty it has been on my part in not transmitting it to the committee.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kalamazoo, Delegate Allen.

MR. ALLEN: Mr. Chairman, when the vote is taken, I request that it be divided; the reason for it is that the first amendment applies to section b, which is the big 3 — and on that I think we have a different situation, because the history of those institutions has been to have the presiding officer the president. The second part of it relates to the 7 other schools in section c. I think some of us may want to vote one way on the one part and different on the other.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Norris amendment apply to section b as well as to section c?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair is so informed by the secretary, but it would be the Chair's understanding that at the present time we could consider only the portion dealing with section c.

MR. BENTLEY: Because I make a point of order against any amendment dealing with section b at this time.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Before the committee rises, probably we could revert to that earlier section but not now. For the benefit of Delegate Norris, I will say that this amendment will be divided and we will vote now on the portion which pertains to section c, which is the only matter directly under discussion.

MR. BENTLEY: Well, Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Am I correct that when a point of order is sustained against a portion of the amendment, that portion at least does not come before the committee of the whole?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Certainly not at this time. The Chair thinks it might be in order before the committee rises when we ultimately dispose of the entire committee proposal.

MR. BENTLEY: Well, I would suggest that if Mr. Norris has an amendment that deals with more than one section that he reserve that amendment until amendments are offered to the body of the proposal.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Norris, is it your wish to divide this and take the part pertaining to section c now or hold the whole thing up until the body of the proposal is before us.

MR. NORRIS: Take it as to section c now, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: So ordered. Will the secretary read the part that pertains to section c?

SECRETARY CHASE: The Norris amendment now reads:

1. Amend page 2, line 23, after "vote" by striking out the comma and "and preside at meetings of the board" and inserting a period and "The board shall elect one of their number as chairman"; so that going back to line 20, the middle of the line, the language will read:

> . . . shall, as often as necessary, elect a president of the institution under its supervision who shall be the principal executive officer of the institution, be an ex officio member of the board but without the right to vote. The board shall elect one of their number as chairman. Each board of control shall consist of 8 members. . . .

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question before the committee is the Norris amendment as has just been read by the secretary. All in favor signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

The amendment is not adopted.

A DELEGATE: Division.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Division is requested. Is the demand seconded?

SECRETARY CHASE: A sufficient number.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: A sufficient number up. We will vote by the machine. All in favor of this amendment signify by voting aye. Opposed, no. Using the board. Sixty seconds have elapsed. The machine will be locked and the secretary will tally the vote. The secretary will announce the result of the ballot.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the amendment offered by Mr. Norris, the yeas are 46, the nays are 62.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The amendment is not adopted. The secretary will read the next amendment on his desk.

SECRETARY CHASE: That is all of the amendments pertaining to this section, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Are there any further amendments to section c? If not, it will be passed.

Section c is passed.

The secretary will read section d.

SECRETARY CHASE: Section d:

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair notes that both the chairman of the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee are seeking recognition. The Chair will call first upon the chairman, Delegate Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, this particular section was the one controversial portion of this particular proposal insofar as the committee was concerned.

There is a minority report signed by a bipartisan group of 4 members of the committee, but I am wondering if we might adopt this particular procedure: so far as I recall, there was no controversy within the committee regarding the first sentence of section d. I am wondering if the signers of the minority opinion would be willing to divide the paragraph for purposes of voting, to vote first on the initial sentence, which I understand was noncontroversial, and then to deliberate and discuss the remaining portion of section d, which is the item under controversy. I wonder if the gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Faxon, who was one of the 4 signers, would indicate if there is any disposition on the part of the minority to change the first sentence; if not, if he would be willing to have the question divided.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Faxon, to answer the question.

MR. FAXON: I can only speak for myself on this, and I would like Mr. Kuhn and Mrs. Conklin also to comment. I would see no objection to our passing upon the first sentence, since this is not a subject of controversy among the committee, and then having the minority report deal with the deletion of the balance.

MR. BENTLEY: I wonder if either Mr. Kuhn or Mrs. Conklin — is that satisfactory? Mr. Brown — I do not see him here.

So, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section d be divided, that we proceed to vote first on the first sentence of section d and then we take up the remainder of section d, which is the part under controversy.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered. Without objection we will take up this first sentence and the —

Do you wish to speak further, Mr. Bentley? Delegate Andrus has been on her feet. Do you wish to speak on the point? Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I have this wonderful advantage of not being able to see a goodly portion of my committee over there. I know that the lady from Port Huron wishes to speak on this particular section. I wonder if she desires to confine her remarks to the controversial question of the board and not to speak on the first sentence, to let it pass by, since it is noncontroversial, and confine her remarks to the question of the separate board. Would that be satisfactory?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: That is the question the Chair asked her, Delegate Andrus, if she had anything to comment with reference to this first sentence; The Chair would prefer she withhold her discussion until we get into the balance of the section.

MISS ANDRUS: Mr. Chairman, this is the first I had known of separating this, and I would like very much — there are many of our delegates who are unacquainted with our junior colleges — so I would like to speak to them about it. If Mr. Bentley does not feel that this will preclude it, I will be very glad to wait and speak after this first vote.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I would respectfully request the distinguished lady from Port Huron if she will let us vote on this first sentence, and I am sure she will have ample opportunity for her remarks on the balance of the section to enlighten all of the delegates on the subject of community and junior colleges.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Are there any amendments to this first sentence? If not, it will be passed.

The first sentence of section d is passed. We will now take up the balance of the section. Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: At this time, Mr. Chairman, I think that we will yield to the lady from Port Huron for her comments on the balance of section d.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the lady from Port Huron, Delegate Andrus.

MISS ANDRUS: Thank you, Mr. Bentley.

I would like to say this about our committee. As I have heard some of the discussion the last week, I have felt how fortunate we were in our education committee. I did not know whether we were Democrats or Republicans. We were all thinking of the young people and their future in the next 50 years. It was a pleasure to work on that committee.

Now the other night or Friday afternoon, one of the delegates, in speaking of our discussion on education, —

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Let's have a little better order in honor of the lady who is speaking.

MISS ANDRUS: — said we were nostalgic, that we were looking backward in our consideration of education in this convention. I would like to say that I am glad we are nostalgic. We have a great history in education here in Michigan, and I think before we can vote intelligently tonight on this section d, we have to look back — I am sorry we could not have done this all at one sitting last Friday — look back at what the conventions did in this field of education before.

Now, in our first constitutional convention in 1835, we provided for a primary school system, which has already been spoken of in this convention. Lands were put aside for sale for schools. You know, Michigan was settled by people who came from Connecticut and Massachusetts and New York, and they came here to the wilderness. They brought with them their idea of local government, of people taking part in their government, and they felt, as they had back in New England, that the people should know how to read and write and be able to participate actively in government. So they provided for what we call our primary school system. They also provided for our state universities and they provided for libraries.

Now, in our Constitutional Convention of 1850, we had grown quite a little by that time, and they provided for a state agricultural college, the first state agricultural college in the United States. That is our present Michigan State University. They provided for a normal school to teach people who could go to teach children in the primary schools. They also provided for schools for the blind and the deaf.

In other words, each of our constitutions has been looking forward to the needs of the people.

Now, when we came to 1908, what were the problems then before the convention? We now had the demand for high schools and so this constitution looked forward to the development of secondary education. It also provided for the School of Mines at Houghton.

The universities will have to build many more buildings. The colleges will not only have to build the classrooms but the laboratories and the libraries; they will have to build dormitories to house these students. The estimate is today we have less young people between 18 and 22 or 23 than we had 10 years ago, but in about 3 years our war babies will be getting into college, and that is why the boards of education locally have had to spend so much in building elementary schools and high schools. The colleges are trying to prepare for the influx of these young people into college, and it is very difficult for them to take care of them.

Now in our hearings before our committee, everyone felt that we should have more and more junior or community colleges to help take care of these young people. It is very important for us to think of this. I was in Russia for a summer studying their educational system in the '30s. Most of the people in Russia at that time could not read and write. Look at them today. We need to have technically trained people to compete with those young people in the Soviet Union who are having all of the training that they can possibly use in their competition with the free world.

So, at the time of world war I, the first junior colleges were started. The first one was in Grand Rapids. Mr. William Hanna and Mr. Blandford are products of that junior college, and I think there perhaps are others here. They have both told me so. Then Detroit started a junior college. It is now Wayne University. Quite of number of others were started after the war. Then the depression came. The different school boards could not carry on. In fact, some of them had to drop out; but, after world war II, there has been a great increase in the demand for these schools.

So this is the problem today. I want to explain this to you, because I have found so many people have not understood just what a junior college, a community college is. It is a 2 year college operated by a local board of education.

In Port Huron — and we have had one since 1923 — the local board of education is asking next month for a 9 mill increase for the schools, 9 mills to build a high school and elementary school. They just don't have money to build junior colleges. It is all they can do to take care in most of these places of their elementary and secondary students.

Now, these young people are going to have to go somewhere. We, the people of Michigan, must train them. Will we do it in the universities where we have to build dormitories and so forth? Or will we take care of them in our local communities? If we do, in our local communities, the present arrangement is this — and I am making this very simple, because some don't understand community colleges. I know some of you know all about this. The legislature provides $205 for each student, just as they do a high school student. Then they have offered the last 4 or 5 years to match moneys for building, but they haven't had the money to match it. They have wanted to, but they just haven't been able to raise it. Now, these junior colleges will have to build laboratories, classrooms, libraries, if they are going to take care of these young people; or the 4 year schools will have to do so, building more study space and dormitories.

So in our hearings — and we had a great many people speak to us; it got to be a little joke in the committee — I asked each one: do you think we need a separate board for junior colleges? And every person who spoke to us said, yes, we do. I didn't think of it with our first witness, Mr. Bartlett, but the following day — this was our first witness in October — the following day an assistant superintendent spoke to us and I thought of asking him. He said, yes, we did. Then, as we had other presidents and other people speak to us, I asked them the same question.

Mr. Norris awhile ago quoted the John Dale Russell report. That was an investigation which was made by a special committee appointed by the legislature and they hired Dr. Russell, the outstanding authority on higher institutions, to make a study. He spent about 2 years here in Michigan. It came out in 1958. He felt that we should have many junior colleges, but they should not spring up here and there all over the state. There should be a separate board to notice the needs of where we should have these and to give advice on where they should be located.

I asked Mr. Elliott, a former superintendent of public instruction, who spoke to us. He said, yes, we needed a separate board. I asked most of the presidents of the different colleges and they, all of them, agreed: we needed more junior colleges but we need a board to decide, to help determine, where they should be, and how much money they should have.

Then our president of our junior college association — by the way, in the minority report this is rather misleading — we have had such an organization for over 30 years similar to the council of state presidents — and Mr. Wisser from Grand Rapids, the president, said we need it; all of the junior colleges agree. Right now we have 17. There are about 12 different places that want junior colleges. There are going to be 30 or 40 more, probably, in the next 10 years.

The state board of education is going to be an overall body for all of our educational institutions in the problems that will come up in the next year. We should have a special board to take care of this question of junior colleges.

It was practically unanimous — I don't believe there was anyone connected with higher education of whom I didn't ask the question. I remember one day I didn't ask, and Mr. Hanna, down at the other end of the table, leaned over and said, "If Miss Andrus doesn't ask this question, I will." Then I realized that they had come to think of me as Miss Junior College in that I had always asked that question; but I was trying to find out how these people felt about it.

In our subcommittee, of which Mr. Bonisteel is the chairman, Mr. Hanna, Mr. Anspach, Mr. Follo and myself were unanimous in making this recommendation to the committee. We were most surprised when we saw, later, in the journal this minority report. There was practically no discussion of this. We had recommended that the board be appointed, like the boards of the other institutions, by the governor. There was a motion to make the board appointed by the department of education. Now Mr. Bentley read this to you. It is to be a board of 8 members, elected for 8 years, just as all of the other boards are. It, however, is not a governing board.

We hope that it will be made up, not of members of junior colleges but of leading citizens who will have as their chief civic interest and responsibility the studying of this problem of deciding where junior colleges should be established and what their needs are, instead of having 35 or 40 of these colleges going to the legislature and trying to get funds or pestering the state board of education. This would be a body which could do that.

Now, in closing, I would like to say this. This is made up of 3 sentences. We tried very hard in our committee to shorten the constitution, and we have taken a great deal out and condensed it. These 3 sentences are very important for the future of the young people of this state to give them the opportunity for further education in preparation for the very uncertain times that are coming. I would like to call your attention to the fact that when we had the library report the attorneys insisted on putting in a sentence we thought was unnecessary on the city penal fines; the city ordinance people insisted. Now, those were 2 sentences. There will be 3 here.

Everyone connected with higher education is sure that we need this, and the majority of the committee hope that you will vote for this section.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair believes the time has now arrived to receive amendments to the balance of the proposal. The 4 signers of the minority report have filed their report as an amendment to the balance of this section.

Delegate Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: In view of the fact that we are entering on a new area of higher education, Mr. Chairman, an area that is, while not controversial insofar as the junior colleges themselves are concerned, is controversial with respect to this new board, and, in view of the lateness of the hour and other factors, I move that the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the motion of Chairman Bentley that the committee of the whole do now rise. All in favor signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

The ayes have it. The committee has risen.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will be in order. The Chair recognizes the delegate from Ionia, Mr. Powell.

MR. POWELL: Mr. President and ladies and gentlemen of the convention, the committee of the whole has, for the third time, made progress on a committee proposal dealing with education, and I will ask the secretary to make a detailed statement.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 98, A proposal pertaining to the educational institutions of the state; has considered several amendments thereto; and has come to no final resolution thereon. This completes the report of the committee of the whole, Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Are there any announcements?

SECRETARY CHASE: We have the following announcements of committee meetings:

The committee on style and drafting will meet tomorrow evening at 7:30. William B. Cudlip, chairman.

The committee on rules and resolutions will meet tomorrow immediately following the afternoon session. Richard Van Dusen, chairman.

The committee on emerging problems will meet Wednesday, February 21, at 12:30 p.m., in committee room I on the third floor. Frank Millard, chairman.

All delegates who can are requested to please remove their cars from the parking lot tonight, so that the parking lot can be cleared of snow during the night.

The apples today are from Mr. Rush. (applause)

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Any further announcements?

SECRETARY CHASE: That is all the announcements, Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: What is the pleasure of the convention? The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Macomb, Mr. Kelsey — Mr. Kelsey, will you yield? Mr. Richards of Marquette is recognized.

MR. L. W. RICHARDS: Mr. President, I realize every delegate here has a right to his own personal opinion, and one thing that has disturbed me a little is that during the action of the committee of the whole, a delegate referred to the "lousy" conditions of where we are meeting in our convention. I would like to take exception to that, as far as my own personal opinion, sir, due to the fact that I realize that the administrator of the city of Lansing has done a terrific job in giving us the facilities that we have; although I realize that sometimes the gallery is not quite adequate. Probably that is the biggest inconvenience, but, otherwise, I think they should be commended highly for the services and facilities they did provide for us. (applause)

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Macomb, Mr. Kelsey.

MR. KELSEY: Mr. President, I move we now adjourn.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the motion to adjourn. All those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails and the convention stands adjourned until tomorrow at 9:30 a.m.

[Whereupon, at 10:00 o'clock p.m., the convention adjourned until 9:30 o'clock a.m. Tuesday, February 20, 1962.]

EIGHTY-THIRD DAY

Tuesday, February 20, 1962, 9:30 o'clock a.m.

PROCEEDINGS

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will come to order.

The Chair will announce that arrangements are being made so that when the countdown is finished we are going to recess to watch it.

The invocation this morning will be delivered by the delegate from Wayne county, Mr. Sterrett.

MR. STERRETT: Let us pray. Father, we thank Thee for the many blessings that Thou hast bestowed upon us: our minds, our bodies, and, above all, our ability to have consideration for others. May we use these for our guidance.

Let us be reminded of the wonderful basic resources our forefathers discovered when settling our great state of Michigan and, also, be reminded of the fine, noble people who developed this land of ours. Give us strength, O Lord, to keep these thoughts in mind and to carry on in the upright manner as they have before us. Make alive within us the knowledge that is necessary for conscientious deliberation, so that we may do right for our brother and permit us to openly face our Keeper.

Above all, today, O Lord, let our prayers and thoughts be with an individual who is striving to make a greater land for all of us. Help us this day with Thy guidance. Amen.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The roll call will be taken by the secretary. All those present will vote aye. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and take the roll.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

Prior to today's session, the secretary received the following requests for leave:

Mr. J. B. Richards, indefinitely, due to illness and Mr. Cudlip's secretary phoned in this morning. He is ill with the flu and would like to be excused indefinitely.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, they will be excused because of illness indefinitely. The Chair hears no objection.

SECRETARY CHASE: The following delegates are absent with leave: Mrs. Butler, Mr. Cudlip, Miss Donnelly, Mr. John Hannah, Mr. Karn, Mr. Nisbet, Mr. Page, Mr. Pellow, Mr. J. B. Richards and Mr. Woolfenden.

Absent without leave: Mr. T. S. Brown.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, Mr. Brown will be excused from today's session. The Chair hears no objection and he is excused.

[During the proceedings, the following delegates entered the chamber and took their seats: Mr. T. S. Brown, Mrs. Butler and Miss Donnelly.]

The Chair recognizes the delegate from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I am advised that the countdown currently is proceeding, that there are about 7 minutes remaining, and I move that we recess subject to the call of the Chair.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Van Dusen moves that the convention recess subject to call of the Chair. All those in favor say aye. Opposed say no.

The motion prevails and the convention stands in recess subject to call of the Chair.

[Whereupon, at 9:40 o'clock a.m., the convention recessed; and, at 10:05 o'clock a.m., reconvened.]

The convention will come to order.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Gratiot, Mr. Hoxie.

MR. HOXIE: Mr. President and fellow delegates, we have just witnessed an historical event in the annals of American history, and I would like at this time to move that we stand in silent prayer for the success of this flight and the safe return of Colonel John Glenn.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the motion of the delegate. All those in favor of the motion will stand.

[The motion prevailed, all persons in the convention hall standing in silent prayer.]

The Chair recognizes the delegate from Wayne, Mr. Madar.

MR. MADAR: I am rising to a point of personal privilege.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Will the gentleman state the point?

MR. MADAR: There is an item in the newspaper this morning from the Detroit Free Press on page 20. It refers to one of the matters that came up yesterday, and it is in connection with the expenditure of $333,333. The item specifically says that: "A group of Democrats tried unsuccessfully to restrict the commission's operation to 1 month after the convention formally adjourns."

Now I was up at this mike yesterday. I believe that this information will get back to the people, as it should. I know it will get back down to my district, and I believe the people there know that just what I do—

MR. PLANK: Point of order, Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: State the point, Mr. Plank.

MR. PLANK: I fail to see where this has any direct bearing on Delegate Madar. I am wondering whether or not this is actually a point of personal privilege.

MR. MADAR: Mr. President—

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Does the article refer to the gentleman by name?

MR. MADAR: It does not refer to me by name. It refers to a "group of Democrats". I was up here and I spoke, and I do want the privilege of having my vote explained. I believe I have that right, Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair states that this is not a matter of personal privilege. You do have the right to explain your vote under the rules, but it is not a matter of personal privilege.

MR. MADAR: Therefore, Mr. President, I do wish to explain my vote.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The gentleman will be recognized for that purpose.

MR. MADAR: I voted. I do realize that there will be a copy of the proceedings of this convention issued after the convention adjourns which will be the verbatim journal, and I am certain that there will be a lot of people in this state who will read it so that they can see exactly what my reason was for this. My reason for having gotten up here yesterday was just one reason and only one: it was to fight this idea of featherbedding. I did not want to see the state of Michigan paying for something that they should not pay for.

I certainly was in favor of the expenditure of $129,040 to tell the people of the state of Michigan everything there was to know about this convention. Our chairman, Mr. White, explained to us at the time that there would be nothing in this printing of the book or pamphlet—whatever it was to be—that would be of a political nature, and I believe Mr. White was sincere when he made that statement, and I believe that this is exactly what it will be if Mr. White is the man who will oversee this job. I am sure we will get a good job done. I want that placed in the minutes. I hope that it might get into the journal now, so that the people would know—because I didn't want somebody impugning my character and the character of my friends, and I didn't want—as Jack Parr would say—some newspaper lying about what I am thinking about or what I am trying to do.

Frankly, I don't think that the heading of this item was done by James Robinson; it was done by someone else on the staff, because I don't think Jim would stoop so low. But I have watched the changing of stories or, that is, I have watched them say things that were absolutely wrong.

I can understand why people were making remarks several months ago and still continue to do so. As to how long it will last—I saw the ad on the back page of the newspaper when they said the newspaper was not for sale—

MR. HIGGS: Point of order, Mr. President!

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Higgs will state the point.

MR. HIGGS: I wonder what this has to do with the explanation of Delegate Madar's vote, and I wonder how much this is costing the people of Michigan.

MR. MADAR: Mr. President, because it hurts the ears—

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair is being very lenient with the gentleman —

MR. MADAR: I will let the rest of it go.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair would like to invite the attention of the delegates to rule 65, the last 2 sentences of which read:

> Any delegate is privileged to explain in writing his vote on record roll call votes. The written explanation shall be included in the journal if presented to the secretary before the next session of the convention.

Henceforward, the Chair will attempt to enforce that rule in that way. The explanation of votes will be done in writing presented to the secretary. It will not be made orally on the floor.

Reports of standing committees.

SECRETARY CHASE: No committee reports, Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Communications from state officers.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Second reading of proposals. The delegate from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move that the order of second reading be suspended for the balance of the week.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Van Dusen moves that the order of second reading of proposals be suspended for the balance of this week. All those in favor will say aye. Those opposed?

The motion prevails and it is so ordered.

Motions and resolutions.

SECRETARY CHASE: Messrs. Leibrand and Perras offer Resolution 76, A resolution pertaining to the rules to be followed on the order of second reading of committee proposals, as amended.

Following is Resolution 76 as offered:

Whereas, The standing rules of this convention are silent as to the time and order in the course of this convention when the order of second reading of committee proposals, as amended, will take place; and

Whereas, Unlike the situation that prevails in ordinary legislative chambers where measures coming before the legislative body are largely unrelated, most of the articles and sections that will come before the convention on the order of second reading of proposals are in one way or another interrelated; and

Whereas, Many delegates believe that they cannot intelligently consider and vote upon isolated articles, sections and amendments thereto proposed without then having before them all of the substantive proposals as approved by the committee of the whole and passed; and

Whereas, There has been discussion in the convention regarding limitation of debate and possible limitation of amendment upon second and subsequent readings; now therefore be it

Resolved, That this body instruct its committee on rules and resolutions to consider and report back to the convention a set of rules to govern all procedures upon the order of second reading of proposals and that the committee give special consideration to a rule that will defer the order of second reading of proposals until such time as all substantive proposals have passed first reading and the proposed constitution has been printed as a whole.

SECRETARY CHASE: That is the only resolution on file.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Unfinished business.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Special orders of the day.

SECRETARY CHASE: No special orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: General orders of the day. The delegate from Ionia, Mr. Powell.

MR. POWELL: Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen of the convention, I move that we resolve ourselves into committee of the whole for consideration of proposals on the order of general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the motion of Mr. Powell. Those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails and the committee will convene and Mr. Powell will preside.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The committee will be in order. Beginning last Friday and continuing through the 2 sessions yesterday, we have had under consideration Committee Proposal 98, A proposal pertaining to the educational institutions of the state. We have now passed sections a, b and c and the first sentence on section d, if the Chair recalls correctly. We have an amendment, the minority report.

For last previous action by the committee of the whole on Committee Proposal 98, see above, page 1170.

Delegate Faxon, do you wish recognition?

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, with your permission I would like to yield to the other members, those who signed the minority report, and then to comment afterward. This is with regard to junior colleges, in case some of you have forgotten yesterday's proceedings at the last.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield—I do not believe that the amendment has been read yet.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Will the secretary read the content of the minority report?

SECRETARY CHASE: Pursuant to the minority report of Messrs. Faxon, T. S. Brown, Kuhn and Mrs. Conklin,

Mr. Faxon offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 3, line 2, after "boards.", by striking out the balance of the section.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: In other words, we have retained the first sentence which carries over onto page 3 a line and one word, and the balance of that printed material on page 3 is what the minority report amendment proposes to delete. Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: The delegates will find the complete report in the journal on page 529, as to the detailed reasons regarding our minority report here. At this time I would like to yield to Delegate Conklin for additional remarks.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair will recognize the lady from Wayne, Delegate Conklin.

MRS. CONKLIN: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, because, as Jack Faxon pointed out, our full statement is carried in the journal and because prior to this time I have spoken to many of you individually, I would like to be brief. In the first place, before I start, I would like to point out very emphatically that I am not opposed to community colleges and I don't want it construed in that manner. This past summer while I was campaigning for my own office, I carried literature door to door in my own community, which has just voted to have a community college.

I think one of the problems that we have here is that we are talking about this proposal before we are taking up our Committee Proposal 47, which covers the state board of education. If you would take a look at it, maybe, while I am talking, I will point out that it is our recommendation that the state board of education be increased from 4 members to 8 members, and we have taken away from them, from this board, the responsibility of supervising the other 7 state supported schools by the section which we have just passed. Prior to this time, they have had supervision of the central, eastern, western, and northern colleges. With the doubling of the size of the board and the reducing of their work load, I see no reason why we should allow the legislature to set up another board for the sole purpose of handling one phase of the educational picture.

It is my sincere belief that in the matter of education, as well as all other aspects of government, there should be one defined area of responsibility. In this instance it is going to be with the state board of education. The board itself can assign part of its own membership to study the area of community colleges if it so desires. We have provided in Committee Proposal 47, if it is passed, that the state board shall have overall supervision of all education in the state. So I believe that we should not start diluting that responsibility by taking away certain areas of this responsibility.

I might point out that in the journal on page 477, the majority report, I think, gives us one of the best arguments for the minority report. It says:

> Of course, the committee realizes that the state board of education has power and authority to appoint advisory groups when needed. It is expected that the board will appoint committees of outstanding citizens from time to time which would advise it in planning and coordinating any of the areas of education.

I think this is a substantial argument for the minority point of view. We have increased the board. We have taken away some of their responsibilities that they have had heretofore. Rather than see another board set up in the constitution, I urge the adoption of the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Faxon, to whom do you yield now?

MR. FAXON: I would like, at this time, to yield to Delegate Kuhn.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Kuhn, the gentleman from Oakland.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, Delegate Conklin has given you our main reason as to why we are opposed to this board being established by constitution. We are sure that the legislature, if they feel that this board is needed, have the power to establish this board. We do not believe that it is necessary to put in the constitution a board whose only function, really, would be to advise another board.

In other words, we do have several boards that we are going to establish in our constitution, but they have supervision of those schools and universities. This board would have no supervision whatsoever. It says their powers would be: ". . . advise the state board of education concerning general supervision. . . ." So, to us, this is rather a silly thing to do to give constitutional status to a board which will merely advise another board. This is strictly a legislative matter.

Another point to be remembered is that I thought our committee on education took a long step forward by making the state board of education responsible for all the education in the state of Michigan from kindergarten all the way through our higher education. It is going to be their function to advise the legislature on the amount of money these different levels of education need. Therefore, we are opposed to creating a new board merely to advise this board, without giving this new state board of education which we are creating in this constitution a chance to operate.

As Delegate Conklin pointed out, this new state board of education, which we are increasing from 4 to 8 members, if they saw fit could appoint 3 or 4 of their members to look over the junior colleges' problems. It has also been pointed out earlier that the junior colleges have a voluntary group like our state council of college presidents. It is a voluntary group which could advise the state board of education. The main argument that we have against this board is that it is strictly a board to advise, and we don't think it should have constitutional status.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Faxon, are you retaining the floor?

MR. FAXON: Yes. I would like to just briefly after these comments explain to the other delegates exactly what occurred in our committee with regard to this particular question. As stated in the minority report, the language which is now being submitted as the minority report was originally passed by the committee as the majority report. Then, on the following week, which was the last week for committee proposals, this language was then inserted with regard to this state board, again, by a very close vote of 11 votes, then, to reconsider it. So that what we are facing here, looking at, in part, in the minority report, is the language that our chairman, Mr. Bentley, had written at the time that this was considered the majority report, and this was included in our statement as to the function of the state board of education and as to the place the junior colleges would take within it.

I think all of us here are agreed as to the need for junior colleges and the need for their being supported throughout the state, and there isn't anyone here who would deny this. I am certain that we are all cognizant of our responsibilities with regard to education. The question that is before us is whether the language which we are asking you to delete accomplishes this purpose for junior colleges; and I would ask you to look closely at this language that we are asking you to delete, to see whether or not this does accomplish some of the things which they feel that it should.

I would first of all call to your attention that the establishment of an advisory board in the constitution, that is, a board to advise a board, is unprecedented in Michigan constitutional history and equally unprecedented in the constitutions of other states. Advisory boards have always been created, but they are not created by constitutional fiat.

Then I would like to call your attention to a statement that I have here with regard to the operations of the state board of education and ask whether or not this doesn't comply with what most of us consider its proper functions. This is a statement that was given to me following the action of the committee in approving the establishment of this separate state board for junior colleges. The statement was given to me by Dr. Ferris Crawford, who was an assistant superintendent with the department of public instruction in charge of junior colleges. I am going to read his exact words to you, so that you can judge for yourself as to his meaning here.

> The state board of education has by precedent established its authority and responsibility for appointing advisory committees and commissions. Examples of such appointments have been the teacher education advisory commission, an ongoing commission which has been in effect since 1948, an advisory commission constituting some 25 representatives of various institutions and organizations which was originated in 1948. Another example is the teachers' certification code revision committee, which has been in operation since 1951. Other examples include innumerable commissions and committees appointed to deal with the responsibility of the state board of education to approve the incorporation of private colleges in the state.

There is considerable evidence to substantiate the fact that the department of public instruction over the years has provided more than adequate service to the entire field of community college establishment, operation and healthy development. The department, through the statutory provisions setting forth the responsibility of the superintendent of public instruction, is very adequately authorized by the legislature to provide all of the services that are needed for the future development of community colleges. There is not a thread of evidence to support the contention that a separate board could provide better or more efficient coordination and service than now being provided by the superintendent of public instruction and staff. Evidence in the files of the superintendent of public instruction indicates that a great proportion of the time of the staff members of the superintendent of public instruction was devoted to community college affairs.

Now, this is his concluding paragraph:

The new language of the proposal adopted by the education committee regarding the responsibility and role of the state board of education should provide substantial authorization as well as adequate financial support from the legislature to furnish all and more of the service as itemized for the state board for public community and junior colleges in section d.

This is the statement that Dr. Crawford gave to me following the action of our committee.

It is not a question that we are not interested in doing the best for junior colleges. The question is, is this a constitutional remedy? The need for money may be necessary, but it isn't something we can write into the constitution. Are we doing the best for junior colleges when we make them apart from the regular operations and functions of the total educational operation as envisioned in the proposed state board of education?

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I would be willing to yield for any questions that the delegates may have with regard to this or any other subject having to do with junior colleges.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The lady from Grand Rapids, Delegate Judd, was seeking recognition. The Chair does not know whether it was for a question or a statement. Are there any questions while Delegate Faxon retains the floor?

MR. FAXON: Well, just in closing, then, I would call your attention to the statement that we have all adopted yesterday, which I think should be a good sign to us all, that the legislature shall provide by law for the establishment and financial support of public community and junior colleges which shall be operated by locally elected boards. This gives them constitutional recognition which is what many of them wanted, and it puts us in a very good state with regard to the other states in the union in recognizing junior colleges, and I would urge you all to support the sentence which we have just adopted yesterday and to go along with the deletion of the balance as being unnecessary to the main subject at hand.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Judd.

MRS. JUDD: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I was a member of the very first class of the very first junior college in the state of Michigan in Grand Rapids, and so, of course, this makes me an authority on junior colleges. (laughter) I may not know as much about them as Delegate Faxon but at least I have a somewhat longer perspective on the situation—and this time may seem awfully long to Delegate Faxon but it doesn't seem very long to me.

I was unable to determine just why he feels so eager to get the junior college board out of the constitution, except to realize that this is probably part and parcel of his original proposal on an earlier section, which would eliminate all of the university boards from the constitution, and this particular junior college board is sort of the tail of his general proposal. Having lost the dog, he is now trying to save the tail. (laughter) It seems to me that the need for a board, a separate board, for the junior college rests not alone on the very great expansion both in number of colleges and number of students but, also, on the increasing amount of funds that the state is having to appropriate therefor, and that the taxpayers of the state do need this kind of protection as to the proper use of their money in relation to the junior colleges.

I think that it is important to refer back to Miss Andrus' talk of last evening to realize that although the junior college movement is now nearly 50 years old, it nevertheless is plainly an emerging function in our whole system of higher education. We need not belabor the point of the need for technological training after what we saw on the TV this morning; but the junior colleges are the one place, it seems to me, where the opportunity for technological training so needed in our present economy could grow and expand. There is, however, something that they have to overcome in achieving this. We go back to the old concept of the trade schools or vocational high schools where we used to send the youngsters who just could not make the high school training.

This is not the concept of the future use of the junior college. The junior college would be a place where a student who has graduated from high school and who has real aptitude in a technological direction could get the training that would fulfil our increasing needs in this field.

This, of course, does not eliminate its other purposes: enabling a student who is qualified for 4 year college training but cannot afford the full 4 years away from home to get his first 2 years at less expense; for the student who is not qualified for a 4 year liberal arts education but who can profit by 2 more years of extension of his secondary education; for the student of a relatively high IQ who just has not matured through the high school years and who can, through 2 more years of college, finally pull himself up by his bootstraps and get his ultimate 4 years of education.

Now these are problems that are a part and parcel of our whole picture of higher education. But with the possibility of 30 or 40 junior colleges coming along, this is too big a burden to put on this board of education which the coming proposal establishes. We have purposely—I presume the committee has—relieved the board of education of governing 4 state universities so that it could concentrate on the planning and coordination of the whole pattern of higher education.

Now if we burden it with this problem of a large number of junior colleges each of which has its own local problems, we are just simply wiping out the advantage gained by setting up separate university boards. I think that the planning and coordination of the junior colleges should originally be done by a separate state board whose work then can be forwarded in to the board of education. It would not be an isolated board, because the proposal is that it be appointed by the board of education so that its work would be coordinated with the planning and coordinating of the overall picture; but I think that we must preserve the time of the board of education for the whole picture without making it specialized in any particular field.

I, therefore, support the committee proposal.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Escanaba, Delegate Follo.

MR. FOLLO: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I have a lot of respect for, and I even like the 4 members who have brought up this amendment. I think, however, they are mistaken.

It is nice to have a nice, neat constitution, one that conforms in all ways to the model, but sometimes we have to recognize realities. These realities are that we are going to have, as Mrs. Judd said, perhaps, as the experts tell us, as many as 30 or 40 junior colleges in the state of Michigan in the next 10 to 20 years. This is a tremendous burden, and even though we have enlarged the state board of education to 8 members this still would be too much for them to handle in addition to all of the other things that they are being called on to handle.

I would like to point out to you that the members of the subcommittee on higher education, which included Dr. Anspach, Mr. Bonisteel and Dr. Hannah, all endorsed the separate board for junior colleges. I would like to point out that these men have dealt with the department of public instruction. They know how it works. They know the need for this board. Those of us who have worked with the state board of education realize that this thing should be done. It is a special case, and we certainly hope that this amendment will not prevail.

There is a need in certain areas of the state for the growth of junior colleges. I am thinking of my own part of the state, the northern part of this state, and I know there are many other communities where students who come from lower income families do not have the opportunity to attend college as well as those from upper income families. For this reason and because we are going to see a great growth in junior colleges in this state—and it is going to become a very important adjunct in education—I would urge you to vote against this amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegates, you might be interested to know that the Chair has 10, now 11 folks on the waiting list, I believe. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Petoskey, Delegate Spitler.

MR. SPITLER: Mr. Chairman and delegates, with that report you have just made, it behooves me to be very brief. I want to say that I would oppose the minority report amendment and ask you to vote in favor of the majority report. I feel that the majority report would be more economical. It would expedite things. It would save money for the state of Michigan. If there is to be a staff set up in the department of public instruction, with personnel to do all of this work, it is going to be costly. Here is your opportunity to set up a board, an impartial board, not made up of members from the boards of control of these various community colleges, not made up of administrators from these various community colleges, but an impartial board of 8 members who can weigh their needs, their problems and their requests, and recommend to the state board of education what they feel should be done for all of these community colleges.

Visualize, if you can, what has been stated already. There are 35,000 enrollments in our present community colleges, as many as there are in all of our colleges and universities with the exception of the big 3. We are told in the next few years that that may double, to 70,000. Here we have—with the present board of education having to take care of all the details that they have to take care of: teacher certification, reorganization, annexation and all of the other matters—and we have 30 or 40 community colleges each coming to them and bargaining with them and with the legislature as to what each one should receive. They are going to be bogged down in the work that they will try to do.

I think that the community colleges have been very fair in saying that there shall be an impartial board of 8 set up here, who shall consider their needs, the 17 present community colleges which, as we say, may grow to 30 or 40, and will view those impartially and make recommendations to the state board of education and to the legislature as to their needs.

The Russell report has been referred to here again and again, and the Russell report makes it very emphatic that, in the matter of the community colleges, it is not an enlargement of the elementary and secondary schools over which the state board of education has control. It is not a bringing down of the higher education. It is a separate institution and it needs separate consideration. I think that here is an opportunity to set up a board that could consider these things and channel the requests from these 30 or 40 different community colleges which we may have and save time and save money for the taxpayers of the state.

I would recommend the support of the majority report.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Traverse City, Delegate Rajkovich.

MR. RAJKOVICH: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, a good share of my speech has already been given by the 2 or 3 previous speakers, but there are a few things that I would just like to call your attention to here that were brought up today.

I am very happy to hear that nobody is against community colleges. Even in the minority report, people think that the community colleges are excellent, they are fine, they ought to be continued, and I wholeheartedly agree with them that this must be done. However, if we are to provide for orderly growth among these community colleges, we have to have some responsible body to see to it that they grow according to a pattern. If we are going to allow these schools to grow helter skelter, grow up like Topsy, I am afraid we are going to have exactly that type of an organization.

Now, it was pointed out or brought out by the minority report that there are no states that have such a provision. I might add that there are 2 states to my knowledge at present that do have such provisions. I think Mississippi is one of them and Florida is the other. I also might add that in those 2 states, since 1928, that any community college that was established under this system, that all of those community colleges are still in existence and are prospering to this day. This is exactly what we would like to do in the state of Michigan. Furthermore, it has been pointed out that the state board of education will handle all of these things for us in excellent manner. I want to call to your attention another fact in this case. The state board of education we are setting up or we probably will set up—I hope we do—is not a full time body. This state board of education is going to meet maybe once or twice a month. This state board of education is going to oversee and supervise all elementary and secondary education, all higher education, examine the budgets of all the higher institutions. I am quite certain that this body is going to be very, very busy, so that it will be in no position to devote all this essential time that is necessary to all of these community colleges.

Now, the question is: what can this board do? I have jotted down a few things that we think this board will do. This board should assume general supervision of community colleges, and we felt that the constitution should not be too specific; because some of these things are going to change from time to time, and these 17 present community colleges are as different as they could be because they serve different areas and different types of people. This has already been explained to you by Miss Andrus and by previous speakers. We also suggest that this board should submit an annual report which would be a sort of a guide for financial assistance and help. Also, we have quoted Russell's study a number of times in this convention and, to quote him again in this case—because the state legislature spent a lot of money in 1958 to get this report done—and here is what he had to say in 1958:

> At present there is no central state agency to which responsibility is assigned for continuing supervision and control of community colleges in Michigan. General responsibility is lodged with the state superintendent of public instruction for the initial approval of the establishment of a community college, but he and his staff have not been assigned responsibility for continuing supervision of these institutions. As a matter of general principle, it would seem wise for the state to lodge the authority over the comunity college system in a board.

Furthermore, we believe and believe very strongly in the community colleges; that the constitutional authority for separate control of community colleges will give community colleges recognition and status which is not available at present.

Community colleges are not thirteenth and fourteenth grades. Many believe that they are, but they are not; although at times we do render that service. If there are some youngsters who need help, we are very happy to give them that assistance, because we do render service—the first 2 years of a 4 year curriculum. We do render service in terminal programs. We do give adults training programs, and we do assist the community in general. Now, those are some of the things in general that we have in mind.

"What would the board do?" the question has been asked; the point has been raised that "they have nothing to do." Well, actually what we think the board could do, and one of the first things, is to develop a statewide plan for the centers where community colleges should be developed. Everybody would like to have one. Second, we would like to have them provide counsel on problems of establishing and operating new community colleges. Third, we would like to have them approve establishment of new community colleges.

On what basis? Actually, what we would like to have them consider—and this is what is always necessary to establish a successful community college—first, we need an honest state plan for further education of all of youth and adults in our communities. That is the first thing to be considered. Second, we have got to have districts that are large enough to support a community college as far as the students are concerned.

We have to have the will of the people in this particular area; that they want a community college. Now, if you ask the local people, I am sure that they all know what they want; but we want an impartial body to inspect this. Further, we would like to have inspection by this state board, so that it will give us an idea of whether or not we are maintaining an adequate program. Again, we would like to ask them to supply the legislature or this new board of education with our financial needs. We would like to have them do something else that was not mentioned, which I think is very important, and that is to help coordinate the community college activities with other state supported, degree granting institutions, so that each one of those 17—or maybe 40 in the next 15 years—does not have to go around to all these 4 year schools and get an idea of what this is all about or what the transfer provisions shall be.

With these things in mind, I urge all of you to vote down the minority report amendment and to support the committee report for a separate board. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the lady from Detroit, Delegate Hart.

MISS HART: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I think almost everything has been said that can be of value except for one or two things. I am glad that we have been reminded that the state board of education is a voluntary board. These people are people who have given tremendous service. They have been so effective—our state board has been so effective in the state of Michigan, that the legislature has seen fit to add to their duties. If our president, Stephen Nisbet, were here, he would verify what I have had to say. This has probably been the most overworked board in the state of Michigan.

I think anyone who has ever watched a board or watched a school or college attempting to get the undivided attention of a board of education would realize the feeling of frustration that the junior colleges must have. They have divided boards for the most part at home. They have school boards that are concerned with elementary and secondary education as well, plus the problems of the junior colleges. I remember in the city of Detroit where the Detroit board of education used to have the responsibility not only for elementary and secondary education in Detroit, but they also had to worry about Wayne State University, and anyone who ever sat through those meetings week after week realizes the impossibility of adequate attention to higher education under those circumstances.

Now, it seems to me that these colleges feel very deeply the need for coordination. They have had a voluntary board and this has not been adequate for their purposes. They have asked the legislature, and the legislature has not seemed to understand the necessity. It seems to me that we are writing a constitution not as a model to edify the United States or Europe or the world. We are writing a working document to meet the needs of the people in Michigan today, tomorrow, and 25 years from now, and I sincerely hope that this committee will vote down the minority report amendment and vote for the report of the education committee.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Sterrett.

MR. STERRETT: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I, like Mrs. Judd, attended a junior college. I am somewhat familiar with their operations and problems. When I came to Lansing as a delegate, one of the prime interests I had in mind was to be sure that community junior college program would be written into the Constitution of the state of Michigan. I am very happy that we are doing this.

However, with due respect to all my friends who are educators here in this convention, I would like to support the minority report amendment. It has been pointed out that we have doubled the size of the state board of education. People have said that we will see 30 or 40 new junior colleges within the next 10 years, but nobody—not one person yet—has definitely stated that the increased state board of education can not handle this situation now.

I would also like to point out to you that in this section of the article on education the state board of education is given the opportunity to appoint a board for junior colleges if it is seen necessary. I personally do not want some deadwood in this until we absolutely need something—and then it would no longer be deadwood.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair is advised that our Astronaut Glenn has just had lunch.

The Chair will recognize the delegate from Detroit, Mr. Barthwell.

MR. BARTHWELL: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, my speech has really been made by many of the delegates; so I think it is now time for me to make one, after sitting here and observing and listening to the orations which I consider have been the most effective speeches I have heard made in this convention: that is that I am against the minority report amendment and favor and ask for the support of the committee.

I am not sure that I am one of those delegates that makes this kind of speech and makes it stick, but I would like to make that speech.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Bay City, Delegate Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I don't think that each of us who speaks needs actually to apologize for his position or to say whether he is friendly or unfriendly to education, but perhaps I should since I have some searching questions here. I have served with a committee which successfully developed a junior college, and I am certainly not unfriendly to junior colleges, and I have gone out and helped to promote this college and to raise the necessary millage for its development.

In examining this committee proposal, the question occurs to me and was highlighted just a moment ago, the question of meeting the need. Now, I wonder whether this proposal will meet the need. The committee proposal sets up an advisory board. We are freezing into the constitution a particular method of advising the state board. How do we know now, how can we anticipate right today whether this particular method will meet the need?

I am impressed by the fact that this is merely an advisory board. It has no power beyond furnishing facts to the state board. We have heard about the need for a statewide plan for development of community colleges. This board cannot do that except through the state board. We have heard about the need for approving the establishment of new community colleges. This board cannot do that, because it doesn't have the power to do that. It merely can advise the state board. We hear about the need for inspection of these community colleges by some board. This board may be able to make the inspection, but it cannot do anything about it except advise the state board. We hear about the need for coordination of programs with other 4 year institutions. This board cannot do that either. This must be done by the state board. Now, I wonder just what the power of the state board will be with regard to the advice that it gets.

I am impressed and I do not take lightly the recommendations that we hear with regard to the need; I only want to ask you whether or not we are meeting the need by freezing into the constitution an advisory board to another board. I am impressed by that argument.

The real question that I would like to have answered is whether or not the power to establish this board is not now with the legislature or would not be with the legislature under the committee proposal. Isn't this particular problem a problem which should be left flexible enough for the legislature itself or the state board itself to determine the kind of advice that may be needed?

I don't think any of us here are opposed to the development of community colleges. I am impressed by the need—I am sure we all are—but are we making a wise step by attempting here to freeze into the constitution this particular method of meeting the need?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Traverse City, Delegate Sleder.

MR. SLEDER: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I should like to speak in opposition to the minority report amendment and in favor of the majority report. I feel, like some of the other speakers, somewhat qualified as an authority on community colleges. I served as vice president on the board of trustees of Northwestern Michigan College and served on the board since it originated 10 years ago. I have watched a community organize a college in an area that was in desperate need of some higher education.

When we first started talking about some type of education in northwestern Michigan, in Grand Traverse county alone 20 per cent of the high school graduates were going on to college. As of today, after this school has been in existence just 10 years, now we have 52 per cent of the high school graduates going on to higher education. And we can compare that as of 10 years ago when in Ingham county, here, close to 90 per cent of the high school graduates were going on to college.

There are certainly areas in this state that do need some form of higher education, and I think it has been found in the community and in the junior colleges, and I think it has been brought out here on the floor in testimony and by the minority report that states:

> However, the committee realized the growing importance of these institutions in the field of higher education. There are now 17 community colleges in Michigan and it is anticipated that this number will expand to 30 or 40 within the next several years. At that time their enrollment may well exceed that of the total number of all state educational institutions who have constitutional status.

I think right there, when we are going to have more students in community and junior colleges in the field of higher education than in any other school that has constitutional status, it is necessary that they be recognized in the constitution.

In my experience with the development of a community college, we found that it was difficult for us to get a connection with the state legislature and with the state government through the board of education, which is necessarily and principally interested in primary schools. A community or junior college is no longer a primary school but is a school of higher education and must be recognized as such. In this constitution we must recognize them as such, and they are in desperate need of a board to help supervise, help the growth—this tremendous growth—that has been pointed out. It is necessary that they have guidance and counsel and that it be orderly growth.

For these reasons, I definitely urge everyone to defeat the minority report amendment and support the report of the committee.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Grand Rapids, Delegate DeVries.

MR. DeVRIES: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, if this board might result in a better coordination of the junior community colleges, it also might result in saving some money. It might raise and coordinate teaching standards among these colleges. It might result in better planning for the J.C.'s and community colleges, and if it does these things it is good enough for me.

I urge you to vote no on the amendment and support the committee report.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I wish to add my voice to those who have urged the support of the committee report and opposition to the minority report amendment. I believe that what the committee here has done is try to establish a realistic bridge between the junior colleges that have literally sprung up around the state, and the rest of our educational system. I think they have stood a very splendid middle ground between having the junior colleges completely separate or making them completely adjuncts to the other parts of the educational system. I think that this looks forward in a very realistic manner. And Delegate Follo, I believe, made a very good statement in saying that we need a constitutional status that gives dignity to these agencies and is not just a cold blooded document.

I urge support of the committee report. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mt. Pleasant, Dr. Anspach.

MR. ANSPACH: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, you know if I could read my notes it would be all right. This youngster handed in a paper to the professor, and when he got it back there was a notation in the margin. He could not read it. So he said to the professor, "What does that say?" And the professor said, "That says that you should improve your penmanship." (laughter)

Well, now, we all agree that there is a need. We agree that from the standpoint of size, number of students and number of institutions we already have and that we are going to have in the future, we all agree that it is necessary to have some sort of planning. We all agree there needs to be some sort of control. Now, we do not agree as to how this is to be furnished, but we do agree that there needs to be some board or governmental agency that will be responsible for the supervision, the planning, the overseeing of these institutions.

It has been suggested that this planning and overall supervision might go to the state board of education. It has been said that we would enlarge the state board of education, if it passes, or that we have taken away from the state board the administration of 4 state supported institutions. I remind you that this is true.

On the other hand, we are now making this board responsible, if the next proposal passes dealing with the state board of education, to have complete supervision and control in an advisory capacity, which, of course, is very definite control of all the institutions of the state. You have taken away 4 and you have added 10, plus some 25—some 17 or some 25 or 30 or 40—junior colleges. The state board of education is very busy. It has the responsibility for the supervision of public education, primary and higher education. It is responsible for certification, responsible for planning, for elementary and secondary education. It is responsible for all of your problems of annexation. It is responsible for the hearings on the revoking of certificates. So it has a great deal of responsibility now in addition to this. We have given them the responsibility for advising, coordinating, supervising all levels of education in the state. It is going to be a very busy board.

The board that is being proposed is a permanent body; it is not just a temporary commission. It will gather together for the purpose of survey or study, be a responsible or continuing body with 8 year terms, 8 members, as proposed, if it passes. Therefore, it will be responsible for one segment of education. It is not taking away; this is adding to the state board of education. Just take the matter of budgets alone. If a state board of education must gather 27, 35 or 40 budgets and have hearings on all of those, this is a great responsibility. This board will assume that responsibility and, in turn, will advise the state board from the standpoint of the amount of money necessary for this particular activity in the field of education. So, therefore, it is permanent, made up of individuals who will give time and effort, and will exert interested effort.

The last is a matter of support. This matter of the board, the board for junior colleges, has the support of most all the authorities in the field. Reference has been made to the Russell report. Dr. Russell says it is required and advises this. Dr. Flood agrees, and Dr. Flood at Michigan State University perhaps is one of the outstanding authorities in the world in that particular area. He says that a board is necessary in this particular area. Then as far as professional educational organizations are concerned, the NEA, the school superintendents, council of presidents of colleges and universities, all endorse this type of proposal that there must be a separate board.

Now I have just been informed a moment ago that at least one committee, the committee on education or members of it—I want to modify it, because I cannot speak definitely; all I can say is I understand. Years ago a professor said to me, if you want to quote, don't quote a man; say "I understood him to say"; then you are one safe ground—so I am not saying this is definitely so, but I understand that the education committee of the house is in favor of a separate board. This is also true in the senate. Last year a bill was introduced to create such a board, but it did not get through the legislature. I, therefore, ask for the support of the majority report and for the defeat of the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Muskegon, Delegate Seyferth.

MR. SEYFERTH: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, it seems like this committee is loaded on the side of education. I have been in this spot once or twice before.

I wish to rise in support of the minority report amendment. It seems to me that, first of all, our community college projects as we know them today are locally oriented institutions. They are supported locally, the same as our primary and secondary school systems.

I don't think it is the intent of the education committee by the imposing of this section d in its full extent that they are intending to change the financial support arrangement of community colleges. However, I am a little suspicious when they talk so loudly in support of the separate board to control junior colleges. In effect, I am wondering if this is now to become a large complex at state level where junior colleges as such will be taken out of the community level and control and placed pretty much on the same level as higher education. If this is to be done and if this is the plan, then, of course, the board as proposed certainly fits into the picture.

However, we have been talking now for a day or two on organizing and reshuffling of the boards for the various schools on the higher education level. These are existing institutions, and these boards or reshuffling of boards and additional responsibilities seemingly are very necessary. But here, now, we are talking about establishing a board for something that is not literally in existence yet, only in a skeleton form. We have 17 to 19 junior colleges. We are talking about 30 to 40 colleges in a matter of 10, 20 or 30 years—junior colleges. If this happens, the school budget for the state of Michigan is going to be much more than 50 per cent of the total revenues. I cannot anticipate, at least I cannot visualize at this point, that that is going to happen as rapidly as we think it is.

Now if this does happen that junior colleges do come into existence on the basis of 30 to 40 in the next 30 years, additional 30 or 40, I am wondering if we do not have in section d, in the first sentence—

> The legislature shall provide by law for the establishment and financial support of public community and junior colleges, which shall be operated by locally elected boards

—do we not have in that sentence the authority for the legislature to then appoint by law or set up by law a board of control or a board of regents, as such, for the junior college operation?

I support the minority report amendment that we are not ready for the board for junior colleges yet. Later on we will be.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the lady from Livonia, Delegate Conklin.

MRS. CONKLIN: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I believe with the emptying of the room that I think most delegates have made up their minds.

I would like to read something which I wasn't going to go on into, but in the journal in talking about our new state board as we saw it in committee, I would like to quote from our report:

> The new state board is a symbol of partnership between the people and the state. As representative of the people, it embraces popular control, discourages use of education as a partisan tool, provides continuity of statewide policies and programs, is a barrier to special interest group influence on the schools, and helps unify educational forces throughout the state.
> It is considered the unifying and coordinating force for education within the state. The committee recommends that the board shall receive information from all of the various levels of public education—elementary, secondary, higher and other public institutions providing instructional programs.
> Such information shall be used in order that the state board of education may adequately consider and advise local school boards, governing boards of colleges and universities, the legislature and the people as to the total needs of education in this state and make recommendations concerning their solution.

Then the statement goes on.

I think, as I see it, we are faced with 2 decisions: whether you want to place—and I would say at this time that I would rather see, which sounds like a ridiculous statement, but I would rather see the state board of education increased to 16 or 20 members, if we feel that this isn't enough to adequately handle the problem before us, than I would to start splintering off the responsibility which we are trying to place in one area for the first time in the history of the state of Michigan, as far as education is concerned.

I think we are now faced, when it all boils down, between what the majority says and what the minority report says, with: do we want to put the responsibility on the state board of education or, before we even pass the proposal, do we want to start splintering it off with special interest groups?

I urge the adoption of the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Bloomfield Hills, Delegate Romney.

MR. ROMNEY: There have been several questions raised here that I think deserve comment. One, with respect to Mr. Seyferth's question. This certainly does not affect the local control of community colleges. It leaves the operational control and the financing of the community colleges exactly where it has been in the past. Certainly, it is true that the power exists in the new board of education to create a committee or an advisory board of this character, and I recognize that fact and certainly I am quite conscious of the new functions of the state board of education because I was chairman of the committee that had to deal with that problem.

When we come to the new functions of the board of education, you will find that they have been vastly enlarged and, consequently, this creates a situation that I think merits the type of attention we are giving to this particular problem. Now, this new state board is going to be the focal point of recommendations by the organized colleges and universities. After all, each university and each college has a board of regents or board of governors that will be able to speak with authority to this state board. On the other hand, these community colleges are controlled by local boards and they really have no effective organized means of presenting their views to the state board of education unless we create an instrument of this character, and this is one of the reasons why I favor the creation of this community college board even though it is merely an advisory board. I am confident that it is wise to make it a board appointed by the state board of education, because we would not want to divide the final responsibility.

I think one other reason that influenced my thinking in supporting this proposal is this: unquestionably, we face greatly enlarged needs in the field of higher education. As Dr. Hannah and others have pointed out, the youngsters who are going to be entering college in the '70s are already in grade school. We know the color of their eyes, their hair, their age, and they are there, and they are going to be seeking a higher education. It seems to me that it is quite obvious that the most economical way to provide for the higher education of many of these youngsters is to place important reliance on the expansion of our community college program. It is much more economical to provide the first 2 years of college in community colleges than it is in the 4 year colleges and universities. It seems to me that it would be short sighted to take the risk that the opportunity to make effective use of the community colleges would be overlooked in a board of education that has a very broad and comprehensive responsibility. I don't want to take that risk. I think that the community colleges should be organized in a way so that they can be equally effective on the presentation of their opportunity to meet our higher educational needs as the colleges and universities.

For that reason I favor the committee report and oppose the minority recommendation.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Hancock, Dr. Heideman.

MR. HEIDEMAN: I would like to say a word, Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, a word in support of this board for junior colleges. If there is any area in the field of higher education which geographically is representative of our state, it is in the field of the junior colleges. I have here a brochure which indicates where they are located. There is one at Ironwood, one at Gogebic. There is another one that isn't indicated here, really, at Michigan Tech at the Soo. The first 2 years at Michigan Tech at the Soo really are a junior college. There is another one at Petoskey—North Central; at Alpena, Traverse City, Muskegon, Saginaw, Bay City, Grand Rapids, Port Huron, Flint, Lansing, Battle Creek, Benton Harbor, Jackson, Warren, Highland Park, Dearborn. Now the number of these is expected to be increased from 17 or—if we count Michigan Tech at the Soo—18, to about 40 in the not too distant future; and I have a statement here which, of course, has been said in different ways: that Michigan public community colleges are growing at a faster rate of growth than all other higher educational institutions.

One of our main purposes was to free the state board of education of its former function of supervising the 4 former teachers' colleges which are now full universities—or the last one will be, the University of Northern Michigan. Because of its great and growing future responsibilities, the creation of this board further implements this purpose. We wish to give constitutional recognition to this board in order to give direction and provide for orderly and systematic growth in this expanding sector of education. It would seem wise, as has been said, that these colleges have a constitutional board for their problems. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair will recognize one of the sponsors of the pending amendment, Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: I wish we could look at this without any great emotion in terms of what we are trying to cut out in these things. You would almost have us believe that the sponsors of this amendment are some great butchers who are attempting to slice away at the lifeblood of that institution which has so far furthered education in this state. Nothing could be further from the truth, and I want to point out that when a constitution—it can do 2 things here, and I want to tell this to those people who are such adherents to junior colleges; that, on the one hand, where they are so anxious to have this board, they may be hurting junior colleges more than they may be helping them. Now a constitution is a grant of power and it is also a restriction of power.

What the proponents of the majority are setting up in the constitution is indeed a very weak sister. All you have to do is read the language to make that determination. Many of those people who are talking about a junior college board which has responsibilities—and I quote from previous speakers—of general supervision, recommendations, et cetera, are not talking about the board that is in that document, section d of our proposal; they are talking about a board that has not been created, because this board that we are dealing with in terms of the deletion is not a board that is going to have powers of this sort. It is going to be a board that simply will advise on these various questions. I wish the delegates would remember, if they are really concerned with doing the best thing for junior colleges, that the best thing for junior colleges may be to give them and give the legislature flexibility to do what might be better.

It has been said, for instance, that in the states of Mississippi and Florida they have a board for junior colleges. I don't deny this, but neither of these states have them in the constitution and they are effective boards. Does this not indicate to you that it might be better for junior colleges to give them a stronger board through legislative action than to set up an advisory board through constitutional action?

Now I must comment on a statement such as why we want to get this out of the constitution. This was made by the first speaker. This is not a question of getting them out of the constitution; they have never been in the constitution. We have to approach this with the question: is putting them in the constitution going to make them better, stronger, is it perhaps going to lead to more effective overall control and planning?

The statement has been made that I at one time sponsored a proposal to eliminate all the university boards from the constitution. I don't know where the delegate received this misinformation, but at no time have I ever sponsored such a proposal to eliminate the university boards from the constitution and I would submit to the delegate who made this charge that a careful review of my proposal dealing with higher education will support my statement here.

The statement has been made time and time again with reference to the Russell report. Now I know those of you who are not members of the education committee have not heard about this Russell report as frequently as we have. The Russell report was based upon a given situation as of a few years ago. The situation given was that the state board of education was in charge of supervision of the 4 former teacher training institutions and that the state board of education had more than enough to do under those responsibilities; so, therefore, it was recommended by Dr. Russell that a board be set up for junior colleges in view of the present educational structure—at that time.

Now, we are writing a constitution that is going to set up a new educational structure in the state, and a new educational structure isn't what Dr. Russell was talking about. I think the delegates must remember that we are dealing with a new structure and, as such, old information and old advice is based upon a situation which will not be true if the proposal which follows this one is going to be adopted. So let us not fall into the mistake of quoting what previous reports have said about the old situation when we are trying to fabricate a new one.

It has been charged here, or, I should say, it has been stated, that a new board will provide for a more economical means of expediting the problems in junior colleges. The only one I could turn to on this would be Dr. Crawford, and there is no substantiation to the fact that this is going to be more economical. I really don't feel that this is a valid criticism to make.

Now, everyone admits and no one gets up here and says, "We don't want to see junior colleges grow." This isn't the question at all. I think when it comes right down to it, the question is whether you are going to provide for flexibility in terms of meeting the needs of junior colleges or whether you want to fix an advisory board from a board to a board as a means by which they can best achieve their goals and purposes.

I wish you would look at it from that standpoint. Is this board good enough to do what you think it can do, or do you think that we could better trust in the action which might develop later on that would better reflect the changing needs than to go ahead with a board which is appointed by the board to advise a board? Again I want to repeat that at no time in the constitutional history of this state or the constitutional history of any state has any such board been put in. This is completely radical and new. It does not permit legislative action. It does not permit the state board to act. It is something totally new, and the delegates are treating this as if it were something that has already been in.

I wish you would look at this with a very sober and critical eye as to whether this really does what the proponents say it will do.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Chairman Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how many more speakers are registered with the Chair?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Apparently 3.

MR. BENTLEY: Well, Mr. Chairman, my personal opinion is that everything that is essential has been said in connection with this amendment and maybe some things that were not so essential, but in view of interesting developments in connection with Project Mercury and because of the time, I move that the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the motion of Delegate Bentley that the committee do now rise. All in favor signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

The ayes have it. The committee has risen.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. President, just as a matter of information—

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will please show a little better order.

MR. TUBBS: I arose not to speak on the amendment but to remind Mr. Faxon that he and the astronaut had their timing perfect. He made one circuit of the earth while Mr. Faxon was making one circuit of one section of this constitution. (laughter)

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Ionia, Mr. Powell.

MR. POWELL: Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen of the convention, the committee of the whole has been in session for approximately 90 minutes and we have lost no ground. (laughter) We are considering exactly the same amendment as we were when we went into session.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 98, has considered an amendment thereto and has come to no final resolution thereon.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Announcements.

SECRETARY CHASE: The committee on style and drafting will meet in room K this evening at 7:30. Mr. Edward Hutchinson, vice chairman.

We have a request for leave of absence: Mr. Lundgren would like to be excused from the sessions of this afternoon and tomorrow morning.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, the request will be granted. The Chair hears no objection and it is so ordered.

What is the pleasure of the convention? Mr. Kirk.

MR. KIRK: Mr. President, I move the convention recess until 2:00 p.m.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Kirk moves that the convention stand in recess until 2:00 p.m. All those in favor will say aye. Those opposed, say no.

The motion prevails and the convention stands in recess until 2:00 p.m. today.

[Whereupon, at 11:35 o'clock a.m., the convention recessed; and, at 2:00 o'clock p.m., reconvened.]

The convention will come to order. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

MR. KNIRK: I would like to ask for a roll call, because I do not believe that a quorum is present.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Well, the secretary announces when a quorum is present and he has not announced yet. He is waiting.

MR. KUHN: Mr. President, I would like to know how long we have to wait.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Well, we can wait until a quorum appears unless somebody moves to recess in the meantime.

MR. KUHN: Well, isn't a roll call in order at any time even though there is not a quorum present? I thought it was, under our rules.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: I move that we recess subject to the call of the Chair.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Bentley moves that the convention stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair. All those in favor will say aye. Those opposed say no.

The motion does not prevail. (laughter)

MR. DADE: Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Reverend Dade?

MR. DADE: Mr. President, a question of personal privilege having to do with the body. I believe that Delegate Douglas has a radio and it might increase the efficiency of the convention if the radio was put near the microphone at the time of the arrival of the astronaut, and if it was turned up, we could cont'nue with our business. (laughter)

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: It would be the intention of the Chair that at the appropriate time the notification would be again received and we would probably stand again in recess.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: General orders of the day. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ionia, Mr. Powell.

MR. POWELL: Mr. President, fellow delegates, I move we again resolve ourselves into committee of the whole for consideration of proposals under the general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: All those in favor of the motion will say aye. Opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will convene and Mr. Powell will preside.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The committee will be in order. This will be about the fifth time that our committee of the whole has worked on this proposal, Committee Proposal 98.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Bentley, chairman of the committee on education.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, would the Chair announce the names of those delegates who have indicated their desire to be recognized?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Those who are now on our waiting list are Delegates Kuhn and Sterrett. The Chair believes Delegate Tubbs said what he desired to say. Delegate Habermehl has now requested; so we have the 3: Kuhn, Sterrett and Habermehl.

MR. BENTLEY: Well, I intend to yield the floor, Mr. Chairman, for purposes of whatever contributions these gentlemen may care to make to the discussion, but I do hope very much the delegates will recognize that most of what could be said on this particular amendment has, I think, already been said, if not everything, and I would hope that we could move as expeditiously as possible to a vote following the remarks of the gentlemen whose names you have just read.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: We are now working on the report of the minority of the committee that has been offered as an amendment, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pontiac, Delegate Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, once again I would like to speak in support of the minority report amendment. In further support I would like to add this: we have heard that there are 17 junior colleges now and there are going to be more and that, therefore, there would be too many different schools reporting to our state board of education.

Well, I notice we have 10 colleges and universities and they are all going to have to individually report to our state board of education; so, to be consistent, I wonder, if we are to appoint this state board for junior colleges which we could call a super board over our junior colleges, whether or not we should not consider a super board over our regular 4 year colleges and universities. In that way we would only have 2 boards reporting to the state board of education: one representing all the boards for our colleges and universities, and one for our state board for junior colleges. This to me would be consistent. Now, I am sure that the backers of our University of Michigan, Michigan State University, and Wayne State University would not approve of this. I am absolutely certain they would not approve of this, and yet I think I am certain when I say that Dr. Russell supported in his report a super board for higher education.

Therefore, I would like to close by saying that this board is not necessary, especially to be in our constitution, because of the fact that it is a legislative matter and, too, that its only purpose would be one of advice. They would not have anything to do with supervision of our junior colleges. Therefore, I, as one delegate, want to be sure our junior colleges are operated and controlled by locally elected board members. Therefore, I am in support of the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Sterrett.

MR. STERRETT: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I would like to have you recall a point that Mr. Higgs made that we would be freezing an 8 member board into this constitution. I don't believe that this would be exactly fair to the community and junior college program, nor would it be a type of thing that could be used as freely as it should be used in the future.

I have heard that the community junior college program is going to be expanding, that there are going to be more junior colleges. Who knows? Maybe there will be the day in the next 10 years or 15 or 20 years when we might need area boards. So I would like to see this language omitted from the committee proposal in order to have a freedom of action when it is needed.

There are a few more words to be said, and I would like to yield the floor to Mr. Hubbs.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Sterrett caught me somewhat by surprise. I share his view with regard to this board being inserted into the constitution. I believe that on constitutional grounds, the idea of writing a constitution which is the fundamental law, that we are violating one of our fundamental doctrines by putting what might very well be called statutory material into this constitution, and I therefore support the minority amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alpena, Delegate Habermehl.

MR. HABERMEHL: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that my remarks will be quite brief. Delegate Faxon spoke of the purpose of the constitution as being a grant of power or a limitation upon power. I would simply like to point out that in this particular field it has been decided many times that we cannot here grant more power than the legislature now possesses. Matters of education are strictly within the control and under the power of the legislature. Thus, any constitutional provision must be construed only as a limitation on the power of the legislature or of state government. Particularly is that true of section d, that we are involved with here. It would freeze for all time—or at least until such time as a very difficult method of constitutional amendment should be used—the makeup of this board, its tenure and its powers, its jurisdiction.

This, then, fellow delegates, limits the power of the state to make such changes as the future may show to be necessary in the makeup of this board. The legislature could not extend the powers of this board. It could not change their tenure. It could not change their manner of appointment or selection.

Now I would ask: does the power to appoint necessarily involve the power to remove? I believe there are supreme court decisions on that point, which means that the state board of education, however it might be composed, could decide the policy of this junior or community college board. Is there any doubt in any delegate's mind that this community college board subject to appointment and removal by the state board of education would decide or take any different policy stand than the state board of education would take?

The next problem that I address myself to: the state board of education is elected on a statewide basis. It is entirely possible, in fact quite likely, that a majority of that state board of education might well be elected from people sharing one particular educational viewpoint, or from people from one particular area of the state. Five members of that state board of education, then, could decide the makeup of the junior or community college board. I point out that the community colleges are of statewide interest. There is probably more need and more use for the community college set up in the sparsely populated areas of the state, in northern Michigan, where to attend college any student must travel a great distance to attend one of the regular state institutions. How well, then, would this community college board reflect the needs, the wishes, of the upstate and other Michigan areas?

For those reasons, I would strongly urge that you support the minority report amendment in this case. Leave the makeup of this board, its duties, its responsibilities, to the legislature. Certainly they can be just as well trusted as any board of education elected for an 8 year term with staggered terms. The legislators, after all, are the representatives of the people and, as the people's wishes in this field might change, the legislature would have an opportunity to change them, change these provisions, these provisions concerning this community college board. Certainly, I think, we can repose as much trust in the legislature as we can in any appointed board.

MR. MADAR: Point of information, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Birmingham, Mr. Van Dusen, for a preferential motion.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. Chairman, I am advised by the sergeant at arms that our distinguished astronaut is about to make his descent and for that reason I move at this time that the committee rise.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the motion of Delegate Van Dusen that the committee do now rise. All in favor signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

The motion prevails and the committee has risen.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will be in order.

Without objection, the report of the committee of the whole will be temporarily suspended.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Birmingham, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move that the convention stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: All those in favor of the motion will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails and the convention stands in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

[Whereupon, at 2:15 o'clock p.m., the convention recessed; and, at 3:05 o'clock p.m., reconvened.]

The convention will come to order.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ionia, Mr. Powell.

MR. POWELL: Mr. President, I move that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the consideration of items under general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The gentleman from Ionia, Delegate Powell, moves that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for consideration of items under general orders. All those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will convene and Mr. Powell will preside.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The committee of the whole will be in order. Let us proceed where we left off on Committee Proposal 98 and the Faxon amendment thereto. The Chair believes the only person who had requested recognition was the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, all I wanted was to get some information through the Chair from Mr. Habermehl. He made a remark this morning that the legislature had power over these various colleges and universities, and I was just trying to find out whether this is absolutely so and whether or not the legislature could ask for an audit of the universities' and colleges' books.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Habermehl, do you care to answer?

MR. HABERMEHL: As closely as I can, Mr. Chairman. Whether or not the legislature has power to audit them, I suppose, will depend upon action that the convention still has to take on this matter of the appointment of a legislative auditor. As I understand that proposal, they would have the right to, if this proposal is adopted.

I will agree that insofar as the 3 top universities of the state, the legislature's control over those 3 universities is limited by the constitutional provisions.

MR. MADAR: In other words, they do not really control the 3 top universities?

MR. HABERMEHL: Except in the fiscal or financial sense if a legislative auditor is appointed.

MR. MADAR: I think you will agree with me, Mr. Habermehl, that this is the place where your control is on the economic end of it. Otherwise, you don't do any controlling.

MR. HABERMEHL: Quite so. I would like to make a little further statement, too. I would state that this idea of the community college board to supervise all the community colleges has a good deal of merit. My objection is to freezing the members of that board, their tenure and their duties, into the constitution so that it cannot be adapted to changes as they may occur.

That is my objection and I want to make it clear that I do not oppose the idea of the formation of a board to supervise the community colleges.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes Delegate Bentley, the chairman of the committee on education.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, if there are no other delegates desiring recognition, I suggest we proceed to a vote. As the chairman of the committee on education, I request that the Faxon amendment be voted down and that the committee proposal be sustained.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Since you have spoken, T. S. Brown, one of the sponsors of this minority report amendment, has sought recognition. He was not here when this matter was discussed earlier in the day. Delegate Brown, do you wish to make a statement?

MR. T. S. BROWN: Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman. I want to apologize for not being privileged to hear the debates on this issue this morning. I am sure they were many and varied and cogent on both sides, but, as I am one of the sponsors of the amendment, I cannot help but speak my mind in this case on the genesis of this particular amendment.

As I spoke last week on the matter concerning the naming of all of the various colleges in our constitution, I believe I mentioned that our committee was full of nostalgia, and I think that particular brand of nostalgia was the reason behind the inclusion of the junior colleges in our constitution, and I think Mr. Habermehl's argument from what I heard was the most cogent for its noninclusion. This nostalgia was accompanied in our committee in the case of the junior colleges by copious amounts of feminine tears, and I understand that we have had many, many exhortations on the part of the people who are very closely allied to junior colleges in the last few days asking our delegates to "Please help us out and stick us in there, you know, because this is what is good for the alma mater." I do object to these things because, although I get a tear in my eye every time the University of Michigan loses a football game, I do realize that there should be certain logical considerations for the inclusion or exclusion of certain schools or categories of schools in our constitution.

I think that actually, at bottom, at bottom, the decision of the majority members of our committee in this particular regard was an emotional decision rather than a logical one. I therefore support the Faxon amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the pending amendment which is the minority report, or most of the material on page 3 of Committee Proposal 98, beginning on line 2. All in favor of this pending amendment signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

A DELEGATE: Division.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Division is requested. Is the demand seconded? There is a sufficient number up. The secretary will take a roll call vote. Sixty seconds having elapsed, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Faxon and others, the yeas are 47, the nays are 69.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The amendment is not adopted. Are there any further amendments on the secretary's desk?

SECRETARY CHASE: Not to this section, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: If there are no more amendments to this section, it will pass.

Section d is passed.

Are there any amendments to the body of the committee proposal?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Norris offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, lines 10 and 23, after "vote" by striking out the comma and "and preside at meetings of the board.", and inserting a period and "The board may elect one of their number, or may designate the president, to preside at board meetings.".

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to elaborate upon the reasons which I have advanced on a prior occasion in support of the principle of this amendment. As we have indicated, we are creating constitutional status for these respective boards of trustees, boards of regents, boards of governors. By giving them constitutional status we are making them, according to them, the level accorded to the governor, the legislature, the judiciary. We want to lengthen their terms. We have expanded their number. The whole idea is to make them, in fact, the policymakers of these respective institutions and to continue the international reputation which has thus far been accorded to these institutions, without in any way, directly or indirectly, impugning the integrity or the competency of the presidents of the respective institutions.

The fact is we want to make out of these boards policymaking and functional people, and I think that what we ought to do here is give the right to the boards to select one of their number to preside or, should they decide, give the president that function; but the decision should rest with them, and the word "may" is dispositive of the intent in this particular amendment.

I urge, respectfully, support of this amendment. I think it is in keeping; it proceeds with faithfulness to implement the very function of the committee report. I trust that it will be adopted.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Chairman Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I take it that the difference from the amendment offered by the gentleman yesterday is that this is permissive and not mandatory. Am I correct?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: That is correct.

MR. BENTLEY: And I think it also differs from the Allen amendment in that the Allen amendment offered yesterday said that the board "may" elect one of their number as chairman, or, rather, the president "may" preside over the board. Am I correct?

I wish the secretary would enlighten me to see if there is a distinction between this and the Allen amendment of yesterday.

SECRETARY CHASE: The Allen amendment was on page 2, line 24, by striking out the word "shall" or, rather, by inserting the word "may" after "and" in line 24: " . . . and may preside at meetings of the board."

MR. BENTLEY: Thank you, Mr. Secretary. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Detroit only to this extent: that I think everything that has been said on this amendment was said yesterday. I urge the defeat of the amendment and support of the committee proposal.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The gentleman from Kalamazoo, Delegate Allen, has sought recognition.

MR. ALLEN: Mr. Chairman, we have been through this before. I agree with Delegate Norris in part and disagree with him in part. His amendment, you will note, refers to 2 sections: section b, which is concerned with the 3 large universities, and section c, which is concerned with the other 7 schools.

Now I would oppose the amendment, as I did yesterday, on section b, since the tradition of these schools has been to have the president preside. This is because this is the way the constitution has been worded. I think they have built up such a tradition that we shouldn't try and upset it. But when we get over to section c, I think we have a different situation.

Now the boards of these other schools — well, first of all — all of the other schools except Ferris and Michigan College of Mines have been under the state board of education, so there is no history. But on these 2 schools, Ferris and Mines, they have had a statutory appointed board, and on these boards a member of the board has presided rather than the president. Now, what we do if we go ahead and adopt the language in the majority proposal is that we change the system under which these schools have grown up, and I think if we don't want to change it for the big 3, we shouldn't change it for these other 2 schools.

I think while the Norris amendment to section c is not exactly the same as mine, it comes so close to it that for practical purposes I would be quite willing to accept it. I think we ought to give a little elasticity here. I think most of us are familiar with private colleges. Where in the private college does the president preside? I don't know of any; the board presides. I think that we ought to have the board have the right, if it wishes to do so, to select one of its own members to preside or, if the board wishes to do so, it may have the president preside. Some schools can do it one way; some schools can do it a different way. I personally prefer this system because I don't know how sound it is, where you have a group of men who hire an employee, the president of the university, and then have him preside. We don't do that in our private institutions, we don't do it on our school boards, we don't do it on the state board of education. I think this will give a little flexibility. I think it is a good thing to do.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would request that because of the differences between section b and section c that when we vote the question be divided.

MR. BENTLEY: I object.

MR. ALLEN: I move that the question be divided.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair rules that you have the right to divide the amendment.

There are 3 speakers who have sought recognition now in the order that the Chair has noted them. The gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Iverson.

MR. IVERSON: Mr. Chairman, I recall that last evening we voted down this amendment on section c. Am I right? If we did, then we should only proceed on section b.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question will now be on the amendment to section b, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The first amendment offered by Mr. Norris is:

1. Amend page 2, line 10, after "vote" by striking out the comma and "and preside at meetings of the board.", and inserting a period and the sentence "The board may elect one of their number, or may designate the president, to preside at board meetings."; so that the language will then read, going back to near the start of line 7:

> They shall, as often as necessary, elect a president of the institution under their respective supervision who shall be the principal executive officer of the institution, be an ex officio member of the board but without the right to vote. The board may elect one of their number, or may designate the president, to preside at board meetings.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Is this question, then, going to be divided, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN POWELL. It is divided.

MR. FAXON: That is all I wanted to ascertain.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: On the portion relating to section b, which the secretary has just read, Delegate Norris, did you wish to speak again?

MR. NORRIS: I just wanted to underscore one point, Mr. Chairman, and that is we have to remember that the principal executive officer, in this case the president, is a person who is selected by the board, whether it be the board of trustees, the board of governors or the board of regents here, and to accord to him the duty and constitutional right to preside deemphasizes the constitutional status and function and responsibility of the board. For that reason I wanted to underscore it and ask for an affirmative vote on the amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the Norris amendment to section b. Delegate Austin.

MR. AUSTIN: This is just for a point of information. I believe that the projection over here on the wall is misleading, because this seems to be the amendment proposed by Mr. Norris yesterday. It differs from the one over there and it may be confusing some of the delegates.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Is there any desire to have the amendment reread or any confusion at all? Delegate Bonisteel.

MR. BONISTEEL: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I rise to oppose this amendment, because I don't believe in the reasoning that has been presented here as to why a board should not have its president preside over it. I think I stated to you yesterday that the voting members of the board are the 8 members who constitute the board.

Secondly, I believe, is a matter of harmony, which has been demonstrated almost entirely during the history of these institutions, that the method that has been used by the 3 institutions has produced greater harmony by having the president preside over the board than if someone from among the members of the board should be selected to preside; because, if you had much experience in this area, you would find that there are those who would like to have the honor of presiding over the board, maybe more than 1 in a board of 8, and, consequently, you begin to have some division at the very beginning. This way you have at least a man who can preside over the board, over the 8 people who are sitting there, and sitting there in the same capacity to which they were elected, and, actually, the president of the institution is the moderator of the board.

Therefore, I believe that experience having produced the end result which we see here in higher education in Michigan, I can see no reason now to change it insofar as the institutions are concerned, and I would ask those who are here to give great consideration to voting against the proposed amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: In order that there may be no confusion, the Chair is asking the secretary to reread the pending amendment, and then the Chair hopes we can vote thereon.

SECRETARY CHASE: The first amendment is:

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Those in favor of this amendment signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

The amendment is not adopted. The secretary will read the second amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The second amendment offered by Mr. Norris is:

1. Amend page 2, line 23, after "vote" by striking out the comma and "and preside at meetings of the board.", and inserting a period and the sentence "The board may elect one of their number, or may designate the president, to preside at board meetings.".

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on this amendment. All in favor signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

A DELEGATE: Division.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Division is requested. Is the demand supported?

SECRETARY CHASE: A sufficient number.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: A sufficient number up. We will now vote by the electric voting machine. Those in favor will vote aye. Opposed, no. Sixty seconds having elapsed, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote. The secretary will announce the result of the voting.

SECRETARY CHASE: On amendment 2 offered by Mr. Norris, the yeas are 60, the nays are 57.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Sixty to 57. The amendment is adopted. Are there any further amendments on the secretary's desk?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. White offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 16, after "institutions.", by inserting "Formal sessions of governing boards of such institutions shall be open to the public.".

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The gentleman from St. Johns, Delegate White.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. This amendment is confined to section a. Section a having been passed, is this amendment in order at this time?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Yes, it was our understanding that after we had taken them up section by section, we would go back and have amendments to the body of the committee proposal.

MR. BENTLEY: That is just the point I am making; it is not to the body of the proposal. It is confined to section a.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: It is to one of the sections of the committee proposal, which the Chair understood was to be permitted after we had gone through the various individual sections. It is the Chair's understanding it is in order. Delegate White.

MR. WHITE: Actually, I think this amendment is self explanatory. Meetings of governing boards of the 3 major universities have been open to the public and news media only for the past ½ dozen years and that has been accomplished only after a long period of negotiations. As it stands, the public and news media are present only as a matter of sufferance. They are invited guests of the governing board, an invitation which could be, conceivably, withdrawn at any time. It seems to me that now that we are creating by constitutional enactment 7 more such governing boards, it would be appropriate that their formal meetings should be conducted in public sessions.

I would urge your support of this amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Downs.

MR. DOWNS: I would like to speak very strongly in favor of Delegate Ink White's amendment. I believe that the boards should be open to the public as a matter of constitutional right. They are public business. The only possibility might be adding some clauses as we did in the legislative, unless public security demands otherwise, and I cannot see that contingency.

I hope my good friend, Delegate White, will cosponsor a proposition that we make the same principle applicable to boards of supervisors when that is in order. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Madar.

MR. MADAR: I just wanted to say that I am positive now that my trust has not been misplaced. Thanks, Mr. White.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the amendment by Delegate White. All in favor signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

The ayes have it. The amendment is adopted. Are there any further amendments to the body of this committee proposal?

SECRETARY CHASE: Messrs. Pollock and DeVries offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 3, line 1, after "which shall be" by striking out "operated" and inserting "supervised and controlled"; so that the first sentence will read, going back to page 2, line 29:

The legislature shall provide by law for the establishment and financial support of public community and junior colleges, which shall be supervised and controlled by locally elected boards.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Grand Rapids, Delegate DeVries.

MR. DeVRIES: Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the committee, Dr. Pollock and I discussed this amendment with Mr. Bentley and Mr. Sieder. They agreed to it. All it does is change the word "operate" to the words "supervise and control." We thought the word "operate" connotes daily administration and that the words "supervise and control" spell out that the boards' function is basically policymaking and not administration.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Chairman Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: In view of the great distinction enjoyed by the gentleman from Grand Rapids and the gentleman from Ann Arbor, and that I believe that this does contribute, my conviction is that this does contribute to a better understanding of the proposal, the committee on education has no objection.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on this pending amendment by Doctors Pollock and DeVries. All in favor signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

The ayes have it and the amendment is adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Faxon offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 26, after "governor" by striking out the remainder of the sentence and inserting "with the advice and consent of the state board of education."; so that the language will read, beginning on line 24:

Each board of control shall consist of 8 members who shall hold office for 8 years and who shall be appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the state board of education.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, we have had considerable discussion over the question of appointments without any check upon the power of appointment. I offer this as one of the methods that have been considered and not acted upon favorably by the committee. But it was considered, and I feel that the members of this committee ought to at least be aware of this possible alternative to appointments.

It has been pointed out that educational boards are different from regular executive functions of the governor and, as such, it would be in keeping with their difference to indicate this by giving the power of the advice and consent over to a statewide board elected by the people to confirm or deny the appointments made by the governor to the boards, over which the state board of education might exercise some degree of supervision; so I simply offer this to you as an indication of one way by which we might overcome an obstacle in terms of the composition and the methods of selection and appointment of the members of these boards. I urge your consideration of this as a compromise in this field.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Chairman Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Faxon, has been at times a very useful member of the committee on education and has made great contributions to our work and deliberations thereto, but I must say, in all sincerity and kindliness to the gentleman, that he completely misunderstands the committee procedure if he thinks that every single amendment which was brought up in committee and disposed of in committee after thorough discussion and deliberation has got to be offered again in committee of the whole.

This amendment, as I say, his proposal, was thoroughly discussed and debated in the committee on education. It was voted down. I see no reason to bring it up at this time, and I hope that we can complete action on this proposal and move along. I therefore ask that the Faxon amendment be disposed of in the negative sense by being voted down.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the Faxon amendment. All those in favor signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

The amendment is not adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Habermehl offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 3, line 8, after "appointed" by striking out "by the state board of education" and inserting "by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate"; so that the language will then read:

> The board shall consist of 8 members who shall hold office for 8 years and who shall be appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alpena, Delegate Habermehl.

MR. HABERMEHL: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that I will need very much time on this. This would simply provide for the same method of appointment for this community college board as is provided in the preceding section, section c, for the boards of the various state institutions other than the 3 constitutional ones. I believe that this would eliminate the objection of the community college board being dominated in policy matters by the state board of education. If this community college board is to serve any useful purpose, certainly it ought to have some independence of action. This, I believe, would give it to them.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Chairman Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: I have great respect and admiration for my good friend from Alpena, but I would point out that his amendment seeks to destroy the committee's intent on this particular proposal, because we definitely voted to make this community college board advisory to and subservient to the state board of education and work through the state board of education. The gentleman's proposed amendment would remove this board entirely from any connection with the state board of education, making it in direct connection with the governor. We do not believe that is in the best interest of the community colleges. We ask for the defeat of this amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the Habermehl amendment. Delegate Hart.

MISS HART: Mr. Chairman, we have struggled to keep from fragmenting education, and I would certainly hope that the committee will support the education committee.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: All in favor of the Habermehl amendment signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

The amendment is not adopted. Are there any further amendments to any section of this committee proposal?

SECRETARY CHASE: That is all of the amendments presently on the desk, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: If not, it will be passed.

Committee Proposal 98, as amended, is passed. It has taken only 5½ days.

The secretary will read the next proposal. I believe it is 47.

SECRETARY CHASE: Item 2 on the calendar, from the committee on education, by Mr. Bentley, chairman, Committee Proposal 47, A proposal to replace sections 2 and 6 of article XI.

Following is Committee Proposal 47 as read by the secretary, and the reasons submitted in support thereof:

The committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Sec. a. THERE SHALL BE ESTABLISHED A STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION WHICH SHALL PROVIDE LEADERSHIP AND SUPERVISION OVER PUBLIC EDUCATION INCLUDING ADULT EDUCATION AND INSTRUCTIONAL PROGRAMS IN STATE INSTITUTIONS OTHER THAN COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES. IN ADDITION, IT SHALL SERVE AS THE GENERAL PLANNING AND COORDINATING BODY FOR ALL PUBLIC EDUCATION IN THE STATE AND SHALL PROVIDE ADVICE TO THE LEGISLATURE AND TO THE PEOPLE AS TO THE AMOUNT OF STATE SUPPORT REQUIRED. THE POWER OF THE BOARDS OF INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION OTHERWISE PROVIDED HEREIN TO SUPERVISE THEIR RESPECTIVE INSTITUTIONS AND CONTROL AND DIRECT THE EXPENDITURE OF THE INSTITUTIONS' FUNDS SHALL NOT BE LIMITED BY THIS SECTION.

THE STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION SHALL CONSIST OF 8 ELECTIVE MEMBERS WHO SHALL HOLD OFFICE FOR 8 YEARS. THEY SHALL BE NOMINATED BY PARTY CONVENTION AND ELECTED AT LARGE AS PRESCRIBED BY LAW. THE GOVERNOR SHALL ALSO BE A MEMBER OF THE STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Sec. b. THE STATE BOARD SHALL APPOINT A SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION WHOSE TERM OF OFFICE SHALL BE DETERMINED BY THE BOARD. HE SHALL BE THE CHAIRMAN OF THE STATE BOARD—WITHOUT THE RIGHT TO VOTE, AND SHALL BE RESPONSIBLE FOR THE EXECUTION OF ITS POLICIES.

THE SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION SHALL BE CHIEF ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICER OF A STATE OFFICE OF EDUCATION WHICH SHALL BE GRANTED SUFFICIENT FUNDS AND STAFF TO CARRY ON STATE RESPONSIBILITIES FOR EDUCATION AS DETERMINED BY LAW.

Mr. Bentley, chairman of the committee on education, submits the following reasons in support of Committee Proposal 47:

A fundamental principle is that education is the concern of all people to safeguard democracy. Inherent in its objectives has been the development of good citizens for the preservation and growth of our country but also inherent has been the public participation in the nature of its teaching and operation. This section attempts to embody both of these principles and is in line with recommendations of major educator and parent groups concerned with education as well as many in school administration.

The enlarged state board finally gives Michigan a policy making body on a state level similar to the local boards of education. Michigan is 1 of 3 states that does not have such a board. For many years there have been grave doubts about the advisability of policies and procedures determined by a superintendent of public instruction alone. Creation of a state board places the superintendent in the position of having constantly available a deliberative body of outstanding citizens who are representative of the citizens of Michigan.

Explanation—Matter within [ ] is stricken, matter in capitals is new.

Eight elected members have been selected as the number for the board because experience in other states has proved this to be a desirable size for a deliberative body of this nature.

It is recommended that the legislature provide for the election of board members on staggered terms to maintain continuity in education policies.

The governor shall be a member of the state board of education in order to provide a close relationship between the executive branch of state government and the field of public education. It is understood that such a membership would carry the right to speak and to vote at all board meetings. Such membership could be deputized but without the right to vote.

The new state board is a symbol of partnership between the people and the state. As representative of the people, it embraces popular control, discourages use of education as a partisan tool, provides continuity of statewide policies and programs, is a barrier to special interest group influence on the schools, and helps unify educational forces throughout the state.

It is considered the unifying and coordinating force for education within the state. The committee recommends that the board shall receive information from all of the various levels of public education—elementary, secondary, higher and other public institutions providing instructional programs.

Such information shall be used in order that the state board of education may adequately consider and advise local school boards, governing boards of colleges and universities, the legislature and the people as to the total needs of education in this state and make recommendations concerning their solution.

Having the superintendent of public instruction appointed by the state board follows present day trends as indicated by the following chart:

Methods of selecting chief state school officers by number of states

Selection by state board	4	8	13	22
Selection by governor	9	7	6	5
Selection by election	33	33	29	23

Appointment by a state board assures that the superintendent of public instruction will be selected from among the most competent people available to serve in that capacity. His responsibilities would be that of directing the state educational system and acting as the executive officer of the state board of education in administering its various functions. It is interesting to note that the last 3 previous superintendents of public instruction of Michigan, all of whom left the office voluntarily, went on record repeatedly as favoring the appointment of a superintendent of public instruction by an enlarged board of education.

This section also recognizes the superintendent of public instruction as administrative head of the state department of education. It is the intent of this committee that the superintendent of public instruction be considered the chief educational officer of the state and as such staff officer to the governor and on his administrative board.

The committees on rights, suffrage and elections and executive branch, who have concurrent jurisdiction, have concurred with the committee on education on this proposal.

Following is the minority report to Committee Proposal 47 as offered and the reasons submitted in support thereof:

Miss Hart and Messrs. T. S. Brown and Douglas, a minority of the committee on education, submit the following minority report to Committee Proposal 47:

A minority of the committee disagree with paragraph one of section b. of Committee Proposal 47.

Miss Hart and Messrs. T. S. Brown and Douglas, a minority of the committee on education, submit the following reasons in support of the foregoing minority report, which accompanied Committee Proposal 47:

The heart of the question over whether or not the state superintendent of public instruction should be elected by the people or appointed by a state board of education is the question: is Michigan to have a strong superintendent of public instruction who is to be a policymaker by dint of his own strength as the choice of the people, or are we to have a superintendent who is granted his strength and guaranteed his weaknesses by virtue of the whim of a board of education which, even if elected, will by its very nature be more difficult to attune to the public will?

It is not enough to say that an appointed superintendent will be on the governor's administrative board. If he is there only as the liaison between the governor and the board of education, he is reduced to the position of messenger boy. If he is on the administrative board as an elected official, he is there as the representative of the people.

The board of education, even though elected, is more difficult to attune to the public will simply because it is more difficult to place blame for mistakes or tender praise for success.

An elected superintendent of public instruction is answerable directly to the people while, as a policymaker at the administrative board level and presiding officer of the board of education, his actions and policies are demonstrably his own.

Other arguments supporting the election of a superintendent of public instruction:

(1) Elected policymaking officials are historically more effective before the legislature and its committees;

(2) An elected superintendent makes it his business to meet the public in every part of the state and will be more inclined to bring the story of the needs and problems of education to all manner of groups; and

(3) There is no evidence to support any argument that an elected superintendent would not perform his professional duties as an educator. On the contrary, his accessibility to the will of the people tends to place the emphasis on more energetic performance of such duties.

Finally, may we add that it is only natural that professional educators should feel that they are best qualified to solve educational problems and handle educational matters. However, the facts are that this is a public responsibility and the only way the public has a direct voice at high, policymaking levels in education is through the election of the superintendent of public instruction.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Chairman Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Well, Mr. Chairman, Committee Proposal 47 from the committee on education is divided into 2 parts of which the secretary has just read the first part relating to the state board of education. As far as the committee on education is concerned, Mr. Chairman, section a was adopted unanimously, as I recall, by our committee on education, and I believe I am speaking the sentiments of all members of the committee on education when we regard this new state board of education as perhaps our most outstanding accomplishment of all our proposals for the new constitution in the field of education. Section b, which will be arrived at, of course, subsequently, is, on the other hand, quite controversial. There is a minority report pertaining to this section, which we are not discussing at the present time.

For a more adequate and thorough discussion and explanation of section a of Committee Proposal 47, relating to the state board of education, I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee that handled this matter, the distinguished vice president of the convention, the gentleman from Bloomfield Hills, Mr. Romney.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Bloomfield Hills, Mr. Romney.

MR. ROMNEY: I think for the information of the delegates that I should first outline the significant changes made by this new proposal, and then indicate the things that this proposal does not do, and then the reasons for these changes.

The first thing that the proposal does is to enlarge the board of education from a board of 3 to a board of 8, the 8 members to be elected. It also adds a ninth member in the governor and, through the addition of the governor, develops a tie in between the governor's administrative and executive responsibility and the functioning of the board of governors. I think it is clear that in an activity as important as education involving 50 per cent of the state's expenditures, that it is important that the governor have a direct contact with this activity, be familiar with it, and be in a position to make recommendations on the basis of firsthand knowledge. After all, his recommendations with respect to the budget will be very important in terms of what is finally done for education as a whole.

Now, the second thing that the proposal does is to relieve the board of education of the responsibility for providing the operating direction for the normal colleges.

The third thing it does is to enlarge the functions of the board. The new board of education is given leadership and supervision over education other than colleges and universities. This means the elementary and secondary schools as well as other institutions of an educational character. The third thing it does is to give this board overall planning and coordinating responsibility for all of education. This we have not had. As Miss Hart just indicated, we have had a fragmented situation where segments of education have been operating quite autonomously, and for the first time through this overall board we set up a body that has general planning and coordinating authority. This means that this board is in the position to determine where community colleges should be located, for instance, with the advice of the community college board, whether 4 year colleges should add additional departments, or whether universities should add additional post graduate work. It gives this board the key position in recommending to the governor and the legislature all the steps taken to meet our educational needs in the state.

On number 3, this board's functions are enlarged by making it a general review body of total fund requests for education. This board will have the responsibility of reviewing requests for funds from all segments of education and then submitting its recommendations on these requests to the governor and the legislature and the people of the state, generally. It is believed that this body will establish a stature, a prestige, that will enable it to be very influential in terms of its recommendations. It also means that it will give the board the opportunity to exercise the type of general planning and coordinating control that I have previously indicated in that its recommendations should have a very important bearing on appropriations. Now, this does not preclude separate universities from going directly to the legislature if they do not agree with the recommendations of the board. In connection with the enlargement of the board's activities, I think it is important to know that this enlargement of the board's activities does not increase the authority of the board beyond that now granted in the present constitution to the superintendent of public instruction. The present constitution gives the superintendent of public instruction very broad authority over education, but he is not properly equipped either from the standpoint of staff and department or from the standpoint of ability to cover the full field to discharge that function. This contemplates the establishment of this board with these broad functions and, certainly, this provides a more suitable means of discharging these important functions.

Now what are some of the things it does not do? It does not discourage the voluntary effort that is building up in many fields of education, particularly in the field of higher education. The council of university presidents has begun to do some coordinating work on their own that represents a potentially valuable contribution. This does not discourage the continuation of that voluntary planning and coordination on the part of the institutions of higher learning, nor does it discourage similar voluntary effort on the part of community colleges. It does not interfere with the operating autonomy of the colleges and universities. The boards of regents, the governing boards of the universities and colleges will retain their autonomy in the operating area. And this does not take control of education away from the control of the people; it leaves the control of education in the form that is so well known locally, namely, the election of educational officials. The state board corresponds very closely to the local boards of education. It does not remove completely from the governor the governor's administrative and executive responsibility, because the governor is made a part of this board.

Now we need this provision, as far as I am concerned, because education will play an ever increasing part in state government. It already represents 50 per cent of our state expenditures. We are faced with an increasing number of youngsters who are seeking a higher education in particular and, because of this larger need in the future, it seems particularly timely to make adequate provision for planning and coordination. We are certainly going to need the wisest possible expenditure of available funds in order to meet our educational requirements both in terms of quality and in terms of the number of young people and adults and others who need education in this period when knowledge is multiplying more rapidly than ever before and where the need for it is greater. We certainly need to develop a means of meeting these needs that will be free from local interests and group pressures, and it is believed that this enlargement of the functions of the board of education will contribute importantly to this end. If you have not read it, I would suggest that you read the majority report of the committee on page 402 of the journal.

In conclusion, I think this recommendation for the board of education, if approved by you—as I hope it will be—by itself is sufficient justification for this constitutional convention. I believe that it will function in a manner that will save more annually as we go down through the years than the total cost of this constitutional convention. It will do this by bringing together at a central point intelligent planning for our total educational requirements and free us from the type of fragmented pressures that have been exerting themselves in the past.

I think this is a very timely and necessary action, and I urge you to support the committee's recommendation.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Lincoln Park, Delegate Suzore.

MR. SUZORE: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the committee. On page 1, lines 15 and 16, the sentence that reads "They shall be nominated by party convention and elected at large as prescribed by law." It confuses me as to whether or not the intent of the committee was to have them elected on a partisan or a nonpartisan ballot and, if they did wish to do so, why is it not spelled out or something spelled out to indicate more clearly the intent of that sentence?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Lincoln Park will yield to me for reply, I can assure Mr. Suzore that the intent of the committee on education was very definitely that they would be nominated and elected on partisan tickets, Mr. Suzore. We think that our language is adequate, because, by requiring their nomination by party convention, they would then be nominated on partisan tickets, and when we say "elected by law" we are referring more to the fact that we leave it to the legislature to determine the method of their election; such as, for example, we suggest that 2 be elected every 2 years on a staggered basis, but we think that is a detail the legislature could handle.

MR. SUZORE: I think that is sufficient. It is now on the record as to the intent of the committee.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Sheridan, Delegate Gover.

MR. GOVER: Mr. Chairman, Delegate Romney, I have a question that I would like to have brought out at this time. It is a little unclear in my mind, since it seems that the governor, as busy as he is, shouldn't be bothered by being a member of the committee other than ex officio, and I would like the explanation from the committee on education as to why he was made a regular member of the committee and not just an ex officio member.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Romney, do you care to reply?

MR. ROMNEY: Well, actually, there were many members on the committee who felt that the board of education might as well be appointed by the governor because of the fact that education represents such an important part of the state's total expenditures, and, after all, the governor has a considerable responsibility for the total operation of the administrative side of our state government. Now, it was felt that the governor should be tied in as closely as possible with this board, and he should have an effective voice on the board because of the important part he has in the educational program of the state. We considered the question of making him just an ex officio member but concluded that this represented a much more proper relationship between the governor and the board of education, and that there should be as close a relationship is indicated by his voting power on the board.

MR. GOVER: Well, thank you, Delegate Romney. I am not quite in sympathy with that thought, but still it is a good explanation of it.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Gladwin, Delegate Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman and fellow members of the committee, I would like to direct a question to the chairman of the education committee or one of the members who might like to answer it. I would like to refer him to this proposal which we are currently discussing, line 9, the words "and to the people." It says in the proposal that:

> In addition, it shall serve as the general planning and coordinating body for all public education in the state and shall provide advice to the legislature and to the people as to the amount of state support required.

My question is this, Mr. Chairman of the committee: just exactly what did you have in mind when you put these 4 words in "and to the people"?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Chairman Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: In reply to the gentleman from Gladwin, Mr. Chairman, I will say that it means just what it says. We feel that the state board of education is such an important institution, and has a peculiar knowledge of the needs of education at all levels in the state of Michigan, that they should make their recommendations not only to the legislature but, also, should give them the widest possible publicity throughout the state, so that the people of Michigan can see and decide for themselves as to whether or not the suggestions of the state board are being carried out and, perhaps more important, should have confidence in the group of—we hope—public spirited, dispassionate persons whose whole souled aim is only to see that the great needs of public education in the state are adequately provided for and financed.

MR. HUBBS: I would like to compliment the chairman on his regard for education, and the members of the committee on their noble objectives which I thoroughly agree with; however, I am just a little bit afraid that by putting these words in here we are evidencing a distrust of the legislature, who are supposed to be the representatives of the people, in suggesting that the board of education might find it necessary to circumvent the legislature to attain their ends. I feel myself that these 4 words could possibly be eliminated and that any selling job that had to be done to the public could be done by the public press and that when the board of education makes their request to the legislature they are talking to the people, to the people who are the legislature, and I frankly feel that this could result in the expenditure of the tax money to lobby the public from the board of education and bypass the legislature. I do not think that these 4 words should be retained in this article.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Chairman Bentley, do you wish to comment? The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Iverson.

MR. IVERSON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the chairman of the committee or to Mr. Romney. The state board of education is given supervisory control over all state institutions with the exception of colleges and universities. My question is this: does this conflict with Committee Proposal 98 which we just passed, on page 3, which provides:

> The legislature shall provide by law for a state board for public community and junior colleges, which shall advise the state board of education concerning general supervision, planning for such colleges and requests for annual appropriations. . . .

It seems to me there might be a conflict there.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe, Mr. Iverson, that there is a conflict, but if the matter of state institutions is what is bothering the gentleman, I would like to ask the lady from Detroit, Miss Hart, to comment, because I believe that she was very active in the drafting of this particular language. Am I not correct, Miss Hart?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Miss Hart.

MISS HART: I have been concerned that the superintendent of public instruction and the state board be concerned with education within the vocational schools, that they have supervision in the institutions of mental health as far as education is concerned, and this is what we were talking about when we spoke of the institutions, specifically, education within state institutions.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Iverson.

MR. IVERSON: Well, that does not quite answer my question. In section a you do not give them supervisory control over colleges and universities. Now, in Committee Proposal 98 you do, apparently, give them supervision over community colleges or junior colleges. Then my question was: is there a conflict?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Romney.

MR. ROMNEY: Mr. Chairman, if I may comment, Mr. Iverson, on this point. Actually, the board of education does have general supervision over community colleges. It does not insofar as state matters are concerned except to the extent that the direct operating control is with the local board. Now, in the case of the universities, the state board of education does not have general supervision and there is no conflict here so far as I can see.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Iverson, I think if you will read the sentence in its context ". . . including adult education and instructional programs in state institutions other than colleges and universities. . . ." In other words, it is referring to adult education and instructional programs. I do not believe that we contemplated within Committee Proposal 98, to which you refer, that we were going to get into the question of instructional programs in the community colleges and, therefore, I would see no conflict.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair will recognize Delegate Faxon somewhat out of order. There are 3 or 4 others, but apparently you want to answer this question?

MR. FAXON: Yes, I just want to respond to this, too. I think that Committee Proposal 98 says that the state board for junior colleges will advise the state board of education, so that it is implied within the state board of education, as Mr. Romney said, that they do make the overall policy and determinations, but that in Committee Proposal 98 the state board would simply have advice from this other board as to how they might proceed here. But I think the state board does have the overall responsibility for the junior community colleges. I think that may be what his point was.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Downs, next.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman, I believe there is an amendment pending, and I would rather save my chance to speak in favor of that. May I do that?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Certainly. The Chair recognizes the delegate from Taylor, Delegate Ford.

MR. FORD: I have a question for Mr. Romney with respect to the rationale of the committee recommendation that you cited to us, Mr. Romney, on page 403. It starts on page 402:

> The governor shall be a member of the state board of education in order to provide a close relationship between the executive branch of state government and the field of public education. It is understood that such a membership would carry the right to speak and to vote at all board meetings.

Now the next language is:

> Such membership could be deputized but without the right to vote.

My first question is what language in the proposed section of the constitution would authorize any member of the board of education to deputize his membership to someone else?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Romney.

MR. ROMNEY: Mr. Chairman and Mr. Ford, there is no specific language in the committee proposal that does this, but the committee felt that it could be accomplished by making this clear in the committee report, and because there was a desire to make it possible for the governor to have a deputy attend the meeting if that became necessary, it was provided for in this way. Now, it was the judgment of those advising the committee, as well as the members of the committee, that by making this provision in the report it would be so understood and would be permitted.

MR. FORD: It being the feeling of the committee that the language of the explanation would delegate or permit the delegation of authority short of the authority to vote, what would you conceive the function of the deputy to be? Would he actually render opinions and make pronouncements as a member of the board, as if he were standing in the governor's shoes?

MR. ROMNEY: No, he could simply keep the governor informed on those occasions when the governor might not be able to be present. It was felt, however, that the primary consideration was to make it possible for the governor to have a direct tie in with an activity that represents 50 per cent of total state expenditures and that he should be able to have a direct knowledge of the basic facts and considerations entering into such an important segment of total state activity. Now, recognizing that there might be occasions when the governor could not attend meetings personally because of his other duties, it was felt that in his particular case it would be desirable to indicate intention that he be permitted to be represented by a deputy, not for the purpose of voting as is indicated here but, rather, for the purpose of being informed and helping to keep the governor informed.

MR. FORD: Would it be possible with this board as you have constituted it for the governor to be unofficially represented by a person who could report to him without making that person a member of the committee, or the board, rather?

MR. ROMNEY: Well, I assume that he could secure such a right from the board of education; however, the committee members felt that it was desirable to make this right to be represented by a deputy clear and to embody it in the committee report. It was felt that this was a better and more specific way in which to handle it.

MR. FORD: Then, I take it that this language in the committee recommendation, although it says "deputized but without the right to vote," merely means as an observer and not as a person who would speak for the governor as a member of the committee even though he didn't vote?

MR. ROMNEY: Well, that was my impression when the committee put this in. Other committee members may want to express themselves on this point. This was something that, as far as I know, the committee members generally felt was a desirable thing to provide for.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Garden City, Delegate Ted Brown.

MR. T. S. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, perhaps just a word of explanation concerning section a, here, would be in order. Since there has been some questions about it, I would like to explain it from my point of view, which I think makes sense to me at least, and add my concurrence to what Delegate Romney has said.

If there is anything in this constitution to date which is demanding of superlatives, I think it is the terminology contained in the first paragraph of section a. Now, Dr. Hannah delivered the committee of a very fine address concerning the status of education in this country and especially in the state of Michigan, and the future of education and the gravity of the situations that we are now confronted with. He came up with some very interesting figures which stunned me and, I think, will stun you. One of these, I think, is that the total scope of man's knowledge doubles now every 6 years. It used to be that man's knowledge doubled every thousand years, every hundreds of years. Now we are doubling our total knowledge every 6 years.

It is insufficient in this day and age to have the fragmented type of planning or lack of planning that we have in the present constitution and this gave rise to the idea of the super board. This board, of course, was considered by the people representing the larger universities in this state and they were all in accordance with the fact that there should be some sort of preplanning without detracting from their individual autonomy or the destruction of their traditional way of operating their particular universities. It would also eliminate, I think, the cat and dog fight that occurs in the legislature between the various universities applying for "X" dollars and so on and the devil take the hindmost. This is a very noble and a very far reaching and a very progressive thing that we are doing here in the first paragraph of section a.

In reference to the second paragraph of section a, Delegate Ford had some questions regarding the governor, and I think that the fact that the governor is indicated as a member of the board represents a compromise on the committee between the position of having the governor appoint the board completely and not having the governor have any direct hand in the action of the board. Since the board is elected on a statewide basis and, we assume, on a partisan ballot, we have met the requirement of the people's interest, and therefore I certainly find no harm if the governor were a member of the board.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: I just want to join in support of the committee report. I think that everything has really been said, that this is a tremendous forward look in the overall structure of education in Michigan. It is something that I go back and talk about with great pride as an indication of our willingness to establish a board that will have this overall look and one that will be able to plan adequately for our future needs. So I wanted the members of this committee to know that this was a result of unanimous action in our subcommittee and, I believe, in our full committee.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Niles, Delegate Boothby.

MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment on the secretary's desk which I would like to have read at this time.

SECRETARY CHASE: Messrs. Boothby, Brake, Dean Doty, Leibrand, Finch, Sharpe, Dehnke, Miss Donnelly and Mr. Downs offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 16, after "law.", by striking out the balance of the line and all of line 17, which reads, "The governor shall also be a member of the state board of education."

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Boothby.

MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, this amendment, as the secretary has indicated, would delete from the recommendation of the committee on education the provision which would place the governor on the board of education. This caused some concern in my mind because, traditionally in this state and in many other states we have tried to remove the education field as far as possible from politics and particularly from partisan politics. It seems to me that by placing the governor of the state, who is actually a political creature and must be so, on the board of education that you would be creating a situation where education might very well be placed in a political arena.

Another thought occurred to me, also, along this line: the fact that the board of education is to be composed of a group of citizens, as the committee has indicated, from all over the state, of outstanding ability in the education field. It seems to me that each one of these people should speak with some effective independent voice on the board. I have been to a certain degree worried that if you place the governor, the governor of the state, a person on whom the eyes of the state are fixed, on the board, that he would become the dominant force on that particular educational board, and the other 8 individuals, having possibly a greater amount of background in education, might not have their word given the full attention which it should.

I would also suggest that the governor would have 2 particularly important areas of concern if he were on the board. One would be in the area of policy, and I have grave questions in my mind whether the governor of the state of Michigan would have the proper time to give the consideration that he should to the policies of the board of education. It was pointed out by the committee on education that the function of this board is to be similar to the local boards of education. I have grave concern whether the governor of the state can give as much consideration as he should on the matters of policy. The second and probably the primary function which the governor would have on this board, and probably the reason why this is in the report, because it was indicated this was a compromise, was that he would have some say on the appointment of the superintendent of public instruction. So what you actually have, in effect, is indirectly the appointment of the superintendent of public instruction by the governor.

Another fact which I think should be pointed out is that the governor does have certain methods by which he can make his influence felt. I do recognize that education consumes 50 per cent of the taxpayers' funds. However, the governor has many means by which he can assert his influence in a very direct manner. One way is by the party convention and being the titular head of the party. We see by the report that the members of the board will receive nomination by their political party. So he has a great deal of influence on the creation of the board. Then he can submit, by various methods, bills to the legislature. He also has the method of a message to the legislature whereby he can incorporate his thoughts in a very direct manner to the legislative body by the message to the legislature. Another way in which the governor can assert his influence is by his very complete access to public communication. So I say that the governor of the states does have a very direct influence on any educational policy that might come out of the board of education.

Another further point is that the superintendent of public instruction, under the plan coming out of the committee, is a staff officer to the governor and serves on his administrative board. So you do have a liaison officer directly from the governor's office on the board of education who can speak for him. The reason for the governor being placed on the board of education was stated on the bottom of page 402 to be that:

> The governor shall be a member of the state board of education in order to provide a close relationship between the executive branch of state government and the field of public education.

Now I submit that any problem that might arise can be adequately taken care of—and the committee actually pointed out the way by which it could be taken care of—and that is in the statement made near the end of the first line on the last paragraph on the bottom of page 403, on the left hand side where it says:

> This section also recognizes the superintendent of public instruction as administrative head of the state department of education. It is the intent of this committee that the superintendent of public instruction be considered the chief educational officer of the state and as such a staff officer to the governor and on his administrative board.

I say the governor has many means by which he can assert his influence and particularly through the superintendent of public instruction, who is contemplated to be a staff officer of the governor and would serve on his administrative board.

I would suggest 3 things in your contemplation of this amendment. I would ask that you allow the superintendent of public instruction to be actually the chief educational officer of the state. I say if the governor is on this board, even though he is not designated as the chief spokesman on the board of education, he would become so, and he would certainly cause the superintendent of public instruction to be relegated to a weaker position. I would say that we must keep education to the greatest extent possible out of politics. I would say that we must remove from the board of education any one person having any particular dominance over that body.

I urge the support of this amendment which would strike from the body of the proposal the words which would allow the governor of the state to serve on the board of education.

At this time I would like to yield to one of my cosponsors of this amendment, Mr. Brake.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes Delegate Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the committee, Mr. Boothby has covered much of what I had intended to say, but I would like to try to analyze this situation just a little bit further. In the ordinary course of events, the 8 members of this board are going to be professional educators. That has been the history of the board of education in the past, and I am sure it will be in the future and that it should be in the future. The governor will not be a professional educator. Professional educators don't know enough about politics to get elected governor. (laughter) I found out not too long ago that I didn't either. (laughter)

That being true, the governor being a politician, as a governor must be a politician, the other members of the board being professional educators, as they should be, my first premise is that the 8 members of the board should lay down the policy to be followed by this board. They should make the decisions. They know what the problems are. They should be the dominant force.

It seems to me that while Mr. Romney didn't say so that one of the principal objectives in the set up that has been suggested to us here is that of moving the department of education a little bit further away from the political arena. The board is elective. They pick the superintendent of public instruction instead of having him elected by the people as in the past. Then the committee turns right around and comes right straight back toward the political arena by putting the chief politician of the state on the board.

My first premise is that the board ought to run this show. Now I would like to inquire as to whether that will be true with the governor on the board. Mr. Boothby has said that the governor must be a dominant figure. That is the nature of governors. If he doesn't dominate every activity into which he goes, he will be branded as weak and ineffective. When the governor goes to a wedding, he gets more attention than the bride gets. (laughter) He will have more attention on this board than any 4 or 5 members on it; and, since they are professionals or will be professionals and he not a professional, I think that is not good.

Just one other angle, and Mr. Boothby hinted at that, also: that is the matter of the communications from the board to the public. It is highly important that the public know what the problems are, what the board is doing about them, what their plans are for the future. The board will get more publicity with the governor on it than without his being on it; there is no question about that. But will it be the information that the public ought to be receiving in connection with the board? A governor's desire for publicity is irresistible and insatiable. That is all right; I am not complaining about it at all. He has to have it; it is a necessity; he has got to be in the papers every day. If he doesn't get the publicity, he doesn't come back the next term. So, if he is on that board, the information that the public gets is going to be the information that the governor gets out, the information of his viewpoint, his slant at everything that comes before the board. When the reporters want to know about the board, it will be the governor they contact. I think that is not good. I think this ought to come from the board itself, the people who are professionals and who understand the educational problems. It seems to me that the governor just does not belong on this board.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the lady from Livonia, Delegate Conklin.

MRS. CONKLIN: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that I am not leaving my committee, because, although this came out in the committee report, I did vote against it in committee and I would like to support the amendment, being one of the few here who didn't have their names on the amendment when it was submitted, and I would like to support it.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I rise in support of the amendment, and I would like, if it is in order, to ask the committee chairman a question. First of all, I would like to say that I believe the committee has done an excellent job in strengthening the whole concept of the board of education, and I want to say that I am in wholehearted agreement through line 16 and wish to make that very clear. What I am concerned with, Mr. Chairman, is with the governor being put on the board the same as the 8 other members; is there a danger that he would either be downgraded to be 1 of 9 members or else, as other speakers have said, would tend to dominate the other 8 and thereby weaken a good governmental structure? I wonder if the chairman has any comments to make?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Well, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Detroit—I want to make some comments on the amendment myself a little bit later—but in specific reply to the gentleman from Detroit, I would say that it is certainly not the feeling or the belief of the committee on education that the governor would necessarily dominate this board. If we felt there was any possibility of dominance, we would never have included this particular sentence.

Now, as to the possibility of whether or not he might be "down graded," I do think the governor would be sitting on the board for many reasons, but I will say—and I would hope very much—that while he was on the board he would be just 1 of the 9 board members and would not be in a position superior or inferior, so far as that is concerned. Perhaps, Mr. Downs, rather than saying the governor would be down graded to the level of the other board members, maybe the better explanation would be that the other board members would be up graded in this particular instance to the status of the governor.

MR. DOWNS: Well, thank you. I appreciate the chairman's remarks. I do feel when he said it was the hope—and I am sure he expressed the hope of the committee—I am a little more inclined to be concerned that, people being what they are, this would not end up with the independence we now have in the educational system. I again speak in favor of the amendment to delete the last sentence. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Grand Rapids, Delegate Martin.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Chairman, I looked on this addition of the governor to the state board of education with some doubt in my own mind, in the first instance.

I have given it considerable thought since then and tried to recall what effect the presence of the governor had, for example, on the state administrative board. At the time that I had anything to do with it, of course, there were a majority of one party on the board and the governor was of another party; but it didn't seem to me that, in general, insofar as discussion was concerned and consideration of the matters which came up, that the governor made any more news, so to speak, or dominated the public picture of what was going on on that board than any other member of the board. To the extent that he was vocal, of course, he perhaps got some additional press copy, but other members of the board were vocal too, as I am sure the members of this board would be, and they received as much attention from the press as the governor did. So that it doesn't seem to me that his presence on this board means that in any way he would dominate the board.

On the other hand, his presence on the board does give the board additional importance and prestige because he is the principal officer of the state, and his presence there and his knowledge of the problems that the board is taking up seems to me to be very important. He has to make recommendations to the legislature in regard to what is going on with regard to the educational system, and this seems to me the very best way for the governor to obtain his information, that is, by a membership on the board where these problems are being discussed and considered.

So that, on reflection, it seems to me that committee has made a wise choice and has made a sound proposal which will benefit the state board of education and give it increased prestige and standing.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Garden City, Delegate T. S. Brown.

MR. T. S. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. To delete the governor's position on the state board of education, I think is sound.

In our committee, originally, there were, I would say, 2 factions in regard to this particular problem. There were those of us who felt we had to save the right of partisan elections of the members of the state board rather than submit to the wishes of the other faction which wished to have the governor appoint everyone all the way down the line. At one stage in our deliberations and voting, we were having the governor appoint the members of the board of education and also the superintendent. The last sentence including the governor on the state board of education was accepted by us—I am speaking of a few of us; and Miss Conklin, I think, was in that group—as a compromise situation.

I am very gratified to see that there is genuine desire to eliminate this type of interference in the educational process and am very happy to desert what I think is now a sinking ship, because there simply wasn't any reason for it. It was one of these compromises arrived at in a very crucial moment and everyone felt that—let's say this: I personally felt that by accepting this particular thing at this time, I would assure that the members of the board of education, at least, were elected; and this was the primary thing I was concerned with.

I, therefore, support the amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is now on this pending amendment by the distinguished group of bipartisan sponsors here. Chairman Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, I think, first of all, Mr. Chairman,—and I am not trying to be facetious—but when my friend from Garden City talks about a sinking ship, he should reflect on the choice of his words because there is an old proverb about those who are first to leave a sinking ship. (laughter and applause) I'm sorry, but I couldn't resist that one.

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, the committee, as has been indicated by those members who have spoken on this question, has given this matter a lot of serious consideration and thought during our deliberations. I appreciate the position and the remarks of the sponsors, the cosponsors of the amendment. I was interested in hearing the names read off, particularly the last one.

I said some time ago, if I recall, that some future historians were going to have a field day figuring out the interesting and fascinating coalitions that have arisen or will arise as the result of this convention but, seriously, Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the committee of the whole, we did have, I think, at least the majority of us on the committee on education, good and sound reasons for making the governor a ninth member. As I indicated to the gentleman from Detroit, we were not trying to down grade the governor. We were not trying to, on the other hand, make of him a dominant person or individual. Rather, we were attempting as best we could to, in the first place, point out the tremendous importance with which we view the activities and the future competence and jurisdiction of the state board of education. We were trying by placing the governor on the state board of education to provide a direct tie in with the executive branch of the state government. By placing the governor on the board we felt very sincerely that the governor could make a very real contribution through his knowledge of the budget. through his influence on the board. On the other hand, we felt at the same time that by being on the board and by being, we hoped, privileged to attend many of its meetings, the governor in turn could perhaps become more aware of the great needs of public education at all levels in this state than he would normally have time for.

I say again I think that we had a very sound and a very constructive reason for making the governor a member of the board of education. We do not believe that it will inject partisan politics unnecessarily because, after all, he will only be 1 of 9 members, but by placing him on the board I believe we will highlight the importance with which we view the state board of education for which everybody seems to have praised us, as far as our new comprehension of the board is concerned. We do trust that before voting on the pending amendment, you will try to see the reasons of the committee on education, that is the majority of its membership, in making him a member of this board and will keep in mind particularly the words of Mr. Romney, who said—and I subscribe to them wholeheartedly—that the activities of this board as we have conceived them on the committee on education could very well save the state more money than this entire convention has cost us.

That is the way we have visualized the board. That is the way we have set it up. That is the way we have created it. I hope very much that you will not diminish or infringe upon the picture of the board as we have so fashioned it and formulated it in the committee and as we present it to you here. I hope that you will support the committee and will vote down this amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ann Arbor, Delegate Pollock.

MR. POLLOCK: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I find myself in the position of supporting the committee and, particularly, of agreeing with the very cogent argument which Delegate Martin has just made. I see no reason why we should view this very original suggestion of the committee—I don't care whether it was a compromise or not. It seems to me to be an original contribution to the relationship between the regular political processes of the state and the educational system.

I think instead of thinking of it merely in political terms: what it will do to the governor and what it will do to the board of education in political terms—that we should think, rather, that today we are in an administrative era. Politics may be ¼ of it, but about 3/4 of it is administration. The problem of education being such a great one and being one of the major problems confronting the governor, it seems to me this is a very happy solution of relating the governor, with his overriding responsibility for the financial soundness of this state and for the administrative harmony of the whole state structure, to allow the governor, as much as he wishes, to be associated with the work of this board and, at any rate, to be exposed to the board and have some relationship to it.

I personally would have preferred it if the committee had had the superintendent of public instruction appointed by the governor. I found that lots of educational people don't agree with me on this, but viewing it again from the point of view of the sound administration of the state, I think this would be a much better way than to have him appointed by the board; but since the committee in its wisdom has seen fit to have him appointed by the board, I think it is a perfectly logical corollary, viewing the rest of the state structure separate from education, to make that link between the board and the governor.

I think, therefore, that the committee view should prevail and should prevail on the basis not merely that it is a new and original idea and a helpful one to bring together educational expenditures with other expenditures but, also, to give the governor in a sense a group of expert persons whose principal interest is education with whom to advise on matters involving educational policy.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: I rise to second Dr. Pollock's statement here. As a member of the subcommittee and the committee which this came from, I think we have had it mentioned several times now the question that this has been a compromise and, of course, as if the word "compromise" has some connotation that it is not good for either side. I think we ought to understand exactly what the difference was to see how this has sort of brought us together. I refer specifically now to the day that this took place in the committee, the subcommittee had come in with the report that the superintendent be selected by the governor with the advice and consent of the state board of education. We bandied this about in the subcommittee for, I don't know, a few hours, and during the discussion of why this ought to be involved, why the governor and the educational function of the state ought to be more closely allied, many arguments were advanced: what you have heard from Mr. Bentley and from Dr. Pollock that because education is such a major function in this state, the governor ought to in some way have some responsibility for its administration, at least insofar as his office is concerned. So, after all these arguments had been advanced and the vote was taken, that was defeated by one vote on the committee, Dr. Hannah, who was present at that time, made the suggestion that since we were so concerned and since many members of the committee had expressed the concern that the governor ought to participate in the educational administration of the state and ought to participate in the policymaking function of the board to some extent—because it would be his job to implement this—that he made the suggestion that we put the governor on the state board of education. At that time, many members of the committee felt that this was a wedding together of 2 divergent factors, that this made for a more solid and unified educational structure in putting the governor into this educational framework.

I think that the analogy that has been made by Delegate Martin is well taken that the governor, as a member of the state ad board, is able to participate fully in the decisions of that board, and I think that the presence of the governor on the state board of education will give status to that board. It will show to the people of the state the urgent need of education and the overall responsibility that education has. I think it is a step forward in bringing this together, and in so doing I think that the committee has acted wisely, and I support the committee report and speak against the amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Fennville, Vice President Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman and members of this committee, I rise in support of the amendment now before you and speak to it because on some things, I suppose, we all feel strongly and this is a matter about which I have a strong feeling. I am concerned about the relationship of the governor to his entire administration. Somehow or other I never have been able to see the logic or the wisdom in making the governor a member, if you please, of the several departments which are under him.

Now this state board of education and its superintendent of public instruction which will be its executive officer is a department in the state government. True it is that this matter of education is one which, according to Mr. Romney, will relate to the expenditure of at least ½ the budget in the state, but that is only ½ the budget. There is another ½ that relates to a lot of other things. The governor, if he can logically be made a member of the board of education, logically should be made a member of all the other departments under him, and I don't think that that is what we want. I understand that the idea was to build a strong governor in this state, and if we have a strong governor he has got to be above all these departments.

I daresay that I can imagine that some governors might very well be embarrassed by their membership on this board of education. They would much prefer, I am sure, not to be a member of it but to require it to answer to him in writing just as other departments must be required to answer to him in writing. His position as a voting member of this board and with not even the chairmanship thereof cannot in my mind but degrade him.

If the other course of action actually comes about as has been described here, he will so completely dominate the board that it will lose its proper function and become merely his adjunct. Now whether he dominates the board or whether he becomes embarrassed by it probably will depend upon the particular governor. Some men will approach the office differently than others. Some men will approach the office of governor in greater degrees of strength both political and popular than would others. Some governors will become governor with a greater sense of direction and a dominance that other governors will not have. Now it doesn't seem to me to be wise at all to make the governor a member of this board any more than it would be wise to make him a member of any of the other departments over whom he presides.

Mr. Martin made reference to the ad board, made mention of the fact that the governor was a member of the ad board and that there were other members of it. But it has always been my understanding that the governor was the chairman of the ad board, and that while in the early days under Governor Groesbeck the governor had an absolute veto over the ad board action, in later days that he doesn't have the veto, nevertheless he is the chairman. I am sure that in the opinion of most of the people of Michigan he is the dominant member of the ad board. I am sure that most of the people of Michigan have always thought of the state administrative board as kind of the governor's cabinet and that the governor presided and actually dominated that board. Now, it may have been, in a couple of terms back when Mr. Martin was a member of the ad board, that that was not true, but in the long run and in the ordinary course of things the governor as chairman of the administrative board will dominate it. I am sure that he will dominate this state board of education in the same way, and I do not think he should.

If this is a compromise coming out of the committee of education, it just goes to prove in my mind, at least, that not all compromises are good; they are unfortunate. I hope that even though the committee found it necessary to compromise in order to get something resolved and out on the floor that the floor will not feel obligated to accept this compromise, because the compromise of placing the governor on the state board of education as simply a common member thereof is very poor policy indeed. In fact, I cannot believe—every time that the governor of Michigan comes into this room or before any other department or any other group of citizens in this state, we all stand in honor of the office. We give him that recognition. He could not come into the state board of education without ipso facto by reason of his presence becoming the chairman, at least for the time while he was there. The position of his office would demand it. Whether or not he were legally the chairman, he would actually be the chairman.

As I say, I can imagine that a good many times the governors of Michigan would be embarrassed, perhaps, by their membership on that board because they would not, perhaps, feel quite as free to call the board to answer to them as they would to require other departments to answer. He should require that department of education to answer just as he requires the department of conservation or the department of state or the department of the treasury or anything else.

I rise in support of this amendment and I think it would be a poor decision indeed if this constitutional convention should go to the people with a provision in a constitution which would reduce the governor to a mere member of the board of education.

MR. ROMNEY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes Delegate Romney, for a reply.

MR. ROMNEY: I must admit that I am somewhat confused by some of the statements that are being made. Mr. Hutchinson just closed with the idea that the governor would be a mere member of the board of education and yet in the course of his discussion he talked about the governor dominating the board of education. Now I submit he cannot be both at the same time. He has either got to be just a member of the board of education or, as Mr. Hutchinson said, he is going to dominate it.

I don't think he is going to dominate it, and I want to tell you why. Number one, while this particular form is novel in that the governor is the only administrative officer on the board of education other than the members of the board of education, this is not completely new. The state of California has established new educational boards in the last 2 years after 2 years of study and they have made both the governor and the lieutenant governor members of these boards of education. Now this is not something completely new.

I think it is important to understand exactly what we are talking about here, and I don't think it has been completely stated yet. This elected board is an independent board. The men elected to that board are elected by the people of this state, and as such they are in a position to take an independent position as members of that board. This independent board of 8 has been given the authority and the responsibility of appointing the superintendent of public instruction.

I was one of those on the committee who shared the view expressed by Dr. Pollock that the sound approach would have been to permit the governor to appoint the superintendent of public instruction, so that the official member of his "family" responsible for education would be a man who had some responsibility to him. Now this did not happen. It was the decision of the committee to make the board of education completely independent of the governor by their separate election and, also, to make the superintendent of public instruction completely independent of the governor by permitting the board of education to appoint the superintendent of public instruction.

There were those on the committee who took the position that education is a fourth branch of government and that we should recognize that there are 4 branches of government and not 3, that education should be set up independently of the rest of the administrative and executive branch of the state government, and should be independent of the legislative and the judicial. I personally do not subscribe to this viewpoint. I do not believe there are 4 branches of state government. I believe that education insofar as it relates to the administrative and the executive part of the state government is an area for which the governor has some degree of important responsibility, and he is so held by the people of this state. Certainly, the governor is the primary person responsible for submitting the budget of this state, and 50 per cent of that budget is to cover educational expenditures.

If you approve the amendment that you are proposing, what you are proposing to do is to divorce the governor from any direct relationship or responsibility for the educational program of this state. Now this talk about his being able to require things in writing and to handle this matter in some other way is contradicted by the experience cited by Mr. Martin and others where independently elected members of the administrative board have gone their own course; and this board has purposely been put in the position where they are independent and they have purposely been put in the position where they can appoint the superintendent of public instruction, so that the superintendent of public instruction can be taken out of politics to the maximum extent possible. This is the minimum relationship between the governor, and his total administrative and executive responsibility, and the educational program of this state.

If you support this amendment, in effect you are saying that the governor of this state should have no administrative or executive responsibility. You deprive him of even the expert advice of people responsible to him in any way for the educational program of this state, because the members of the board of education aren't responsible to him in any way, the superintendent of public instruction is not responsible to him in any way, and you would divest him of the help he needs in the discharge of his responsibility. All that this proposal makes possible is for the governor to be 1 of 9 in shaping these policies, being familiar with them, and 1 of 9 in the appointment of the superintendent of public instruction, who is to be a member of his own official family.

I think the key question here, the key question here is whether you want to divorce education completely from the governor's administrative and executive responsibility. I think this would be a mistake. I think it is important in terms of the proper conduct of state government; it is important in terms of the future of education in this state that there be a tie in here that avoids domination. I want to close by saying that Mr. Hutchinson cannot be right on both points and neither can Mr. Brake. In other words, the governor cannot both be just a humble member of this board and dominate this board at the same time, because that is a patent inconsistency.

MR. BRAKE: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Unless you have a very preferred position here to answer a propounded question, you would be about number 5 on the waiting list. Are you offering an amendment? You are one of the sponsors of the pending amendment. The next person to be recognized is the delegate from Garden City, T. S. Brown.

MR. T. S. BROWN: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, we have come very close to home on this particular issue, very close to home. When I mentioned my last time here at this microphone that we—certain of us as members of the education committee—were subjected to pressure by those people who wanted the governor to appoint everyone all the way down the line, I was not apparently whistling "Dixie" because we have just heard an exponent of that particular point of view.

Now, speaking for us "rats", in answer to Chairman Bentley, and also in answer to Dr. Pollock, I think what has happened here in the objections to the present amendment is that we are confusing substance with form. The substance of the matter is that the governor is the governor is the governor is the governor, and the board of education is the board of education, et cetera. Whether or not the governor is a member of the board of education does not add or detract from his powers to influence or take responsibility for their actions. If we are going to use an artifact of placing the governor on a board to insure that he either dominates or becomes subservient to, we are doing an illogical thing.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pontiac, Delegate Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, to be absolutely consistent, I must rise in support of the amendment. I am a member of this committee on education and I voted against the governor being a member of the board, and I also voted against him having the right to vote. And I agree with Dr. Pollock and I agree with Mr. Romney that there should be some connection between the governor's office and the education department. I have offered an amendment in the next section to accomplish what they had desired, and that is to allow the governor to appoint the superintendent of public instruction. I think that this is the fairest way to get this line between the governor's office and the education department. Dr. Pollock thought that was the best. Mr. Romney said that was his position, but this was the compromise. I still think it is the best. I am absolutely opposed to the governor being on the state board of education, and I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, Mr. Bentley, if he would be willing to pass over section a and go to section b to see if this committee agrees with us: that the governor should appoint the superintendent of public instruction with the consent of the state board of education, so the educational people will have the veto power, and then we can decide the other issue once and for all.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is making a motion to pass section a at this time, I see no particular objection to it.

MR. KUHN: Then I so move, Mr. Chairman. I make the motion that we should pass over section a and go to b.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The motion is in order.

The question is on the motion by Delegate Kuhn to pass section a temporarily and go on to section b. Are you ready to vote? All in favor of the Kuhn motion signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

The motion does not prevail.

A DELEGATE: Division.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: There has been a demand for division. Is the demand seconded?

SECRETARY CHASE: A sufficient number.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is now on the motion that we pass section a temporarily and proceed with consideration of section b. We will vote using the machine and those in favor will vote aye; those opposed will vote no. The question is on the motion by the delegate from Pontiac, Mr. Kuhn, that we pass section a temporarily and proceed to the consideration of section b. Of course, there is a pending amendment, as you are aware, to section a, which will be to that part of this section. Sixty seconds having elapsed, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote. The secretary will announce the ballot.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the motion of Mr. Kuhn to pass section a temporarily and proceed with consideration of section b, the yeas are 46, the nays are 62.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The motion does not prevail. The question is now on the amendment by Delegate Boothby and 8 others. The next person on the list is the gentleman from Marshall, Delegate Hatch.

MR. HATCH: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to Chairman Bentley, who also was a member of the committee on executive branch. In Committee Proposal 71 by the executive branch, the committee has recommended that executive agencies, boards, commissions, et cetera, be reorganized into not more than 20 principal departments. Now, it would be my assumption that education would be one of those principal departments. I wonder if the chairman of the education committee would agree with that?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Most completely.

MR. HATCH: Now, in section d of the same proposal, it is provided, "Each principal department shall be under the supervision of the governor." My question is, if a department of education is to be one of the principal departments and if the principal departments are to be under the supervision of the governor, how then, can he supervise himself?

MR. BENTLEY: I will be glad to reply to the gentleman from Marshall that we did not have reference, of course, specifically to the state board of education. I think insofar as we were seized of this matter, we were referring to the department of education, which is one of the 20 departments.

MR. HATCH: Would it not be true that the governor by virtue of his authority as governor and by virtue of the language in Committee Proposal 71, if adopted by the convention, would have general supervisory power over the department of education?

MR. BENTLEY: The department of education, yes.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the lady from Highland Park, Delegate Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: I rise to support the amendment, naturally, since my name is on it. In an attempt to analyze this, to me it seems the big argument for having the governor on this committee is because of his knowledge of the budget and his knowledge of the amount of money that is going to be involved. Well, maybe it is not particularly pertinent or deep, but the youth of the state is going to be involved here and I think the parents are deeply concerned, and maybe they should be on it too. for the reason that they are that way.

I am sure, though, that basically we are more interested in the kind of education that is going to come out of this. Last week we voted to increase the board of education for other institutions, to allow more members on the theory that Dr. Hannah said it was more important that people understand the functions of the board, that they cannot get to know them quickly, that they must have a period of time to be on them to function most adequately. I am sure that both parties in selecting their nominees for the office will do their best to get the most qualified people to represent them on this board, but I am also sure that they are not going to select one of the most qualified educators to be governor of the state, because this isn't the function that he must have the greatest asset and the greatest ability in.

To me to put a governor on this board would be in the long run to weaken the board, because of the lack of experience that this individual would bring to that board. The fact that he would not be there frequently, he would send a deputy, would also indicate that it isn't considered to be very serious that the governor be there.

Now in answer to the question that Mr. Romney posed to Mr. Hutchinson as to how we could have him influence the board in some instances and yet not in the other, and to be an improper and incomplete and illogical argument, I would support Mr. Hutchinson's argument by saying I think he missed the point that he said it would depend upon the governor, and how he was elected, and the number of people elected from that party on the board, and the personality of that governor. In many instances we could have a very weak governor on the board or we could have a strong governor on the board, but in neither instance would we primarily have an educator on that board in the form of a governor.

I therefore recommend supporting the amendment to this proposal in hopes that this will also strengthen our educational system which is most vital.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Stanton, Delegate Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, it seems to me that Mr. Romney's view of how this would work is a very long distance view. Some of us have been around close enough to know how these things actually work out, and certainly they are going to work out with the governor dominating this board. In the ordinary course of events, the board will in the majority be members of the governor's party. That will not always be true probably, but generally. If he is strong enough to win, he will carry most of the ticket with him, and certainly the members of his party on that board are going to watch him for their leadership. There isn't any question about that. That is just one of the facts of life. Now, should there be a majority on the other side, or just a minority on the other side, that minority and the governor are going to sit on opposite sides of the table watching each other for political moves.

Ordinarily, that is a good thing in the right place. I think it is a good thing if the legislators watch each other, the opposite party, kind of keep a check on what they are doing. I rather think it is all right on the administrative board. I kind of like that idea of watching each other, but I don't think it belongs in this department of education. If we want to get this out of politics, the very worst thing we can possibly do is to put the governor on that board.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Muskegon, Delegate Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I find myself caught between 2 particular fires in this particular case; however, I am inclined to agree at this time with the committee proposal. I was impressed somewhat by the argument made by Dr. Pollock from Ann Arbor, and I think perhaps we are being worried too much by something that might be new, and, therefore, we have a natural tendency to fall back on what we know. As we all know, the educational requirements of this state are going to increase tremendously, and while it may be half of the budget now I can envision where it may go up to 60 or 65 or 70 per cent of this state's budget. If the population figures predicted for this state come true, then the education of our youth and our young people will be probably the most important policy decision that any governor may have to make when he campaigns for that particular office.

I hear the arguments of Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Brake on how things have worked in the past on certain other boards, but this is something particularly new. Unless he is there or his deputy or someone to help formulate the policy or to, at a minimum, explain the position of the executive and how he feels on certain proposals, I think that we will be doing a disservice to the state.

I think if we propose an independent board, we will be getting to not only a fourth branch of government, maybe, but a fifth—it has been argued that the civil service is already the fourth—so now we will be constituting a fifth branch of government. I think the liaison of the knowledge will be something that we should bear in mind. I would therefore urge, and I myself will support the report of this committee.

MR. BLEDSOE: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Bledsoe.

MR. BLEDSOE: Mr. Chairman, my fellow delegates, certainly we are confronted here with one of the most important problems of our state. It so happens that I am simply sharing my experience here with you in this same problem, because I had the good fortune and experience to serve as an attorney for a school board. I want to say to you that contrary to what Mr. Brake has said, most of your problems that come up from your school districts are not political problems. This is my experience over a period of 6 years. There are a great many other problems, and sometimes those problems find themselves leading you and your independent school districts right to the superintendent of public instruction, because the local boards, as you know, by law are independent. They are just as independent as they can be made by law. Now, I see in the proposal that you have taken away the right of the people to elect their superintendent. You have put it in your board. I think that was a mistake, but we may have to go along with that.

My experience with boards so far is that if you want to get somebody, a group of people on a school board who can sling the book and pass the buck, just try a school board. So when you have a situation like that, where does that leave the people? It leaves the people in one position and that position is to walk into your governor's office with a bridle in your hand, put the bit in his mouth, and make your demand there, because you can't do that with ½ dozen members more or less of a school board because you would have to have too many bridles. Do you get what I mean? Now that has been my experience. The people will be left out. I am only giving you this as a part of my experience. Take it for what you want, but somewhere in some of these problems that come up from the school districts the people will be left completely out if you don't have some strong central authority, to go somewhere to take your problems; and the majority of those problems, believe me, are not political.

I therefore—since the proposal has taken away the strength that ought to go with the election of your superintendent; you have made the superintendent amenable to the board; I am prepared to say to you since you have done that he is going to get together with the part of the people that he can get along with on the school board and the rest of them will be silent. That's the way that works. There will be a little clique there. He will get along with them. He will get himself a majority on that school board you have put there, and as long as he can operate within the framework of the majority of the people on that school board, the rest of them can go to fire. Believe me, that's the way it works. That's the way it works on the local level and that's the way I believe it will work with the board.

And the people, then? What happens to them? I repeat: if they haven't got some place that they can go and say, "Here, this is your responsibility. You take this problem. You lead us out of it or we will meet you at the polls, at the voting booths." That is a great leveler.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: For some time the Chair has thought that each speaker was the last on the list, but there still is one more. Dr. Anspach.

MR. ANSPACH: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, when this was first proposed—and I am a member of the committee on education—when it was first proposed I had my doubts, because it was new. I remember, however, that Mark Twain said many years ago, "I have suffered many hours of ill in anticipation of difficulties which have never occurred." So, therefore, when something new comes up, we do have our fears and we do anticipate difficulties and problems, and this is correct. I don't doubt that some of the things can happen that have been prophesied today.

I, too, am in favor of taking education as far away from politics as you can. Whether it is taken away or not depends upon not so much the form as the individuals who are active in connection with the activities of education. I think that education needs this tie in. I, too, have heard people say that we have a fourth branch of government. I think the tie in here with the governor is good for education. I think it is good for the governor. I don't believe that a governor can dominate—there is a possibility he can dominate a board; this is true—on the other hand, an elective board of outstanding individuals undoubtedly could resist the governor. I think it is a very good check, but I don't believe that he can dominate all boards; he might dominate some. So I support the committee report and am opposed to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Chairman Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I understand that there was another committee that had scheduled a meeting as soon as we finish this afternoon, and hoping to complete that by supper and in view of the fact that the hour is getting late, I move the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the motion by Chairman Bentley that the committee do now rise. All in favor say aye. Opposed no.

The motion does not prevail.

A DELEGATE: Division.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: There is request for division. Is the demand supported?

SECRETARY CHASE: A sufficient number.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: A sufficient number up. The question is now on the motion of Chairman Bentley that the committee do now rise. Those who are in favor will vote aye; opposed, vote no. Sixty seconds having elapsed, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote. The secretary will announce the result of the ballot.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the motion that the committee rise, the yeas are 60, the nays are 49.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The motion prevails and the committee rises.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will be in order. The Chair recognizes the delegate from Ionia, Mr. Powell.

MR. POWELL: Mr. President and fellow delegates, the committee of the whole has made definite progress of which the secretary will make a detailed report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 98, A proposal pertaining to the educational institutions of the state. It reports this proposal back to the convention with 6 amendments, recommending the amendments be agreed to and the proposal as thus amended do pass.

The following are the amendments to Committee Proposal 98, which have been recommended by the committee of the whole:

1. Amend page 1, line 16, after "institutions.", by inserting "Formal sessions of governing boards of such institutions shall be open to the public.".

2. Amend page 1, line 20, after "university" by striking out "of Agriculture and Applied Science"; and page 2, line 1, by striking out "of Agriculture and Applied Science"; and in line 9, after "principal" by inserting "executive".

3. Amend page 2, line 13, after "law.", by striking out "Vacancies shall be filled according to law.", and inserting "The governor shall fill board vacancies by appointment. Any such appointee shall hold office until a successor has been nominated and elected as prescribed by law.".

4. Amend page 2, line 23, after "vote" by striking out the comma and "and preside at meetings of the board.", and inserting a period and the sentence "The board may elect one of their number, or may designate the president, to preside at board meetings.".

5. Amend page 3, line 1, after "which shall be" by striking out "operated" and inserting "supervised and controlled".

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon concurring in the several amendments recommended by the committee of the whole. All those in favor of concurring will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The ayes have it. The amendments are adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Downs and Miss Hart offer the following amendment to Committee Proposal 98:

1. Amend page 2,—

MR. DOWNS: Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Downs.

MR. DOWNS: I rise to ask a point of parliamentary inquiry. I know it is late in the day. If the convention would rather adjourn, we would be glad to carry these over until the morning. It is whatever the convention and the Chair recommend.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: It would be in order, Mr. Downs, if you wanted to, to move to postpone further consideration of Committee Proposal 98 until tomorrow.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Will the gentleman yield? May I suggest that his amendment be read before any further motion is in order?

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Yes.

MR. DOWNS: I will yield to the chairman of the committee.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The secretary will read the amendment which is now being offered.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Downs and Miss Hart have filed the following amendment and there are several others that are on file:

1. Amend page 2, line 26, after "governor" by striking out "in a manner similar to other executive appointments as provided in this constitution.", and inserting "with the advice and consent of the house of representatives.".

Do you want me to read the others, Mr. Downs?

MR. DOWNS: Yes, if the chairman of the committee so desires.

MR. BENTLEY: If you will, sir, Mr. Secretary.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Downs and Miss Hart have also filed the following amendment:

And a third amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 26, after "governor" by striking out "in a manner similar to other executive appointments as provided in this constitution.", and inserting "with the advice and consent of a select committee of the senate composed of 10 members, 5 selected by the majority members and 5 selected by the minority members.".

I might add that Mr. Faxon has submitted an amendment, and the minority report is submitted as an amendment, and Mr. Ford has offered an amendment.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. President, may I—I wonder if the gentleman would yield to me. I would like to ask him if he intends, if he and Miss Hart intend to offer their amendments in order and they intend to offer each one in order regardless of what may have happened to the others.

MR. DOWNS: These are so designed that if one of them should pass, the others will be withdrawn. It would save the time of the convention to pass any 1 of the 3. (laughter) If the chairman would indicate which 1 he is supporting, I would be glad to withdraw the other 2.

I would suggest, Mr. President, if it is in order, that I move consideration of these amendments be postponed until tomorrow.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Downs moves that further consideration of Committee Proposal 98 be postponed until tomorrow. All those in favor will say aye. Those opposed say no.

The motion prevails and it is so ordered.

MR. HOXIE: Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Hoxie.

MR. HOXIE: Mr. President, I am wondering if it would be possible for the proposers of these amendments to have them reproduced and on our desks tomorrow morning at 9:30.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The proposers of the amendments are requested so to do, to assist the work of the convention.

Without objection, we will return to the order of motions and resolutions. I hear none.

SECRETARY CHASE: Miss Hart and Mr. Downs offer Resolution 77, A resolution requesting information relative to division of the proposed constitution.

Following is Resolution 77 as offered:

Whereas, Indications are that many parts of the proposed constitution will be noncontroversial and supported by the overwhelming majority of the people of Michigan; and

Whereas, There are indications that other portions may be of a controversial nature; and

Whereas, New York state, in presenting its new constitution, satisfactorily did so in a noncontroversial package, with specific votes on separate controversial items; now therefore be it

Resolved, That this convention ask the committee on style and drafting to consider the advisability of making a similar division of the document coming from this convention, and the convention also requests the aid of the attorney general for an opinion as to how this can best be done, if the convention so desires; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution shall not be construed to commit the convention as to the method of presentation, but is for information only.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The resolution is referred to the committee on rules and resolutions.

Announcements.

SECRETARY CHASE: The committee on style and drafting will meet in room K this evening at 7:30. Edward Hutchinson, vice chairman.

We have 1 request for leave of absence: Mr. Norris requests to be excused from the morning session of Wednesday and the morning session of Friday.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, the request of Mr. Norris will be granted. The Chair hears no objection and it is so granted.

Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. President, I notice that in spite of the rather eloquent plea that I made yesterday, discrimination still exists in the convention; so at this time I am wondering if somebody would lend me a screwdriver and maybe I can just do a little self help. (laughter)

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The secretary will make 1 further announcement.

SECRETARY CHASE: The committee on administration will meet tomorrow, Wednesday, at 1:30. Walter DeVries, chairman.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. DeVries.

MR. DeVRIES: The committee on administration will consider Mr. Lawrence's request for a screwdriver tomorrow at 1:30. (laughter)

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: What is the pleasure of the convention? The Chair recognizes the delegate from the ninth district, Mr. Knirk.

MR. KNIRK: Mr. President, I move we adjourn.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from the ninth district that the convention shall now adjourn. All those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails and the convention stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 9:30.

[Whereupon, at 5:35 o'clock p.m., the convention adjourned until 9:30 o'clock a.m. Wednesday, February 21, 1962.]

EIGHTY-FOURTH DAY

Wednesday, February 21, 1962, 9:30 o'clock a.m.

PROCEEDINGS

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will come to order.

The invocation today, will be delivered by Reverend William Des Autels, minister of the Methodist Church of St. Louis, Michigan.

REVEREND DES AUTELS: Let us pray. Eternal God, our heavenly Father, touch us with a sense of the abiding significance of these days, days in which history is being written for those who are to follow. We praise and thank Thee for the accomplishments and safe return of our American astronaut and pray that as we look back upon these days, that we, with the experience and responsibilities which are ours, might be lifted above ourselves that we might see that we, too, are making history.

Remind us again of the historic background and rootage of our work, that we might see our nation under God, the same God that would make such accomplishments as the astronaut possible. So lift us, as Thou didst lift him, above ourselves, that we might see our accomplishments as pointing ourselves and others toward Thee.

In the pressure of these days of double schedule, our Father, we pray for Thy special blessing upon these, the convention delegates, that they might stand for something abiding, lest they fall for anything. Bless them and their families at home; touch them and guide them by Thy Holy Spirit, that their deliberations and decisions might be lifted above selfishness, to the good of mankind. For this we pray, in the name of Christ, our Lord. Amen.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The secretary will take the roll. All those present will vote aye. Have you all voted? If so, the roll call will be taken by the secretary.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

Prior to the session today, the secretary received the following requests for leave: Mr. Gover requests leave of absence from today's session to attend a funeral; Mr. Bonisteel requests to be excused from the day's session to attend a meeting of the board of directors; and Delegate Donald Doty wishes to be temporarily excused because of road conditions. He will be a little late getting here. Delegate Stanley Powell requests to be excused from the session of the afternoon to fill a speaking engagement on the constitutional convention at the statewide freedom conference at Central Michigan University, in Mt. Pleasant.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, the requests will be granted. The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

SECRETARY CHASE: Absent with leave: Messrs. Bonisteel, Donald Doty, Gover, J. A. Hannah, Karn, Lundgren, Nisbet, Norris, Pellow and J. B. Richards.

Absent without leave: Messrs. G. E. Brown, Hodges and Marshall.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, the several unexcused delegates are excused.

SECRETARY CHASE: The secretary has an announcement for the interest and the attention of all delegates. Proofs of your convention record photographs are now being distributed. Please read the notice which accompanies them before you examine your proofs. This notice is, "Examine your proofs only in subdued or indirect light. Exposure to direct artificial light or sunlight will cause your proofs to fade out in a few minutes. All proofs must be returned at the time of your appointment with the photographer's representatives. Please be prompt. The photographer's representatives will be located in the lobby near the secretary's office. Your appointment time is given on your proof envelope."

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Reports of standing committees.

SECRETARY CHASE: The committee on rules and resolutions, by Mr. Van Dusen, chairman, reports back to the convention Resolution 71, A resolution with respect to adjustment of the voting machine to eliminate visual registration of the vote until the machine has been locked; without amendment, and with the recommendation that the resolution be adopted.

R. C. Van Dusen, chairman.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: On the adoption of the resolution, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I would yield to Mr. Kuhn, the author of the resolution, for an explanation and advocacy thereof.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oakland, Mr. Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. President, fellow delegates, I think it is quite obvious what the intent is. So many times, delegates seem to be sort of confused and they have to wonder how certain people are going to vote. I do not think anybody is taking singles in this convention. I honestly feel that each and every member can make up his own mind independently, and therefore I am not one that is worried about it, and I am sure most of us are not. Therefore, I moved to have this resolution drafted, and the committee adopted it yesterday, to help us out so we don't have to worry about how anybody is voting until the machine is locked, and then the lights will go on all at once. I think it is that simple.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is on the adoption of the resolution. All those in favor will say aye. Opposed will say no.

The resolution is adopted.

For Resolution 71 as adopted, see above, page 1029.

SECRETARY CHASE: The committee on rules and resolutions, by Mr. Van Dusen, chairman, reports back to the convention Resolution 75, A resolution to amend Resolution 45; with an amendment, recommending the amendment be agreed to and the resolution as thus amended be adopted.

The committee recommends the following amendment to Resolution 75:

1. Amend the resolving clause by inserting a new subparagraph (2) as follows and making subparagraph (2), subparagraph (3):

" "(2) Amend section 5 by striking out "March 2" and inserting "March 9".".

R. C. Van Dusen, chairman.

The following is the resolution:

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the amendment recommended by the committee. Mr. Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. President, may we have the original resolution read? This is an amendment and I don't know what it is amending.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The secretary will read the original resolution.

SECRETARY CHASE: The original resolution, Resolution 45, was amended on December 6. You will find it in the journal of December 6, and the resolution as adopted by the convention provided as follows:

Resolution 45, A resolution to provide a schedule for completing the work of the convention by March 31, 1962.

Resolved, That:

1. All public hearing by substantive committees shall be completed on or before December 21, 1961, unless otherwise authorized by the convention. This shall not preclude a committee from hearing witnesses invited by the committee.

2. All substantive committee hearings on delegate proposals shall be completed on or before January 5, 1962.

3. All substantive committee proposals and supporting reports shall be submitted to the convention and placed on general orders in accordance with rule 57, paragraph 2, on or before January 31, 1962.

4. The committee of the whole shall complete its consideration of all committee proposals and make its reports in accordance with rule 57, paragraph 4, on or before February 21, 1962.

5. The committee an style and drafting shall complete its consideration of all committee proposals and make its reports in accordance with rule 57, paragraph 5, on or before March 2, 1962.

6. Second reading of all committee proposals shall be completed on or before March 9, 1962.

7. The final report of the committee on style and drafting shall be made in accordance with rule 57, paragraph 8, on or before March 23, 1962.

8. The convention shall finally adjourn on or before March 31, 1962.

The amendments proposed by the committee on rules and resolutions to Resolution 75, would amend Resolution 45 as follows:

Amend paragraph 4 of Resolution 45 to read:

The committee of the whole shall complete its consideration of all committee proposals and make its reports in accordance with rule 57, paragraph 4, on or before March 7, 1962.

Paragraph 5:

The committee on style and drafting shall complete its consideration of all committee proposals and make its reports in accordance with rule 57, paragraph 5, on or before March 9, 1962.

Paragraph 6:

Second reading of all committee proposals shall be completed on or before March 16, 1962.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question being upon the amendment offered by the committee on rules and resolutions to Resolution 75, the Chair recognizes the chairman of that committee, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, the amendment would simply correct an omission when the resolution was prepared and provide for orderly sequence. I would suggest that we adopt the amendment and then discuss the entire resolution.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question being upon the committee amendment, all those in favor will say aye. Opposed will say no.

The amendment is adopted. The question now being upon the adoption of the resolution as amended, the Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, Resolution 45, which this resolution would amend, provides that today is the last day for the completion of the work of the committee of the whole. Obviously the committee of the whole is not going to complete its work today, and frankly we can't tell when the committee of the whole is going to complete its work. The committee on rules and resolutions believes that the best means of dealing with the situation at the moment, on an interim basis, is simply to make those reasonable adjustments in the schedule which will give us 2 more weeks, at the moment, for the completion of the work of the committee of the whole. If the work of the committee of the whole is completed within that period — as I hope it may be — we probably then should take another look at the entire schedule to see how realistic it looks in the light of our work at that point.

This is purely an interim device for dealing with the problem with which we are now confronted. It is the only alternative, as I see it, to either throwing out the schedule completely or making a total readjustment of it. The committee on rules and resolutions didn't feel that we should throw out the schedule completely, and did not feel that we should, at this point, attempt a total readjustment of it. The resolution has the unanimous support of the committee on rules and resolutions.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: On the resolution, as amended, the Chair recognizes Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee on rules and resolutions? I find on my desk this morning a convention calendar labeled, Order of Second Reading. Has there been any decision in the committee on rules and resolutions as to the date when second readings will begin?

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President and Judge Leibrand, your resolution is pending before us and we will meet to consider it before making the decision which you suggest. At this moment, the order of second reading has been passed for this week. I think there is some general consensus that it may be desirable to complete the order of work in the committee of the whole before commencing on second reading. No final determination has been made, and none will be made until you are given an opportunity to be heard on your resolution by our committee.

MR. LEIBRAND: Thank you, sir. I believe my resolution is to that effect: that is, we complete the work of the committee of the whole before we start the second reading. Thank you.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question being upon the resolution as amended, all those in favor will say aye. Opposed will say no.

Resolution 75, as amended, is adopted.

Following is Resolution 75 as amended and adopted:

A resolution to amend Resolution 45.

Resolved, That Resolution 45 be amended as follows:

(1) Amend section 4 by striking out "February 21" and inserting "March 7".

(2) Amend section 5 by striking out "March 2" and inserting "March 9".

Reports of select committees.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Communications from state officers.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Second reading of proposals.

SECRETARY CHASE: Nothing on that calendar for today.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Third reading of proposals.

SECRETARY CHASE: Nothing on that calendar for today.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Motions and resolutions.

SECRETARY CHASE: There are no resolutions on file.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Unfinished business.

SECRETARY CHASE: Under the order of unfinished business, the president lays before the convention the report of the committee of the whole of yesterday, the balance of which was postponed until today. The item under consideration is Committee Proposal 98, A proposal pertaining to the educational institutions of the state. The amendments recommended by the committee of the whole have been adopted. There are pending certain amendments, a copy of which the delegates have on their desks.

First, Mr. Downs and Miss Hart offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 26, after "governor" by striking out "in a manner similar to other executive appointments as provided in this constitution.", and inserting "with the advice and consent of the house of representatives."; so that the language will read:

Each board of control shall consist of 8 members who shall hold office for 8 years and who shall be appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the house of representatives. Vacancies shall be filled in like manner.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the amendment offered by Mr. Downs and Miss Hart. On that amendment, the Chair recognizes Mr. Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. President and fellow delegates, I wish, in speaking on this amendment, to again restate that I think the education committee did an excellent job in resolving the question of the constitutional status of all our institutions of higher education and junior colleges. The thing that does bother me is that the language as it stands now says that the educational board shall have their appointments confirmed in the same manner as executive appointments. This, in the first place, equates our universities with other executive departments.

I think we have said, time and again on the floor, that one of the reasons Michigan's great educational institutions have developed is that the educational system, for practical reasons, has been kept, as far as practical, as a separate entity. I believe this has fostered education. The amendment of Miss Hart and myself simply carries out this principle. It also, the first one, makes a specific method of advice and consent by shifting advice and consent to the house. This is done on the theory, also, that the house will be more representative of the people, and perhaps we are anticipating the legislative organization committee, but that, at least, is the indication of the majority report.

I therefore urge support of this amendment and call for the yeas and nays.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Downs demands the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment before the body. Is the demand supported? The demand is supported. The Chair now recognizes the chairman of the committee, Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. President, actually the existing language of the committee proposal, as it was approved by the committee of the whole, does not refer to executive departments. It says, and I quote:

Each board of control shall consist of 8 members who shall hold office for 8 years and who shall be appointed by the governor in a manner similar to other executive appointments as provided in this constitution.

As was pointed out, I believe, the day before yesterday, at considerable length, the committee on education did not feel compelled or willing to make a definite statement as to how the governor's appointments to these governing boards should be handled. We preferred to leave that for a later time, a later period of discussion, probably when the proposals from the executive branch committee are before us. The convention will recall that it was on my request that the gentleman from Grand Rapids, the chairman of the executive branch committee, withdrew his amendment, which would have provided specifically for senate confirmation in this particular case. I repeat now what I said on that occasion, that I think that this question of the method of confirmation should be put over until we have the executive branch proposals and other proposals before us. The adoption of the present language would not commit the convention to any specific method of confirmation.

I appreciate, of course, the kind remarks from my friend from Detroit regarding the work of the committee on education, but I would ask that the convention defeat his amendment and all the other similar amendments in this connection.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the adoption of the amendment. All those in favor will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and record the vote.

The roll was called and the delegates voted as follows:

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Downs and Miss Hart offer the following amendment:

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Downs, on the amendment.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. President, I rise in support of this amendment. This is another method of providing for so called advice and consent. I believe some people have demonstrated a concern that they don't want the governor to have too much power in appointments. Personally, I am not particularly fearsome of that, but this does offer a reasonable alternative for a reasonable provision of advice and consent.

I urge a yes vote. I hope the Christmas tree will flash more optimistically this time, and I demand the yeas and nays.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: On the amendment Mr. Downs demands the yeas and nays. Is the demand supported? The demand is supported. Will you clear the board?

SECRETARY CHASE: The individual delegates will have to do that.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: All those in favor of the amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and record the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Downs and Miss Hart, the yeas are 41; the nays are 86.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The amendment is not adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Downs and Miss Hart offer the following amendment:

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: On the amendment, the Chair recognizes Mr. Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. President, I rise, very briefly, in support of this amendment. I believe that it provides a reasonable protection for those who are concerned about the governor having too much power. It seems to be a very practical method and provides the power of advice and consent within a comparatively small number of people. I urge support of this, so that we will have definiteness as to how these people are to be confirmed, and to see that they are not necessarily tied to the method of executive appointments and other branches of government.

I demand the yeas and nays.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: On the amendment, Mr. Downs demands the yeas and nays. Is the demand supported? The demand is supported. On the question, all those in favor will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and record the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Downs and Miss Hart, the yeas are 40, the nays are 87.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The amendment is not adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Faxon has filed the following amendment, listed as the fourth amendment on the sheet on your desk—

MR. FAXON: Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: This amendment which I have with regard to the confirmation by the state board of education, I would like to withdraw at this time, because of the fact that we haven't yet determined the composition of that board.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Faxon withdraws his amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Ford offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, lines 26 and 27, after "by the governor" by striking out "in a manner similar to other executive appointments as provided in this constitution".

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: On the amendment, the Chair recognizes the delegate from Wayne, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: This is the same amendment which was presented in the committee of the whole. I don't think it is necessary to go into any explanation, except that it has been very apparent, if you will recall, this was the first attempt that I made to determine from the committee on education how they intended to have this board appointed, and just what was going to happen, whether the governor was going to make the appointment, whether he was going to make it subject to confirmation by the senate, or by the legislature, or the lieutenant governor, or his wife, or however he was going to consult with people before he made his decision.

We have been unable, after 2 days on this floor, to get any commitment whatsoever from the education committee on their preference in this matter. It would seem to me that in establishing a board as important as this board appears to be, from everything that was said by the proponents of the board on that committee, that they should certainly have been prepared, after 3½ months, to give us some guidance in the matter of the manner of its selection. It is apparent that, for whatever reason and whatever motive, the chairman and the members of that committee are unwilling to do this. With that in mind, I submit this as a possible way of laying squarely before the convention the choice of whether you want the governor to be able to make a selection, or whether you want the governor to suggest a name to the "fish bowl" over there and let those people go through the usual political shenanigans of advice and consent, horse trading and swapping and all the other things that are involved when you are talking about a board of education.

I resent very deeply the suggestion by the chairman of this committee that the members of an educational board — of the importance that this one seems to have, by the way it has been characterized in this convention — should wait upon the pleasure of the convention with respect to the method of appointment of other political officeholders in the state. I think it has been stated here, by very prominent members of this convention, that in every way possible the people dealing directly with the field of education should be kept, as nearly as possible, independent of the normal strains and tugs of war in the political arena, and I submit that any form, whether it takes the Downs' form or the amendment that was offered by Mr. Martin the other day and then withdrawn, for advice and consent of the senate, any one of these advice and consent forms with respect to this board of education is going to do nothing more than precipitate the board of education into the kind of political maneuvering that has to go on in order to obtain what they refer to, and I think euphemistically, as advice and consent. There is very little advice and rarely is there consent. It is generally a compromise, and the reasons for the compromise are, very frequently, as everyone in this room who wants to be candid about it will have to admit, not the reasons that are in the best interests of the board or commission that is being constituted.

Yesterday, I believe Mr. Romney indicated, in reporting on behalf of the committee, and then reiterated and stated as a personal conviction, and a strong personal conviction on his part, that the governor should have a very direct interest in the composition of this board and the action of the board. I submit that if you believe he was correct in this, that a more effective way than making the governor a member of the board, as suggested by him, would be to permit the governor to appoint qualified people, without the necessity of submitting these people, who, in the first instance and in most instances should be professional educators rather than politicans, to the usual strains of going through the advice and consent procedures.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair recognizes Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. President, I just want to advise my good friend from Taylor that when he, quote, resents, end quote, my suggestions in this particular respect, I am sure he understands and is smart enough to understand that I am speaking for the committee on education in this matter, and I trust he will transfer his resentment to the entire membership of the committee on education, including 7 members of his own political party, since this was a unanimous decision on our part.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Does the gentleman desire to be recognized a second time on his amendment?

MR. FORD: Just as a matter of explanation, Mr. Bentley, I don't intend to indicate any resentment, just disappointment, not only with you, Mr. Bentley, but with the others who were in a position and are still in a position to make a decision and give us guidance in this matter, and to this instance, nevertheless, refuse to assume that responsibility and do so.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Ford. All those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is not adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Messrs. Faxon, T. S. Brown, Kuhn and Mrs. Conklin offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 3, line 2, after "boards.", by striking out the balance of the section.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the amendment offered by Mr. Faxon and others. The Chair recognizes Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. President and fellow delegates, I am not going to repeat the arguments that were already given yesterday, except to say, very briefly, that the portion which we are asking you to delete is a matter which is clearly not of constitutional substance; that we are here as delegates to a convention that is writing a constitution, not a legislature that is writing laws, and if you will carefully examine the language that we are asking you to delete, you will see that the asking of the creation of a board to advise a board is unprecedented in Michigan constitutional history and in federal constitutional history. I ask you to try to put aside the pressures which have been brought to bear by those interests which have sought this constitutional mention and to vote as you would vote on anything that you would feel is not clearly a constitutional matter, and in so doing, Mr. President, I ask for a roll call vote on this.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: On his amendment, Mr. Faxon demands the yeas and nays. Is the demand supported? There is a sufficient number up. All those in favor of the amendment offered by Mr. Faxon, T. S. Brown, Mr. Kuhn and Mrs. Conklin will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and record the vote.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The amendment is not adopted.

Committee Proposal 98, as amended, is referred to the committee on style and drafting.

Following is Committee Proposal 98 as amended and referred to the committee on style and drafting:

The committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Sec. a. The legislature shall appropriate funds to maintain the University of Michigan, Michigan State University, Wayne State University, Eastern Michigan University, Central Michigan University, Western Michigan University, Northern Michigan University, Michigan College of Science and Technology, Ferris Institute, Grand Valley State College, and other educational institutions of higher education established by law. The legislature shall be given an annual accounting of all income and all expenditures by each of these educational institutions. Formal sessions of governing boards of such institutions shall be open to the public.

Sec. b. The regents of the University of Michigan and their successors in office shall constitute a body corporate known as the regents of the University of Michigan; the trustees of Michigan State University and their successors in office shall constitute a body corporate known as the board of trustees of Michigan State University; the governors of Wayne State University and their successors in office shall constitute a body corporate known as the board of governors of Wayne State University. The respective boards shall have the general supervision of their respective institutions and the control and direction of all expenditures from the institution's funds; they shall, as often as necessary, elect a president of the institution under their respective supervision who shall be the principal executive officer of the institution, be an ex officio member of the board but without the right to vote, and preside at meetings of the board. The boards of each institution shall consist of 8 members who shall hold office for 8 years and who shall be elected according to law. The governor shall fill board vacancies by appointment. Any such appointee shall hold office until a successor has been nominated and elected as prescribed by law.

Sec. c. Other institutions of higher education created by the legislature having authority to grant baccalaureate degrees shall each be governed by a board of control which shall be a body corporate; shall have general supervision of the institution and the control and direction of all expenditures from the institution's funds; shall, as often as necessary, elect a president of the institution under its supervision who shall be the principal executive officer of the institution, be an ex officio member of the board but without the right to vote. The board may elect one of their number, or may designate the president, to preside at board meetings. Each board of control shall consist of 8 members who shall hold office for 8 years and who shall be appointed by the governor in a manner similar to other executive appointments as provided in this constitution. Vacancies shall be filled in like manner.

Sec. d. The legislature shall provide by law for the establishment and financial support of public community and junior colleges, which shall be supervised and controlled by locally elected boards. The legislature shall provide by law for a state board for public community and junior colleges, which shall advise the state board of education concerning general supervision, planning for such colleges and requests for annual appropriations for their support. The board shall consist of 8 members who shall hold office for 8 years and who shall be appointed by the state board of education. Vacancies shall be filled in like manner. The superintendent of public instruction will be an ex officio member of this board without the right to vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: The committee of the whole, Mr. President, has also had under consideration Committee Proposal 47; has considered some amendments thereto; has come to no final resolution thereon. This completes the report of the committee of the whole.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Special orders of the day.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: General orders of the day. The Chair recognizes the delegate from Ionia, Mr. Powell.

MR. POWELL: I move that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for consideration of general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: All those in favor will say aye. Opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will convene and the gentleman from Ionia will preside.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The committee will be in order. When we rose yesterday afternoon, we were in the midst of consideration of Committee Proposal 47, A proposal to replace sections 2 and 6 of article XI.

For last previous action by the committee of the whole on Committee Proposal 47, see above, page 1188.

Messrs. Boothby, Brake, Dean Doty, Leibrand, Finch, Sharpe, Dehnke, Miss Donnelly and Mr. Downs had offered the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 16, after "law.", by striking out "The governor shall also be a member of the state board of education.", and all of line 17.

There had been considerable debate of that, but it was not settled when the committee rose. The question is on the amendment. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Bloomfield Hills, Delegate Romney.

MR. ROMNEY: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there are certain additional facts that the delegates ought to be familiar with in dealing with this highly important matter. As a matter of fact, I consider this one of the most important matters that will come before the convention, not only because of the current importance of education in our state's total program, representing as it does, 50 per cent of our total state expenditures at the present time, but also because, as we look to the period ahead and the meeting of the educational requirements of the youth and adults of our state, it is readily obvious that this will be an increasingly great expenditure in our total state picture. Consequently, the plans we make to this matter at this time will importantly shape the ability of future state administrations to meet this need soundly, economically and efficiently.

I think, first, we should have a somewhat clearer understanding of this new board of education. This is not a board of education such as we have had in the past. This board of education is based on new concepts. This board of education has been upgraded a great deal. This board of education has been given overall responsibility for the state's part of our educational program, and this includes the supervision of the primary and secondary and other instructional institutions, the community colleges, and the planning and coordinating responsibility for all of the institutions of higher education, as well as the responsibility of reviewing the total budget requirements of all education, insofar as the state is involved.

The statement was made yesterday that this board is going to be composed primarily of professional educators. This is not correct, and this is not the purpose. As a matter of fact, this is not correct on the basis of the present composition of a board with much lesser responsibility. Two of the present 3 members of the state board of education are not professional educators. I refer to Mr. Magnusson and I refer to Mrs. Robinson, a housewife. One is a former professional educator. I submit that the former chairman of that board who is president of this convention, while he had had educational experience in his background, was not identified as a professional educator when he became a member of this board and served as its chairman.

I believe I am expressing the viewpoint of those educators who were on the education committee, and we had a goodly number, in saying that it is their hope that the new board of education will be composed importantly of people of lay stature, who can combine their broad knowledge of our needs with that of the professional educators who will be making recommendations to them in determining the future educational program of this state. In fact, I think it would be accurate to say that the professional educators will be greatly disappointed if this new board is composed importantly of professional educators or ex professional educators.

Based on such knowledge as I have of the educational needs of this state — and I have devoted more than the usual amount of time to educational matters in recent years — I can say, without any qualifications, that one of the greatest deficiencies in meeting our educational needs in this state is the willingness of noneducators to participate in shaping the educational programs of this state and of the local communities in which people reside. Indeed, there can be no successful educational program that does not involve parents as well as children, and this is true all the way up the line.

Let's get down to the basic issues that are involved here. It seems to me there are 2 basic issues that are really basic issues. One is this issue of whether or not we believe we should set up the educational program on a completely independent basis, and I mean independent from the chief executive of this state; or whether there should be some reasonable tie in between the chief executive and the educational program of this state. I know there are those who indicate that this tie in might be indirect or surreptitious through the convention mechanism. As far as I am concerned, this is a hazardous approach, it has not proven dependable in the past because it would be unfortunate, in my judgment, if this new board of education should be approached on the premise that people are going to be nominated to run for this board of education that the governor can control when they get onto that board of education.

This is not the concept, and this hasn't even proven true in all instances where the governor has been able to influence, through the convention, the nomination of people to the ad board. As a matter of fact, this independent election of state officials has confronted us with a situation where it is really up to the individual involved to decide whether he wants to take a completely independent course, independent politically and administratively or whether he wants to be a part of the executive administrative team.

It is not intended that this board of education be composed of people who are prepared to sacrifice their independence. As a matter of fact, the very purpose here is to elevate this board of education to a stature where it will attract people who will devote themselves on the basis of personal integrity and conviction to the meeting of the educational requirements of this state, and anything less than this is not going to be satisfactory in meeting our needs.

As far as I am concerned, what the educational committee has proposed is acceptable. It is not what I prefer. Let me make that quite clear. What the educational committee has recommended unanimously — because this followed months of deliberations, it followed months where we were widely divided; when we first commenced this discussion of providing an overall board to supervise, in a planning way, the total educational program of this state, there were members of our committee who were violently opposed to it. And over a period of 4½ months, the education committee has worked hard to arrive at a recommendation that represents the best thinking of a wide diversity of representation on that committee. About half of that — perhaps not quite half, but a goodly portion of the members of that committee — are professional educators. Consequently, this committee recommendation reflects the combined judgment of the educators and the laymen on this educational committee, and was made on a bipartisan basis.

This committee proposal is acceptable because it does provide a minimum tie in, and I emphasize a minimum tie in — I think anything less than having the governor a member of this independently elected board would be to eliminate any effective tie in between the educational program of this state and the chief executive of this state. I submit that when you consider the importance of this educational program currently and in the future, it is unthinkable to expect the chief executive to discharge the responsibilities of his office effectively without at least having a ringside seat and a degree of participation in shaping the policies and the programs of an educational character. To completely eliminate him from this board, as would be done under this amendment, and to give him no direct tie in — because this would eliminate any direct relationship between the chief executive of this state and the board of education and the superintendent of public instruction, because under the committee's proposal, the superintendent of public instruction is appointed by the board of education; he is not responsible in any way to the governor. He is a creature of the board. We clearly discussed in our committee meetings the fact that by making him a creature of the board, it permits this board of education to defy the governor in terms of the replacement of a superintendent of public instruction that the board considers to be competent and that a governor might want to replace.

I think if you will take a look at the character of what is being proposed here, that this is a fact, that the board has control, the 8 members of the board have control, and if they select, as they should, the most competent educator that can be secured to head up this most important area, representing 50 per cent of state expenditures, and in their judgment he is discharging the responsibilities of his office competently, then they are in a position to defy any political influence in undertaking to replace that superintendent of public instruction. We have purposely given the board of education the right to determine the term of office of the superintendent of public instruction so that we can get a superintendent of public instruction that is removed, as nearly as you can remove and should remove, because you shouldn't remove completely from political considerations, because when you talk political considerations, you are talking basically giving the people an opportunity to voice themselves in these matters, in its ultimate form. But, removing the superintendent, as nearly as possible, from capricious or individual political considerations.

As far as I am concerned, the preferred setup would be the one that was discussed here yesterday, and this was a provision that received a great deal of debate in the committee. There was a very close division on this point in the committee. At one point, this provision prevailed and represented the majority viewpoint. Subsequently it did not. My preferred position, as an individual member of that committee — and I know this is the preferred position of some of the members of the committee — would be that the superintendent of public instruction be appointed by the governor, and that the governor not be a member of the board of education —

MISS HART: Point of order, Mr. Chairman. Are we debating section b? Are we debating section a? Just what are we talking about?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: We are debating the amendment offered by several delegates here.

MISS HART: And this is on section a, is it not?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Section a.

MISS HART: Then I would suggest that the delegate is out of order.

MR. ROMNEY: I would like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that I am discussing the board of education and its responsibilities, and its responsibilities include the appointment of the superintendent of public instruction. You cannot disassociate the 2. They are interwoven and intertwined. For the members of this committee to properly understand section a, it is impossible to discuss them intelligently on a completely separate basis.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: May the Chair suggest that as far as possible, the remarks be directed to the elimination of the sentence, "The governor shall also be a member of the state board of education".

MR. ROMNEY: I will be glad to do so. But again, this relates to this portion of the amendment, because if the amendment is adopted, then the governor would have no relationship, direct relationship with the board of education or the superintendent of public instruction. Neither would have any responsibility to him, and yet the superintendent of public instruction would probably be a member of his official family.

I prefer, as I have indicated, that the governor not be a member of the board of education, which is the immediate point under discussion, but rather that the governor have the right to appoint the superintendent of public instruction. The reason I prefer that is that there must be this tie in, and I submit to you that any governor that appointed an incompetent superintendent of public instruction would be subject to public disapproval in the same way that any president of the United States that appointed an incompetent secretary of defense would be subject to the disapproval of the people of this country. The first issue, therefore, involved in this amendment is whether there should be any direct tie in between the governor and the educational program of this state, and the committee proposal is a minimum tie in.

The second issue involved here is this: is the governor of this state to be the chief executive of this state in fact or only as an illusion? As far as I know, an elemental principle — and I emphasize, an elemental principle in any organization, I don't care whether it is political or economic or social or any other organization, an absolutely elemental principle, an indispensable principle — is that you establish responsibility and grant authority coequal with responsibility, and any other approach is subject to defects and confusion and difficulty, and is subject to the inability to keep, to hold the administrative officials responsible for their acts.

This involves this. One of the biggest issues that we are going to face in this convention is the very simple question of whether we are going to have a chief executive of this state or whether we are not going to have a chief executive of this state. We are either going to give the chief executive of this state authority equal with his responsibility or we are going to fragment his authority and leave him in the inconsistent position where the people hold him responsible but he does not have the authority to discharge that responsibility.

MR. DOWNS: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: A point of order is being raised. Delegate Downs.

MR. DOWNS: On the point of order, is the delegate talking on this amendment —

MR. ROMNEY: I am talking on this amendment.

MR. DOWNS: — or on the amendment that Miss Hart and I just offered?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: It seems that he is talking on this sentence about the governor serving on the board of education.

MR. ROMNEY: This bears very directly on this point.

MISS HART: Point of order, Mr. Chairman. I cannot understand how the governor being on the education board has one thing to do with what the delegate is talking about. It would have something to do if we were talking about the appointment by the governor of the superintendent, but the membership of the governor on the state board is not related.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: It seems to the Chair that there were some remarks earlier that were over on to section b, but it seems as though the recent remarks of the delegate have had to do with this sentence.

MR. ROMNEY: Mr. Chairman, thank you, because what I am actually discussing is the question of whether the governor shall have any degree of authority in relationship to his administrative responsibility for education. The governor has a sizable administrative responsibility for education, and this amendment would leave him without any authority whatsoever to discharge that responsibility. That is what we are discussing, and what I am saying is that an elemental principle of organizational structure in any organization is to establish authority equal to the responsibility, and I submit that under the responsibility that the governor of this state has for the total educational program of this state, which represents 50 per cent of his annual budget, which represents 50 per cent of his responsibility for the economical and efficient use of the funds taken from the taxpayers of this state, that it is absolutely indispensable to give him some degree of authority in relationship to his educational responsibilities to the people of this state. Are we going to apply this principle to the administrative and executive authorization of this state, and particularly as it relates to education? That is the immediate question before us.

The present situation that exists in this state, and one that would be developed by this amendment, is unsound organizationally, it is unsound politically, and it is unsound economically. It is unsound in any aspect that you want to look at it because it will deprive this state of the executive and administrative tie in of the chief administrative officer of this state in the biggest single area of administrative and executive responsibility in this state. I am all for the independent board because I believe education should have a degree of independence in this.

In conclusion, this is not an unusual situation. There are 7 states that have the governor as a member of the state board of education at the present time. There are 7 states, and 3 of these states have established this practice as a result of a recent study of their total educational system. I will identify for you the 3 states which have done this as a result of recent studies of their educational programs. The 7 states are Alabama, Arizona, California, Florida, Montana, North Dakota and South Carolina and of these, the ones that have done this as a result of recent studies are California, Florida and North Dakota.

I think there is another pertinent aspect to this situation, and that is that there is a great deal of precedent for the governor being on educational boards. In 13 states, the governor is on one of the major boards of higher education. This appears to be the result of great concern for the proper educational growth in the state, and it is going to take the combination of the board of education, the superintendent of public instruction and the governor to meet the educational requirements intelligently. The 13 states are Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Montana, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, South Carolina and Tennessee.

The history of Michigan is that only about 25 per cent of the members of the state board of education have been professional educators. I submit that this committee proposal represents a minimum tie in between the chief executive and the educational program of this state. It gives us an independent board of education. It gives us a superintendent of public instruction, if the other matter is approved, on a sound basis, and if we are not going to do this, then we ought to establish some more direct tie in between the governor and the state board of education. I accept this as an acceptable tie in. I would prefer the other.

I think that if we were going to take orderly procedure here we would meet the problem raised by Miss Hart. You really cannot consider sections a and b separately. They are linked. This question of how you secure the superintendent of public instruction is related to this section. In an orderly procedure, we really ought to deal with b first and a second. Then we would know whether or not we are going to establish a tie in through the superintendent of public instruction or whether we would develop it through making the governor a member of the board of education. Thank you very much.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Delegate Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, the debates of the last few days, the last 2 days to be exact, as well as the point of order raised by the gentleman from Detroit and the lady from Detroit, have shown how difficult it is to separate the 2 sections of this proposal. Perhaps there is no other proposal now pending before the committee of the whole where the 2 sections are more closely interwoven and interlocked than sections a and b are of Committee Proposal 47.

The gentleman from Pontiac, yesterday, made a motion which I thought was a timely and good motion, which I supported, that further consideration of section a be postponed and that we move immediately to the consideration of section b. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I renew the motion this morning that we postpone further consideration of section a and all amendments thereto and we proceed immediately to take up section b of Committee Proposal 47.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the motion by Delegate Bentley that we pass temporarily further consideration of section a and go on to the consideration of section b. Miss Hart.

MISS HART: We went all through this yesterday. Is there any reason why we cannot finish section a? We have one sentence to finish. I do not see the point that the delegate from Bloomfield or that the chairman is making that these are completely related. We are going to be battling on an issue that is not a part of section a at all. This is a clear cut issue on whether the governor should be a member of the state board of education or whether he is not to be a member of the state board of education. It has nothing to do with the superintendent of public instruction.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: May the Chair say that this motion is definitely in order and the decision is up to the committee. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Lansing, Delegate Wanger.

MR. WANGER: It seems to me the question is broader than the lady suggests. The question is the governor's responsibility in the field of public education, which does spend such a tremendous part of our budget, and for that reason the motion is clearly appropriate.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the motion by Delegate Bentley. All in favor signify by saying aye, opposed, no.

The motion prevails.

A DELEGATE: Division.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Division is requested. Is the demand supported? There is a sufficient number up. We will proceed to vote on the electric voting machine. All in favor signify by voting aye, opposed, no. Mr. Romney.

MR. ROMNEY: Mr. Chairman, would the Chair restate the motion for the late arrivals who can't look at the board? The last amendment rather than the motion is on the wall.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Before the machine is locked, may we understand precisely what the issue is. Consideration of this amendment has been carried over from yesterday. A motion has been made by Chairman Bentley that further consideration of section a be passed temporarily and that we proceed now to the consideration of section b. Sixty seconds having elapsed, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the motion to pass temporarily section a and proceed to the consideration of section b, the yeas are 79, the nays are 41.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The motion prevails. The secretary will read section b.

SECRETARY CHASE: Section b.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: We now come to section b of Committee Proposal 47 which, in this case, the committee had clear warning of its controversial nature. This is the question of the selection of the superintendent of public instruction and, as the secretary has read, the committee on education is recommending that he be appointed by the state board and be its chairman without the right to vote. We are also, of course, making certain recommendations as to his function with regard to the state office of education.

Mr. Chairman, there is a minority report pending on this particular section, signed by the lady from Detroit, Miss Hart, and 2 other members of the committee on education. If it is satisfactory to her, I would like to yield at this time for a further explanation of this section to the gentleman from Petoskey, Mr. Spitler, and then unless there are questions I believe the appropriate procedure would be to yield the floor to the lady for the purpose of offering her amendment. I yield to the gentleman from Petoskey.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegates, the Chair had certain folks recognized, but that was back when we were on section a, so it thinks that —

Delegate Hart, did you wish to hold your position?

MISS HART: No, Mr. Chairman. If I may, inasmuch as we have a, b, c all mixed up, may I respond to the delegate from Bloomfield on the question of the governor on the state board first, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Petoskey for the next part. May I do that?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair is not quite clear, but can't we have the attention focused now on section b?

MISS HART: I have asked for the floor, Mr. Chairman. I have asked to respond to the delegate from Bloomfield. I called him out of order. The Chair did not consider this, it said they were one and the same thing, so I can't —

CHAIRMAN POWELL: You are putting words in the Chair's mouth, Delegate Hart.

MISS HART: I am sorry I did not appeal the ruling of the Chair, but I might have and I probably should have because we were debating on section b while the delegate from Bloomfield was talking. We got into the question of the superintendent of public instruction, the election versus the appointment of the superintendent of public instruction in section a. I asked to respond. I have not been given the opportunity to respond to him on the question of the governor being a member of the board of education. When do I get that in? When do I get to respond?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Without objection from the committee, you may continue your remarks at this time.

MRS. CONKLIN: Point of information, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Delegate Conklin.

MRS. CONKLIN: I would like to suggest that a couple of weeks ago I thought we had decided that we would recess at 10:40. Is it your intent to recess now or not?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: You are so right, and the Chair counseled around here about that. It just seemed as though we had been in the committee of the whole only a few moments when that time arrived; and as you can see, things were moving along and there wasn't any good stopping place. The Chair just recently sought the advice of our vice president and he thought if no one raised the point, let's keep working. If anybody desires that we do recess, a motion to that effect would be in order. Miss Hart.

MISS HART: Mr. Chairman, if I may have the microphone when we come back, I will be happy to move to recess. Personally, I think we might have interrupted the discussion on section b that was being talked about on section a and recessed at that time. But I shall be glad to yield at this point, if I may have the microphone at the conclusion of the recess.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Mr. Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I would like to also point out that during Mr. Romney's talk he stated that these 2 sections were intermingled and one meant quite a bit to the other. Frankly, that is all I wanted to get up and talk about, too, and I do want to be kept in place there.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair has your name here, delegate. In the confusion of things where there were 2 or 3 talking at once, the Chair wasn't sure what Delegate Conklin may have said. Did you make a motion?

MRS. CONKLIN: I so move.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: She moves the committee rise for the purpose of this recess. The Chair thinks that is in order.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I move to lay that motion on the table.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: This motion that the committee rise is not subject to a motion to lay on the table so the Chair will put the question. Those in favor of the committee rising, signify by saying aye; opposed, no.

The motion prevails.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, Vice President Hutchinson resumed the Chair.]

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will be in order. Pursuant to orders previously adopted, the convention stands in recess until 11:00 a.m.

[Whereupon, at 10:50 o'clock a.m., the convention recessed; and, at 11:00 o'clock a.m., reconvened.]

The convention will be in order.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The delegate from Ionia, Mr. Powell.

MR. POWELL: I move that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the further consideration of general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: All those in favor will say aye. Opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will convene and the gentleman from Ionia will preside.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The committee will be in order. You will recall that when we recessed we had passed temporarily the consideration of section a and gone to section b of Committee Proposal 47. The delegate from Detroit, Miss Hart, had requested permission to make a statement and there was no objection, so the Chair recognizes Miss Hart to make her statement, which may pertain to both sections of this proposal.

MR. HIGGS: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: A point of order is being raised by Delegate Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: I did intend to make an objection to a statement by Delegate Hart at this time. She will have ample opportunity to answer. I have things to say that I would like to say on that subject. I think we could carry it on for quite a long while and I would object to that procedure.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair is afraid your objection now comes too late. Hers was with unanimous consent—

MR. HIGGS: I will appeal the ruling of the Chair because there was no opportunity to make an objection at that time.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair is sure that her remarks would be restrained and brief.

Is an appeal from the decision of the Chair in order in the committee of the whole?

SECRETARY CHASE: It is.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: It is. The question is: shall the judgment of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? Those in favor say aye; opposed, no.

The decision of the Chair is sustained, and Miss Hart will proceed.

MISS HART: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to agree with the delegate from Bloomfield that the state board of education should be one of lay people. I thoroughly agree with that—elected, as we have provided, and on a partisan basis. I am, however, amazed at the lack of understanding of the burdens that a governor carries, which exhaust every moment of his time and will still exact every moment of his time, even though there are only 20 departments if the executive provision is passed. This will, in no sense, cut down on the governmental responsibilities. It may cut down on contacts but not on the responsibility of the governor.

The governor in the state of Michigan is an important person, regardless of what party may occupy the seats on any board or any commission. He is important simply because he is the head of the executive of this state, and his will must be reached, if people are to be, if these boards and commissions are to have a proper voice and to have effectiveness, as in legislative halls and with the public, because we have been reminded here that the governor, every day, must have publicity, and it would be unfortunate if he were to be ill disposed toward any one of these departments' acts or their recommendations. Actually, the governor is welcome to any commission meeting, any board meeting. I am sure the boards and commissions would vie to have him present.

To give him a position—and the word "authority" was used—disturbes me. I think the governor has all the authority that he needs in his messages to the legislature, his address to the people, and his effectiveness in appointing committees and commissions, and the rest of it, his effectiveness in elections. Therefore, I think his authority is where it belongs, not exercised among the lay people on a state board.

One other thing concerns me. It would seem to me that this constitution is a conflict of interest. What happens to the governor, for example, when appropriations are going to be recommended? The majority of the board votes one way, and he is a member of the minority? Then, what is his position in his message to the legislature? What is his position in his recommendations? It seems to me that he would be in a very embarrassing position. I can't imagine the governor spending his time sitting and listening to the various reorganization plans, listening to the problems of teachers, which the board must judge personally by authority of the attorney general because they may not be listened to through delegated representatives. I cannot understand what the governor would be doing at this kind of meeting, and I am sure he would have to sit through hours of this kind of thing.

If it is important for him to be on the state board—and I deny that it is—why isn't it equally important for him, then, to be on all of the university and college boards? The state superintendent has been a member ex officio of all of those boards, and it has been impossible for him to attend all of the board meetings. It just seems to me a little ridiculous to put the governor in this kind of position. It seems to me a frivolous position to take, a lack of understanding of how the governor of the state of Michigan works, and I sincerely hope we won't do anything this foolish.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: Prior to our recess we had voted to go ahead to section b. The Chair is not sure that some of these speakers wish to speak on section b. First, the chairman of the committee, Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: The Chair will recall, I am sure, that when we moved to section b, the secretary had read section b. I said it was my intention that since we had a minority amendment pending on this section, I would yield to the gentleman from Petoskey for an explanation on behalf of the majority of the committee on this section, and then I suggested that we yield the floor to the lady from Detroit so that she could offer an amendment on behalf of the minority. Does the Chair find any objection to that procedure?

CHAIRMAN POWELL: You are correct on that, and the Chair will recognize the delegate from Petoskey, Mr. Spitler.

MR. SPITLER: Mr. Chairman and delegates to the convention, the issue, as we see it here, is the selection of the superintendent of public instruction. We have had a great deal of discussion yesterday and today, much of which involved this particular issue. There are 3 methods of selecting the superintendent of public instruction; he may be appointed by the governor, he may be elected or he may be appointed by the state board of education and, as has been stated here, there was division on our committee as to how this should be done.

I respect the opinion of those who differ with me on this very thing, and I respect their rights to offer their opinion on it. I happen to be a member of the majority of the committee and I would like to say just a few words concerning the reason for taking the stand that I do. I think we have discussed this thing thoroughly yesterday and today. I think it had been discussed thoroughly before we ever came to convention. I think that your minds are pretty well made up on this, and what I say or what someone else says here is not going to change the vote of very many people in this committee. As a result, I am going to make my remarks very brief. In fact, I have cut out a great deal of what I intended to say. I just want to speak very briefly on why I feel the way I do, and I think those who feel differently should have an opportunity to express themselves, and then I hope that we may come to a decision on this matter and that we may move on. I hope that my statement — that I will be brief. I believe that you will find that to be true, and I hope that that can be followed by those who are presenting different sides on this particular issue.

I happen to feel that the superintendent of public instruction, as an administrative officer, as an executive officer for the school system of this state, should be put in that position where he has the least partisan political obligation that he possibly may have. I have been members of many organizations, and many organizations — not school organizations but other organizations — have committed themselves on this particular issue. They feel that the superintendent of public instruction, if he is to serve all the people of this state, the various members of the board of education, the various teaching personnel, the boys and girls of this state, if he is to do that and do it efficiently and effectively, he ought to be put in a position where he has as little party responsibility as he may have. Otherwise his decisions are bound to be slanted in the direction of that party which he represents, and I am speaking concerning both parties, not concerning any one particular party.

As I have said, many organizations have gone on record as favoring this plan for the selection of the superintendent of public instruction. The Michigan congress of parents and teachers, which represents thousands of people in this state, and I would say that 80 per cent or 90 per cent of them are lay people, not professional school people, not school personnel, but lay people in this state, and they have gone on record for years, of favoring this type of appointment of our superintendent of public instruction. The resolutions committee, for the past number of years, each year has come out with a resolution definitely asking that the superintendent of public instruction be appointed by the state board of education.

We have taken that practice when we select the presidents of our various universities and colleges. Those boards of control attempt to go out and select for themselves the best man available, whether he is in the state or whether he is in some other state, and give him the job of administering and administering to that institution for which he is employed. Just a few years ago, we made the same move in the manner of selecting a county superintendent of schools. Previous to that time, it had been his need to go out each year or each 2 years and run for office as a county superintendent of schools. We removed that. Now the county board of education selects him, and may select the most competent person available for that field. The only chief administrative executive officer of any kind of the state that is subject to election is now our state superintendent of public instruction.

What has been the direction nationally in this field? In 1909, when the present constitution was adopted, there were 4 superintendents of public instruction — and they were called by various names, but were the chief executive officers of the school — 4 were appointed by the board. In 1960, 22 of them were appointed by the board.

The last 3 superintendents of public instruction who left office — and each one of them left voluntarily — have taken the stand, definitely, for the appointment of the superintendent of public instruction by the state board of education, and they have said to me, personally, as I am sure they have said to many of you, that the reason for their not being a candidate for office was largely due to the fact that they had to campaign on a partisan ticket, they had to go through a partisan convention, they had to campaign on a partisan ticket. These were strong men, but they left the office largely for that reason.

This plan that we are submitting would permit the state board of education to select the most competent person available, whether he is in Michigan or whether he is anywhere in the nation. At the same time, it puts him in a position where he may work for the best interests of the schools of this state, without partisan obligation of any kind. I know it has been said, and I think it is true that members of the legislature, if they happen to be of one party and are asking for information from the department of public instruction and the superintendent of public instruction is of the opposite party, there is a feeling on their part — and I am not saying that this is necessarily true — but there is a feeling on their part, the information they get is slanted, and that holds true whether it is a Republican group in the legislature asking a Democratic superintendent of public instruction, or whether it is a Democratic group in the legislature asking a Republican superintendent of public instruction. The same thing holds true.

I think I have said all that I care to say. The issue is clear. If you believe that the superintendent of public instruction should be elected on a partisan basis, where he is responsible to a partisan governor, where he is responsible to a party that has nominated him through convention, if you believe that he should go out and campaign every 2 or 4 years on a partisan basis, and you believe that he can best serve the schools of this state that way, then you would vote for that type of selection. I believe that he cannot do it and do it efficiently. For that reason, I support the majority report and hope that you will vote in favor of it.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair notices there is a minority report filed here disagreeing with paragraph 1 of section b. The Chair is wondering if those minority report sponsors have filed an amendment to implement? Wouldn't that be in order next?

SECRETARY CHASE: Pursuant to their minority report, Miss Hart and Messrs. T. S. Brown and Douglas offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 18, after "Sec. b.", by striking out the balance of the line and all of lines 19, 20 and 21.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on this minority report amendment. Miss Hart.

MISS HART: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, let me first pay tribute to the work of the education committee, under the patience and perseverance of the long suffering chairman. The work of the education committee through the long preparatory months has been so thorough, so thoughtful, and so dedicated that it is with very real regret that Ted Brown, Ed Douglas and I must part with our fellow committee members and move to amend the committee proposal.

It is our recommendation that the superintendent of public instruction remain an elective officer. The majority has made its recommendation with what seems to us the mistaken idea that an agency of government entirely dependent for financial support upon politicians — and I use the word "politician" respectfully — may be taken out of politics. They also are of the opinion that the "best" school men and women are afraid to engage in political contests. This opinion, as an educator, I refuse to admit.

Let me read to you the testimony of our present superintendent, who has consistently maintained throughout the years that the office should remain an elective one, and let me remind you that Lynn Bartlett was defeated at the polls the first time he ran for office. I quote Dr. Bartlett:

Boasting a public school system comparable to the very best in the nation, the state of Michigan has long been acknowledged a leader in education.

Let me remind you that the educators who have talked to you on the floor have boasted of equality of education in this state. We are among the top states in the country.

We believe that a primary reason for Michigan's strong and vigorous leadership role in all areas and in all levels of education can be attributed to the fact that the state superintendent, elected by the people, has the opportunity and freedom of action that is a prerogative of an elected official.

As never before in the history of this state and nation has the importance of and the critical need for adequate educational opportunities been so apparent. It follows, therefore, that this is also a time when forthright, courageous and visionary leadership is absolutely indispensable to our future progress in education.

In light of this, the method by which a state superintendent of public instruction is selected is of critical importance. The method must, insofar as it is humanly possible, insure the selection of the most qualified individual, one who not only can demonstrate leadership, but also a person who is immediately responsive to the needs, wishes and demands of the citizens of Michigan.

It is our considered opinion that the office of the state superintendent of public instruction remain a partisan, elective post, but for a 4 year term of office rather than the present 2 years.

We cite the following reasons for the position we have taken in this matter. First, because he is directly responsible to the people rather than to any one individual or appointing authority, the state superintendent has much greater opportunity to exercise individual initiative and leadership. Secondly, education is a state function and therefore its chief executive must be in a position whereby he can work most effectively within the framework of state government. We believe that as an elected official, he has direct liaison with all other elected officials in state government, both in the executive and legislative branches, and it is most desirable that this be maintained. The chief state school officer should continue to serve as a member of the state administrative board so that the needs of education can be constantly and broadly interpreted to other state officials and branches of state government.

You will notice in the committee report it is pointed out that he will remain the chief school officer. But, let me say to you that a chief officer, acting with other officials — and he is going to have to check back with 8 widely separated board members before he can make a final decision, and if the state board is constituted as I hope it will be, we will have somebody from the upper peninsula, we will have somebody from southwest Michigan, from the northern part of the lower peninsula, we will have them from the west coast and from southeastern Michigan, and this is a pretty unwieldly kind of an operation.

Making this office appointive could have the effect of reducing the status of the chief state school officer, thereby minimizing both the stature of this position and the opportunity to exert the forceful leadership which is required. This post should be one of equal force and authority with the other administrative officers. Any provision which would, in any way, tend to regulate the role of education in state government to lesser importance would render a disservice to the children and the people of the state of Michigan.

The position of the chief state school officer is not truly analogous to that of a local superintendent of schools. A local superintendent works within the structure of the statutes, an organization of local government which is vastly different from the structure of state government. Let me say here that we have listened to people on the education committee who have been advocates of the little red schoolhouse, of the village schools, of consolidating areas out of the big city systems of Muskegon, Grand Rapids, Flint, Saginaw, Detroit — 2,144 school districts at the last count. All of these people are deserving of attention. This is not like a local area where board members can go into a school, examine it for themselves, listen to the people, talk with them, talk with the superintendent day in and day out, where the people can telephone the superintendent or any board member any day they want to, all it takes is the effort to take down the receiver and call a number. But, if you were a person in a little school district up in Keweenaw, say, and you were objecting to something that happened, an action on a state educational setup, and you called and you had to call somebody in South Haven to make your complaint, and he said, oh, he wasn't the person responsible at all, it was somebody in Detroit, and by the time you got through telephoning and registering your complaint, you would have a pretty heavy telephone bill. This way you call the superintendent. He is in a position to answer you because he has an independent voice.

It is, therefore, our reasoned opinion that an elected official in state government can work most effectively with other elected officials, and is in the strongest position to exercise the necessary leadership of his office.

The present system has worked well, as is evidenced by the fact that Michigan is considered to have one of the outstanding school systems in the nation. This is also evidenced by the caliber of the men who have sought and gained the office of state superintendent.

In summary, we iterate, then, that the present system of electing the state superintendent of public instruction should be continued, and that the length of his term of office should be for 4 years rather than 2 years.

This is the statement of Dr. Bartlett.

Now we are told that educators want no part of politics, are unwilling to participate in our American system of choice by the people of the officers who are to serve them. This I refuse to believe, but if it were true and I had to make a choice betwen a theorist who lives in an ivory tower withdrawn from the democratic processes that make our country great, and the man or woman who so believes in his educational program that he is willing to face the people, take them into his confidence and fight for what he believes, I will take the realist every time as best for education, best for the people and best for the entire state of Michigan. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I would like to compliment the lady from Detroit upon her eloquent statement and the forceful manner in which she presented it. I would also like to pay tribute to her, as well as the other members of the minority who signed her report with her for the very fine contribution which they made to the committee on education, contributions without which the committee on education could not nearly have functioned as successfully as it did.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN POWELL: The question is on the motion the committee do now rise. All in favor signify by saying aye. Opposed, no.

The motion prevails. May the Chair thank you all for your tolerance and cooperation and good will. I have been excused for the afternoon and someone else will preside. I wish you luck. (laughter)

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, Vice President Romney assumed the Chair.]

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: I am sure we will miss Delegate Powell and his effective presiding ability. I recognize Delegate Powell.

MR. POWELL: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration one proposal, has had some very eloquent remarks and the secretary will make a detailed report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 47, A proposal to replace sections 2 and 6 of article XI; has considered amendments thereto and has come to no final resolution thereon. That completes the present report of the committee of the whole, Mr. President.

We have 3 announcements.

The committee on style and drafting will meet in room K at 8:00 o'clock this evening. William B. Cudlip, chairman.

The committee on administration will meet at 1:30 this afternoon. Mr. DeVries, chairman.

The committee on emerging problems will meet at 12:30 today, committee room I, on the third floor. Mr. Gerald Eddy, director of the conservation department, will appear before the committee. Frank G. Millard, chairman.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The Chair recognizes Mr. Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. President, I move we recess until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: You have heard the motion. Those in favor say aye; opposed, no.

The motion prevails. We will recess until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon.

[Whereupon, at 11:30 o'clock a.m., the convention recessed; and, at 2:00 o'clock p.m. reconvened, with Vice President Hutchinson in the Chair.]

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Kent, Dr. DeVries.

MR. DeVRIES: Mr. President and fellow delegates, an oral report from the committee on administration: we have dealt with Mr. Lawrence's request, and within a few days we shall have stands on all the microphones for every delegate here. Therefore, there will be no more discrimination. This is entirely for your information.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The gentleman from Washtenaw, Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: I am disappointed, Mr. DeVries. I thought I was going to get a screwdriver. I mean, not the kind you are thinking of. (laughter)

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: General orders of the day. The Chair recognizes the delegate from Genesee, Mr. Millard.

MR. MILLARD: Mr. President, I move that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the consideration of matters on general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Genesee. All those in favor say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails, and the gentleman from Genesee, Mr. Millard, will preside.

[Whereupon, Mr. Millard assumed the Chair to preside as chairman of the committee of the whole.]

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The committee will be in order and the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Chairman, at the time the committee rose this morning, it had under consideration Committee Proposal 47. Under consideration was section b, to which the minority amendment had been offered, which amendment is as follows:

1. Amend page 1, line 18, after "Sec. b.", by striking out the balance of the line and all of lines 19, 20 and 21.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the amendment. The Chair does not have a list of those that were to be recognized and so the Chair will have to start fresh. Is there anybody that wishes to be recognized on the amendment? Mr. Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman, I did not wish to speak in front of anybody who had asked to speak on it before the recess, and if there is anybody who had requested to speak beforehand, I shall be glad to be seated and wait my turn.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Downs, as the Chair has no one on the list, you may proceed.

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say that I was on that list, but I think that what I will do, instead, is wait until we are discussing the first portion of this section, because I did want to answer Mr. Romney.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Madar then yields to Mr. Downs.

MR. DOWNS: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the question we are speaking upon is whether the superintendent should be an appointed or an elected official. This was covered quite well by Delegate Hart, but I would like to bring up one or two points that I think are pertinent to this. Some of the other speakers, and very properly, have raised a question about whether or not education is political. I would like to point out to the delegates that the history of free public education in America is the history of a political struggle of the people to get education, not so much for themselves but for their children. This was the big fight in the period of 1920 to '40, and we got public education largely as we increased the franchise so that the ballot was not limited to property owners alone. These two went hand in hand, and I believe we should remember that the history of public education is the history of a full political participation by an American people dedicated to the expansion of education.

I think, more immediately, in our history currently in Michigan and in the recent past, that I speak for an elected superintendent of public instruction for several reasons. I think one very telling reason is that if he is on the administrative board, as a constitutionally elected officer, he is going to be able to present the needs of education much more fully. I believe that the governor, as an elected constitutional officer, should weigh the various financial needs of the state, but if there is any one need that we have above any in this age where a man has orbited the world, where there are new problems, where all we are sure of is uncertainty and change, it is that need for further education.

I wish to make one other point on the value of an elected over an appointed official, and I yield to no man in the need for dedicated, career technicians. We need more of them. But at the heads of our agencies, and while this is called an administrative position because it is statewide, it is far more than a school superintendent administering problems in a local community with the citizen school board that meets monthly or more often on demand. We have a situation where the person who is elected to this position must have a statewide campaign for that position and a statewide campaign with other candidates running for office. I believe that the process of campaigning — and I think there are many of us here who are not unaware of the vigors of campaigning — that the process of campaigning is, in itself, educational.

The constituents of the candidates learn more of the problems of the state through the dynamics of our 2 party system, as well as other political meetings. I believe above all, that while the constituents may not all get to know the person who is elected personally, the very process of campaigning from the Keweenaw peninsula to the shores of Lake Michigan, to the shores of Lake Huron, to the central parts of our great state — the very process of campaigning possibly in 83 counties with different people and different problems — does give the elected candidate, and for that matter, the defeated candidate, a better concept of the vastness of our state, the educational problems of the citizens, and further qualifies him to meet the statewide problems we have. I feel, therefore, that the elected person who has a general concept can do a better job and he, in turn, through the educational system, should, of course, hire the best career technicians possible.

I do approve of the idea of increasing the term to at least 4 years because of the continuity. This is a real difference, perhaps, in political philosophy. I realize full well that there is this and many other questions on which there can be honest differences amongst honest people. But I, for one, as we are moving into a more technical society, want our people at the helm of these great organizations on an elected basis, with technicians available to help them. I urge, therefore, support of the minority report amendment. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Will the gentleman yield for a question at this point? Am I correct in asking the gentleman whether or not the pending amendment merely strikes out the first paragraph of section b and does not specifically provide for the method of choice of the superintendent?

MR. DOWNS: As I read this, Chairman Bentley, I understand that does that, and perhaps a method of choice would be in the part dealing with the election of other officials.

Again my own thinking, Mr. Chairman — and I am not sure if this is in the minority report — is that the election — and I hope that at a later time in the convention we will eliminate spring elections and have them in the fall so that this office is tied in with other 4 year terms. I realize, Mr. Bentley, that this is really looking 2 curves down the road, but I doubt, with all the other problems we have had on education, we should necessarily get into whether we should have 4 year terms for the governor and others.

MISS HART: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry. It was intended—

MR. DOWNS: I will yield to Delegate Hart.

MISS HART: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Just a minute. So we can get it on the record, the Chair will recognize Delegate Hart.

MISS HART: Thank you. I wanted to answer the chairman of the committee. It was intended by the minority, and I read that this morning at the beginning of the statement, I think, that the superintendent of public instruction, this would be struck out, and insert, "The superintendent of public instruction shall be elected for a 4 year term."

MR. BENTLEY: But the pending amendment merely strikes out the first paragraph, does it not?

MISS HART: That was not the intention.

MR. BENTLEY: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if the secretary would read the pending amendment so we could be certain what we are voting on.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The pending amendment is, as the secretary has it, to strike out the first 4 lines of section b.

Miss Hart has also filed an amendment to accomplish the purpose that she has in mind.

MR. BENTLEY: I am wondering if Miss Hart wants to combine these 2 amendments?

MISS HART: Yes, that was the intention.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the lady be permitted to combine these 2 amendments.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Is there any objection? If not, the amendments will be combined and the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment, then, as now revised is as follows:

1. Amend page 1, line 18, after "Sec. b.", by striking out "The state board shall appoint a superintendent of public instruction whose term of office shall be determined by the board.", and inserting "The superintendent of public instruction shall be elected for a 4 year term.".

The remainder of the first paragraph stands as it is in the section, "He shall be the chairman of the state board without the right to vote, and shall be responsible for the execution of its policies."

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, the reason I raised that question is because I think that the initial amendment offered by the lady should be corrected, because, if my memory serves me correctly, the initial amendment strikes out the entire paragraph, and that should be changed if she wants to leave the second sentence of the first paragraph intact.

Does the gentleman want me to yield to him?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Downs, might the Chair ask of Delegate Hart if that is her understanding, if that is correct?

Delegate Bentley, as the Chair understands, this amendment was agreed to without objection.

Delegate Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman, I believe Delegate Bentley raised a very pertinent point on the matter of how these elections fit into other elections. What I tried to say earlier is that I think when we get to the election proposal, there will be discussion of gearing our different offices into one statewide election, where we now have fall and spring elections. I think the intent here is clear as to whether or not the superintendent should be appointed or elected. The minority report makes it very clear, in speaking for an elected superintendent of public instruction, without going into the details as to whether that should be a spring or fall election.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, if I may speak briefly on the amendment now?

MR. DOWNS: I will yield the floor to Delegate Bentley, as I have finished the comments. If he has any questions, I shall be glad to try to answer them.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Bentley, you are recognized.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I thought it might be helpful to the members of the committee of the whole to know the system prevailing in other states with respect to the method of selecting the chief state school officer. At the present time there are 5 states where the chief of state school officer, corresponding to the superintendent of public instruction, is appointed by the governor. Those 5 states are Alaska, New Jersey — both of which, of course, have recent constitutions — Pennsylvania, Tennessee and Virginia.

There are 23 states, Mr. Chairman, where the superintendent is elected by the people, and I would like the delegates to reflect on the school systems as they exist in those 23 states, as I read them. These 23 states are as follows: Alabama, Arizona, California, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Montana, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

In the other 22 states, the chief state school officer is appointed by the board of education, including the states with recent constitutions, such as Hawaii, Missouri and the state of New York.

It is for these reasons, among many others that have been advanced, Mr. Chairman, that I urge the defeat of the pending amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Judd.

MRS. JUDD: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I would like to first agree wholeheartedly with Delegate Downs that the agency which makes policy for education in the state should be directly elected by the people. We have provided this in the committee proposal in the board of education, which is to be nominated by the party conventions and elected by the people. This, as I understand it, is to be a much larger and stronger board so far as responsibilities go, than it has ever been before, and will be a major policy making board.

I think we have no reason to fear that educational policy will be made by a group responsible to the people. If we were to elect, also, directly, the superintendent of public instruction, we would be setting up a competitive policymaking officer, independent of the board of education, who, himself, would have policy making power simply by the fact that he is independent of everybody in the government and only responsible to the people. So we might have some dangerous conflict in the field of education between these 2 agencies.

I think, then, that before we decide how the superintendent should be selected, we must first decide what his function is to be. Is he to be another policymaking agent, or is he to be administrative, to carry out the policies of the board? I note that the proposers of this amendment have consented to leave in the text the words that the superintendent shall be responsible for the execution of its — that is, the board's — policies. We cannot expect the kind of cooperation, with this new and more powerful policymaking board, that we should have if the superintendent is, himself, independently elected.

I therefore very strongly urge that we keep him an appointive official and responsible to the board.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the delegate who just spoke, Mrs. Judd, has made a contribution on this, as well as the chairman of the committee, on the differences between the elected and the appointed.

As I said earlier, if this were a city school board that met regularly, once a month or so, and were in constant contact with the superintendent, I think the arguments would have much more weight. I think the difference here is largely one of degree. While the proposal does not say how often the board would meet, there is no per diem spelled out, and many of these bodies that are policymaking, yet partially honorary in nature, I think, history shows, meet maybe once a month, and when the person has a statewide function, I believe the matter of degree is such to warrant the election.

I would like to point out that the matter where people are elected includes those states of Oregon, Washington, Wisconsin and California, and that one reason our sister state, Wisconsin, has been able, in my judgment, to keep the independence and integrity of their educational system, regardless of the changes of political winds, is its fortune has been that the University of Wisconsin has been on the elected basis for control and has proved to be very satisfactory.

I would just like to make one more point. We have talked a little on the history of education, and for just a moment, since the question of comparison with other states has come up, I wish to try to be very brief on what I think is an historical trend. Fifty years ago or more, there was in the books, the literature — The Shame of the Cities, by Lincoln Stephens; and others — the growing feeling that political parties ran their business in smoke filled rooms, or "smoke fulled rooms," perhaps, is the better term, and that therefore, to prevent that, we should eliminate the party primary and have the direct primary, the short ballot, and even — some of us may shudder at the concept — nonpartisan election of city managers. At that time, that was an improvement over the political machines of that day.

I think, in the last few years, we have within our political life developed more responsive politicial organizations in the United States, and particularly in states like Michigan. I might add that one reason I think the smoke filled rooms have decreased is that our friends, the women, got to vote, and when the women got to vote and became the majority of the voters, maybe that added to the moral influence within political parties. I leave that to other delegates. I think that now the trend is to have responsible, political participation. I feel that our political parties, with their vigorous campaigns and conventions and year round meetings have given people a chance to participate in political campaigns and bring forth the ideas of education and other state offices in a very positive and helpful way.

I therefore urge the support of the minority report amendment. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wayne, Delegate Douglas.

MR. DOUGLAS: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, it was my good fortune to be a member of the committee on education, and I relate to you at this time that never before have I served with such fine persons who were dedicated to a certain purpose, that is, to bring before this convention the best proposals pertaining to education. We did make some mistakes, and I think that this particular proposal is a mistake. I think that one thing that the members on this committee would perhaps be unanimous on, is our commendation of our chairman, who was very firm, but he was fair, always a gentleman, and very tactful.

It has been a rule of long standing that any time a proponent of a constitutional change comes forth with a proposal, he must bear the burden of proof. The committee should be able to come to this convention and show you that the proposal that they are presenting is necessary or that it would greatly improve the existing situation. They cannot claim this, because we have absolutely no evidence at all that the present office, superintendent of public instruction, as elected, is, in any way, detrimental to our educational system. On the contrary, you will hear on this floor — and we have heard consistently in committee — that we have a very fine superintendent and we are all proud of how he was elected.

Now the committee comes to you with a very substantial change, and I assert to you that they will present no evidence of fact. I am inviting your attention to page 403 of the journal. This is the committee report. I think that in order to justify this substantial change the committee should present you with some kind of fact. The chairman tried to point out a few statistics, and they have a little chart here. This chart should tell us something, and if it doesn't tell us something, it should imply something. In looking at this chart, I am not sure whether we are supposed to think that it presents a syllogistic situation or not. That is, does this chart tell us that because certain states have changed to appointment by the board of the superintendent, do those states have a better system of education? That fact is not given here. From what kind of situation did they change to an appointment?

You have just heard Mr. Downs tell you a little bit about history. Anyone here who knows anything about statistics or the making up of charts knows you can present any kind of chart, any kind of statistics you want to, to show any kind of situation you want to. There are 8 states that have exactly the same system that the committee is proposing, and nowhere in the report do they tell us that these states that have the same situation have a better educational system. Colorado, Iowa, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, Ohio, Texas and Utah; those are the states that now have the situation that the committee wants you to adopt. If it is so good, let them come forth with some facts and tell this delegation that they have a better system in another state, so let's be copycats.

Twenty-two states now elect the superintendent of public instruction, and the twenty-third is New York, which elects it by the legislature.

Let's look again at the committee report and see if it says anything at all. I think that in the next paragraph it starts off with opinions, stated positively without justification. I think that it is very brave for the committee to come forth with a categorical statement, positively made, based on mere opinion. It says, "Appointment by a state board assures that the superintendent of public instruction will be selected from . . . the most competent people available to serve in that capacity." Would that not seem contrary to the exact situation we have now, and everybody in education is bragging about the fact that Michigan ranks in the upper 1/3 in the nation? It implies that only by appointment can the most competent person be made available, and to justify this, somewhat, the committee goes on to tell us about 3 previous superintendents who have gone on record refusing to submit themselves to a test of the people.

I personally take issue with this because I think that it is one way we can start to undermine the very democratic process by which we are the inheritors, that is the electoral franchise. I think that we should stop this trend towards taking away from the people that which is rightfully theirs, and that is to go to the polls and elect the administrators that they want to carry forth the program here in Michigan. It has been stated by one of your distinguished delegates here in talking to the press, saying to the press that at present the politicians and the public officials, their images are very low before the people. I think that we can bolster those images, I think that we can be proud of our politicians. I don't think that we should undermine our political system. To be a politician is not a bad thing, but to hear some educators talk, it is a bad thing unless you are running for president of the United States. This, I think, is contrary to the things that we are trying to teach to our youngsters.

I should like to present, in conclusion, 5 points, and I challenge the majority to come forth, refute these points and give to this delegation some facts that what they propose is better.

First, elected officials are made directly responsible to the citizens electing them. The only way educational programs and the issues involved can be carried throughout this state is for someone interested in education to carry those issues in a campaign. The state board of education, those persons seeking election, will not know all the educational issues.

Two, the system has worked well in the past. I don't think we are going to have anybody from the committee coming up and saying that the system has not worked well in the past. We have sought to weld together the fragmented system we have in education in the state, but I don't think that we will have anyone who will refute this point.

Point 3, the best politics of each political party is to screen carefully and select strong and capable candidates. You can hear a lot on this floor about taking politics out of education. I think that this is sort of foolish, unless you are talking in the extremes, like Mr. Downs told you about past situations. To argue this point is to assume that the 2 responsible political parties in this state do not come forth with a platform and a program in education that is sincere and constructive, and I don't think that we should start with this premise.

Point 4, an elected state superintendent has equal status and recognition with other elected state administrative officials. This is not true of the appointive officials. I heard this morning a delegate refer to this creature of the board, and that is exactly what we are relegating the superintendent to, a mere errand boy, an errand boy between the state board of education and the administrative board and the governor, and we would not have gotten into the dilemma of this morning had we not come up with this committee proposal.

I served on the subcommittee, which was chaired by Delegate Romney, and one a.m. everyone had a clear head, we had breakfast together and handled business, and I suggested that before we proceed any further we agree upon a basic organizational structure. Everybody said, "This is fine. This is what we shall do." So we started gathering our pieces of paper and drawing out diagrams in order to come up with a basic structure, and this is what we had: we had the governor at the top, and we had a direct line to the superintendent of public instruction. What does this mean? This means that he either had to be appointed directly by the governor or he had to be elected by the people. The next direct line was to the state board of education. I shall not go into the rest of it because it is not an issue here, but if you understand the basic organizational structure that we all agreed upon — and it was brought out that this is what they use in industry and I didn't deny this because I find that in most organizations this is the way it probably should be. So we proceeded, after that, to go into all of the aspects of the state board of education, and we agreed upon a certain wording.

But later, there was a subcommittee meeting which I could not attend, and I gave notice that I could not attend it, and the matter was debated and out came this monstrosity that is presented to you today. This was the compromise. Once the compromise was made, you see, the direct link between the governor and the superintendent of public instruction was destroyed. So we got in committee, the whole committee now, considering the wording of the state board of education, and we said, "Wait a minute here, we've got to back up. Something's wrong. We've got to reestablish this link. How shall we do it?" Well, they did it. They stuck on a sentence on the end and you see how confused it brought the situation to this morning. This is how we got into the dilemma this morning because we violated the fundamental organizational structure that we started off with.

My last and fifth point: it is difficult for an appointed official to exert state educational leadership when each major decision must be reviewed and approved by his board. I ask you, with the committee proposal to whom is he responsible? He is not responsible to the people. He is not responsible to the governor. He is a creature of the board, and he is responsible to the board. Every time a major decision has to be made on the administrative board, he has to go back to those people who hired him. You think that once we get a man in there appointed, that he can be removed immediately? This is not so. Let's look at the situation practically. You've got 8 members on the state board of education who would be elected every 2 years. You are going to replace 2. What does he have to do? He's got to play some politics and not too much politics, because once he gets in, all he has to do is to have 3 or 4 cronies, and he will stay in there forever. We, the people, can't get him out. The governor can't get him out. We provide that the governor shall change office, if he is elected, every 4 years, but not this creature of the board.

So I urge you, fellow delegates, in conclusion here, if the majority on the committee report, cannot come forth to this delegation and prove to you, definitely, or by some evidence, that what they propose is much better, then I think that you should stick with the same thing that we have now, which would retain in the people the electoral franchise. Thank you. (applause)

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Bay, Delegate Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman, I would like to yield for 2 questions to Delegate Hart, if she would care to answer them.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: If the lady wishes to answer.

MISS HART: It is all right.

MR. HIGGS: Is it the intention of this amendment that the nomination be made at party convention?

MISS HART: As it is now, Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Is your answer yes?

MISS HART: Yes.

MR. HIGGS: And second, with regard to the comments of Delegate Judd, which I think really goes to the heart of the selective process of choosing a superintendent, what do you conceive to be the duties of this office? That is, do you conceive of these duties as principally an administrative official or do you conceive of it as a political, policy making function?

MISS HART: I think it has to be a policymaking function, in part. I don't see how it can help but be a policymaking position in part. The policy of education, which would be with the advice and consent of the state board of education.

MR. HIGGS: Would it be your thinking that it would be a shared responsibility or would it be centered in the superintendent or in the board or concurrent?

MISS HART: I would assume that, as it is now, the state superintendent of public instruction would consult his board, welcome their advice, but that he would be responsible. He would be a member of the top officialdom, whatever that might be when we get through with this constitution. As it is now, he is a member of the administrative board. He speaks for education. When he speaks for education, he is in a position to speak always for education, independently, for the best interests of education. I would hope that he could continue to speak that way.

MR. HIGGS: Thank you. Fellow delegates, I would like now to address myself to the question. It seems to me that with the answers to these questions and the remarks of Deleate Downs and Delegate Douglas, we have something to get our teeth into.

First of all, I feel compelled to support the committee in that I think that this particular amendment would result in a division of leadership. You would have, actually, 2 heads of the system. You would have the board and the superintendent, if I follow Miss Hart. There would be a great opportunity for one to say, "That is your responsibility"; and the other to say, "Well, you are elected, that is your responsibility." I kind of favor the direct responsibility in the board for that reason. Secondly, I think that with regard to Delegate Downs' indicating that the official in this office should be free of political caprice and whim — at some point I picked those words out — and it seems to me that the committee proposal would offer greater stability than the amendment would offer, in that I note that the state board would be elected for the term of 8 years. This, being a much longer term than the governor or than any other elective officials, I think would build in this greater degree of stability. I think that actually when you are comparing the elective process with the appointive in this context, that Delegate Downs' point would actually limit the selection of the people in that they would actually have only 2 choices when they went to the polls; one party or the other party. That would be the first limitation.

The second limitation would be that this man would have to be a resident of the state in order to run. I don't think we have taken anything away from the people that is rightfully theirs, as Delegate Douglas has suggested. By giving the people, through their elected representatives, a broader base for selection, we would be electing the state board and they would have available to them candidates for this office from all over the United States, wherever they could find the finest administrators possible. They could search and seek, and in the calm, deliberative atmosphere of the meetings of the board, they would be able to screen these candidates in order to determine the best available. I am not sure just how your party conventions operate, but I am not exactly sure that a party convention would be in a position to go through this careful screening process, but certainly we have given the people a broader selection through their elected representatives than your amendment would provide.

I would like to answer only one of the points made by Delegate Douglas. He states that he challenges any member of the other party to answer any of these. I would just choose one, that elected officials are directly responsible to the people who elected them. In the committee proposal I think we have the finest kind of responsibility available. In the minority amendment the people would be limited to exert that direct responsibility only once in 4 years. If I understand the committee proposal, the board would have the power to determine the term of office. The board would have an opportunity, perhaps, to determine that the superintendent serve on a trial basis for a year, or something like that. I am not an expert in the education field, but it seems to me that the responsibility of the superintendent would be more direct and more immediate to the elected representatives of the people serving on the board than they would be under the minority amendment. So I would favor the committee proposal.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wayne, Delegate Stevens.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, as a political theorist who has so recently left his ivory tower by way of retirement to enter the rough field of practical politics very briefly, I hope, I would like to make a few simple statements of fact. In the 40 years in which I have been connected with education in this state, I think I have learned a few of the facts regarding the superintendent of public instruction, as well as some other things. He has probably less real authority in making policy and more prestige than any other elected state official. His duties are almost entirely ministerial, carrying out those duties which the legislature provides for him by law. As a consequence, it would be highly desirable that he be appointed by the board which, under the new constitution, will have broad duties.

In the 1908 constitution, the board's principal duty has been to administer the affairs of 4 institutions of higher learning, originally known as normal schools. These duties will be much increased, and the superintendent of public instruction, as visioned here, will be the administrative officer to carry out the policies.

For over 40 years — I don't know how much longer, but I know for over 40 years — most of the school people, including the organizations of teachers throughout the state, have urged that the superintendent of instruction be appointed by the board of education. I think it is high time that we give due consideration to that. It seems the logical, sensible and proper thing to do. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wayne, Delegate Brown.

MR. T. S. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I should like, at this juncture, to say my amen to the fine speech of Delegate Douglas, and approach this thing from perhaps a slightly different point of view. It would be appropriate, I think, at this time, to discuss the philosophy of the word "efficiency," because this matter has been broached in many different ways during the course of our deliberations to date, and will also be important in our deliberations in the future.

There is a point at which the liberal philosophy and the true, conservative philosophy merge, in regard to the word "efficiency." From the beginning of this convention we have been exposed, on many occasions, to the terminology of the marketplace. We are going to get down to the business of the convention, it was said. We are limited to 17,000 words, it was said. We must get on with what is urgent about the business of the convention, it was said. And we must have efficiency, and above all, according to this particular point of view, we must have effective government. This is a very key word, "effective" government.

I submit that what is wrong essentially and philosophically with our country today is that we are so busy doing what is urgent that we neglect to do what is important. There are those people within this convention who would say, "We are casting a pox upon both your houses, the liberal element and the extreme conservative and perhaps rural element, because both of you are for the status quo, because both of you would like to have all of the officials remain elected. We are casting a pox upon both your houses." And we are saying we are for efficient, modern, progressive, far reaching government. There is a latent fallacy, and I think it is a philosophical one because, fellow delegates, government was never meant to be efficient. It was never meant to be cold and hard and sterile and smoothly working. Government has built within it a gross inefficiency to safeguard the rights of the people. At some part in the political spectrum, the true liberal and the true conservative will say that the ultimate repository of all faith and confidence in the future of a government lies within the people when they cast their ballots. For that particular reason, among many others, I am certainly one of the proponents of the amendment to restore or, at least, maintain the school superintendent in an elective capacity.

There is one other minor point, and I hate to end on a Monday note, but as a practical matter, I think what will happen, if you make the superintendent the chosen minister of the elected board or, worse still — and this, of course, is not before us now — if he were the chosen minister of the governor, you would exchange the grossness and the blatant aspect of regular party politics for the hidden politics of school administration, and without getting on the school administrators, without getting into a subject that I know will cause them to rise to their own defense, I would suggest also that the hidden politics of school administration is more insidious and more unworkable than the open politics of regular party politics and machinery.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oakland, Delegate King.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the delegation, I was extremely pleased when I, as we progressed through this education article, found that we were going to strengthen the board of education. My opinion is, the present board of education is not constituted as a broad and powerful coordinating group over all state supported educational institutions. I am very pleased that Miss Hart and the other distinguished educators on this committee felt that this was a necessary constructive step. But at this point I am completely confused. We have strengthened this board of education, which is responsible to the people and which is elected by the people, and all the people, and not by districts or anything else, and all of a sudden now we want to also elect another policymaking official as superintendent of public instruction. My confusion arises at this point. Who is really responsible for the policy with regard to education in the state of Michigan?

It would be my understanding — and correct me if I am wrong — that although the superintendent of public instruction should be an administrative officer responsible to the board of education, it would be my understanding that the board of education could not replace or remove the superintendent of public instruction, under the pending amendment. With this in mind — and I don't want to draw diagrams in the air, but an analogy was drawn between business and government — at the top of any table of organization in business you find the stockholders, and I assume that at the top of any table of organization in government, you find the voters. I don't think that anyone would propose that the stockholders should elect the board of directors, and then also elect the president of the corporation. Why, this would be ridiculous. So let's bring this thing back into focus, what we are talking about here is a chief administrator.

I say the board of education ought to be elected by the people.

I say it ought to be a powerful coordinating group, which can bring all of the divergent factors of education in this state of Michigan together, working as a team. But I can't, for the life of me, in the name of good government, understand how we would want to dilute this constructive step forward that we have taken by supporting any such amendment as shown on the wall at this time.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Grand Rapids, Delegate DeVries.

MR. DeVRIES: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, Mr. King has raised some of the points that I had in mind, but frankly, Miss Hart and Mr. Downs, Mr. Brown, I am having a hard time getting oriented here, or maybe it is reoriented. Is it true that I am hearing from these distinguished colleagues: one, "there is no need to change because the system we now have is good; therefore, we must retain it because if it wasn't any good we wouldn't have it?" Which is about the best argument I have ever heard for status quo. I've got nothing against status quo, but I do think when we do face the situation where we need social change, we ought to recognize it, so I am curious about that. Secondly, the argument that "we have to keep government close to the people." I think we all believe this, but you know as well as I, in any statewide poll, less than 5 per cent of the people of this state can tell you who is on the ad board, can name more than one member, and certainly not the superintendent of public instruction. The election, therefore, for the superintendent of public instruction is not a situation where the people of this state rationally choose between 2 potential administrators of our school system. I think it is merely a test of party strength at one point and time.

It is obvious that the superintendent of public instruction, from what I have heard today, is purely an administrative officer, and, as such, should be appointed and responsible to an elected board. This is what the committee proposes. So I would urge the defeat of the amendment and support of the committee proposal. I think it is a fine step forward and a much needed social change.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize the storyteller from Isabella, Delegate Anspach.

MR. ANSPACH: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it has been my great fortune to be a member of the committee on education, and because of that association I have come to respect and admire all of the members of the committee, and I say that in all sincerity.

You heard a very, very fine presentation by Mr. Douglas. I am not differing from Mr. Douglas except I want to comment on some of the points that he made. His first point was elected officials are responsible to the people more so than a person who is appointed by the board. I go back to some comments that were made a moment ago: you will have 8 members of the board who will be elected by the people, who will be responsible for the appointment of the superintendent. Therefore, you have 8 people who will receive the screening, commendation and the condemnation of the people of the state. Therefore, he is responsible, through them, to the people. He is responsible to 8 people who are elected by the people on a party ticket.

The second point, it worked well in the past, therefore it should be retained, Dr. DeVries answered a part of the question there, the point made there. Whether it has worked well or not is a matter of opinion. On the other side, to support the opinion of those who think, perhaps, it hadn't worked well, you have the opinion, resolutions and so forth of the M.E.A., the superintendents of the state, various professional organizations, including university people, lay people, including various groups throughout the state, so if it comes down to a matter of opinion, you have the opinions of many people that have some question as to whether it has worked well in the past.

Second, you get good political screening. You certainly get good political screening on the selection of 8 people who will run on party ticket. In addition to that, those 8 will screen the candidates for appointment to the office of superintendent of public instruction, so you certainly will get screening, all the screening that I think is perhaps necessary. The next, an elected official will have greater status because he is elected. If you elect 8 members of the board, and the eyes of the state are on the 8 members, knowing it is their responsibility to appoint an individual who will direct, under their supervision, the affairs of education in the state, you certainly are going to give that person status especially. We lost one member out of the state board of education, as you know, who went to the state of Colorado, a very, very fine person, because the board in Colorado has the right to appoint. So they took our deputy of the state of Michigan about 2 years ago, to go to the state of Colorado. His going to the state of Colorado certainly was indicative of the prestige of this individual from the standpoint of educational circles in the United States because he was selected as one of the outstanding educators in the United States.

The third point: it is difficult to give decision to a board. I don't know whether it would be more difficult to give a decision if you are on a board than it is now, because the superintendent of public instruction must work with various commissions and committees that he appoints. Therefore, it is difficult for him to make a decision on the spur of the moment, too, until he goes back to some of these advisory groups that he has set up to advise him.

Therefore, I think that the committee proposal is right in its recommendation that the superintendent be appointed by this board. I therefore urge support of the committee proposal, and defeat of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wayne, Delegate Ford.

MR. FORD: I rise only to question those who would have you believe that this concept of an appointed superintendent of public instruction versus an elected superintendent of public instruction is something modern or something new. If you will take a look in the blue volume that all of you have, you will find that in 1835, the constitution provided that the superintendent of public instruction would, in fact, be appointed by the governor, subject to the advice and consent of the legislature. In 1850, for whatever their reason, they dropped that provision from the constitution when they revised it just 15 years later, so for 15 years in this state, we did have an appointed superintendent of public instruction. When Mr. Douglas asked if we had had any experiences as to whether or not this would be an improvement, I submit we have had experience as to the fact that it wasn't an improvement because after trying it for 15 years, the people in drafting a new constitution dropped it from the constitution.

In 1907, when the convention met, if you look at the little blue message to the people, you discover that they made another change with respect to this office, and I would like to read the explanation that they gave to the people in 1908 when they asked them to vote on the present constitution as to why they made the changes that they made, with respect to section 2 of article XI. I am reading from the section itself:

> A superintendent of public instruction shall be elected at the regular election to be held on the first Monday in April, 1909, and every second year thereafter. He shall hold office for a period of 2 years from the first day of July following his election and until his successor is elected and qualified.

At this point they began to spell out specifically some of the duties that he would have and some of the powers.

> He shall have general supervision of public instruction in the state. He shall be a member and secretary of the state board of education. He shall be ex officio a member of all other boards having control of public instruction in any state institution, with the right to speak but not to vote. His duties and compensation shall be prescribed by law.

The language very clearly indicates that they expected that the superintendent of public instruction would have certain constitutional powers, in answer to Mr. Higgs' question, and in addition thereto, it made it clear that they expected that the legislature might, from time to time, add to those powers. But I don't think there is any lawyer here who would suggest for one moment that the powers and prerogatives set forth in this section of the constitution could, in any way, be diminished by the legislature.

In explaining why they changed the language from the preceding constitution, this is what they said:

> This section takes the place of section 1, article XIII of the present constitution, and includes certain provisions of section 1, article VIII, and section 1, article IX. The propositions to make the office of superintendent of public instruction elective at the April election, to make him a member of the state board of education and other educational boards are not found in the existing constitution.

They are referring to the Constitution of 1850.

> The first change is designed to place his selection on the same basis as the selection of regents and judges, and the second is a recognition of certain present statutory provisions.

It was made very clear that in 1907, in a constitutional convention that made, as we all agree, very few changes from the Constitution of 1850, that they went out of their way to do 2 things: to make it very clear that they had some basic constitutional powers, prerogatives and duties and, secondly, to provide that he should be selected in the same manner as the regents. I submit that their reasoning was that they felt that the universities of this state should be governed by people answerable directly to the people, and they had had the experience of leaving to the legislature, between 1850 and 1907, the method of selection, and decided they better make it constitutional again.

I hate to be repetitious, but just see what we did: for 15 years we appointed him. For 50 years we left it to the legislature, and at the end of that first 15 years, we got away from the appointment but went to the legislature. At the end of that period of time, we evolved to a situation where by constitution we guaranteed that he would be elected by the people. I submit that this shows a progression of the treatment of this office not from the elective process to the appointive process, but, quite the contrary, from a trial of the appointive process to a flexible Constitution of 1850, which didn't prescribe the method but left it to the legislature, to the 1907-1908 situation where they said, "We have to guarantee to the people this right by constitution."

So, if we are going to be modern and we are going to be forward, let's do it. Let's don't go back to 1835 and start off with a concept that was rejected after only 15 years of life in this state.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: I recognize Delegate Sterrett.

MR. STERRETT: Mr. Chairman and delegates, we heard Mr. Down's statement about the benefit of the campaign of the superintendent of public instruction. I would like to point out to you that the author of this amendment was sitting at the committee table in the committee on executive branch when our present superintendent of public instruction appeared before us as a witness. My question to him was: in your last campaign, do you feel that you came in contact with at least 10 per cent of the voters of the state of Michigan? And he was unable to say that he had even come in contact with 10 per cent of the voters. How are the people getting to know a person if that person can only come in contact with this number of people?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the minority amendment. The secretary will read the amendment so we will know what it is all about.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is:

MR. DOUGLAS: I demand a division vote, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: A division has been demanded. Is the demand seconded? There is a sufficient number up. All those in favor of the minority amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote nay. The time has elapsed. The secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Miss Hart and others, the yeas are 45, the nays are 82.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The amendment is not adopted. Are there any further amendments to section b?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Kuhn offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 18, after "Sec. b.", by striking out "The state board shall appoint a superintendent of public instruction whose term of office shall be determined by the board.", and inserting "The governor shall appoint a superintendent of public instruction with the advice and consent of the state board of education and whose term of office shall be at the pleasure of the governor.".

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, as you know, it has been said, "In a chain of command the top administrative head should have the appointment of his department heads." Well, the superintendent of public instruction is the administrative head of the state department of education. He is the chief educational officer of the state.

You know under our federal system the president appoints his cabinet. I feel this should be the same in the state of Michigan. After all, it has been pointed out to us that 50 per cent of our appropriations go to education and, therefore, we should have responsibility as to how our money is spent and things of that nature. I think it is important that when we have someone who is superintendent of public instruction, that we have responsibility in the people to be able to remove him. If he is insulated by 8 members of the state board of education, then I think we are fooling ourselves. I think that is one of the reasons we called this constitutional convention: to do away with these so called 120 departments, to reduce the number so we could pinpoint responsibility. This way, we can pinpoint responsibility. The superintendent of public instruction would be appointed at the pleasure of the governor. If he weren't doing the job the governor thought he should do, he could be removed by the governor.

How are the people in education going to be protected? Well, the people do elect our state board of education and, therefore, they are supposed to be on the side of education. They have the right of veto if they feel that the governor did not make a wise selection, and that is why we use the words "advice and consent." We would hope that the governor would go to the state board of education and get their advice, and he would have to have their consent in order to make the appointment. We feel this would make our administrative chart correct, the chain of command would be correct, we would pinpoint responsibility. Therefore, if this plan would be adopted, we could take the governor, as the committee has recommended, off the state board of education and then we would still have a sound, administrative chart.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Delegate Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pontiac, one of the hardest working, most valuable members of the committee, has been entirely consistent on his position. He voted for it in committee and he is entirely within his rights in offering the amendment on the floor.

Nevertheless, for reasons which I do not think need to be repeated, the committee did not see fit to agree with his position, and therefore, on behalf of the committee on education, I ask that the pending amendment be defeated.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the amendment by Delegate Kuhn. The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Kuhn's amendment:

[The amendment was again read by the secretary. For text, see above.]

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: I just want to state that this resembles one which was in committee, but it is not the same. Mr. Kuhn added the language, "to serve at the pleasure of the governor," which was not in the proposal that I had favored in the committee, and I am opposed to that addition.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman, I wish to rise, very briefly, in opposition to the amendment. I believe that this violates the separation of education from other parts of state government, and believe it would weaken our educational system and not strengthen it.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I want to direct attention particularly to the closing language of the proposed amendment, that "the term of office shall be at the pleasure of the governor." Here we have one of the members of the administrative board, and it is true, as has been suggested during some of our discussion, that the governor has the power to remove, and under the present constitution, that reads as follows:

> The governor shall have power and it shall be his duty, except at such time as the legislature may be in session, to examine into the condition and administration of any public office and the acts of any public officer, elective or appointive; to remove from office for gross neglect of duty or for corrupt conduct in office, or any other misfeasance or malfeasance therein, any elective or appointive state officer, except legislative or judicial, and report the causes of such removal to the legislature at its next session.

It seems to me this language goes far beyond that. Under the other constitutional provision, the governor will be under the necessity of demonstrating to the people of the state his own good faith and that there was some misfeasance or malfeasance in office as well. Under the language we have in this proposed amendment, all he needs to do is write them a letter, "It is no longer my pleasure to have you continue in the office."

I therefore move, if I may do it without presenting it in writing, that the language after the word "be" in the next to the last line to the end be stricken, and the language would then be, "whose term of office shall be fixed by law."

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Dehnke suggests the following revision to the amendment offered by Mr. Kuhn: after the words "shall be" strike out the language "at the pleasure of the governor" and insert "fixed by law"; so the language will then read, "whose term of office shall be fixed by law."

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman, I would accept the revision.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Without objection, the revision of Delegate Dehnke is accepted. Are you ready for the question? Mr. Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer a couple of points that were raised by Mr. Downs. He is worried about the separation of powers. It should be noted that New Jersey, which was the last state to revise its constitution, has put the power in the governor to appoint the superintendent of public instruction, and also one of our newest states, Alaska, has put the power in the governor to appoint the superintendent of public instruction.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Brown.

MR. T. S. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, I was going to let this matter pass because I had hoped, and I thought that the Kuhn amendment would fall of its own weight, but apparently it is not quite that heavy yet. This reminds me of a matter that was brought before our committee on education, and it was a matter on which we spent considerable time, and I think a matter which involved the greatest controversy on the committee.

I should like, at this time, to talk about the real problem that we face in this and related matters. This is nothing more than another aspect of the problem that we are facing now in the previous section in regard to whether or not the governor should sit on the board of education. Now, what I am talking about is the personification of forms of government. Now, it is not good form to personify anything in the way of principles of government. When an individual's personality, an individual's desires get in the way of the proper exercise of his office, then I think he is wrong.

Now, a couple of days ago, the chairman of our committee — I hope in a jocular vein — indicated that I was a "rat," and I did not rise to a point of personal privilege there, and I hope that in what I am about to say, that this will not necessitate anyone else rising to a point of personal privilege, but I am very seriously concerned about this matter.

There is a certain gentleman in this convention, 1/144 participant in this convention, who did state to the members of the committee on legislative organization — and of my own knowledge I know of this fact — that he made this convention possible. Of my own knowledge, on the education committee, this same particular gentleman wanted the governor to appoint the members of the board of education and he also wanted the governor to appoint the superintendent of public instruction. Now, I think at this juncture, we all pretty well realize what has happened, especially in regard to the matters of county home rule and the matter of the governor's position vis a vis the board of education that we have been discussing for the last 2 days, and I would suggest that at this juncture, this convention is about to plunge precipitously over an abyss from which there is no return, and I level this accusation at all of us, myself included, collectively, that we began, in our body, as the people assembled, and now we are in very grave danger of ending up as genuflectors to a supposedly charismatic personality. And I also say to that particular individual that when you become so engrossed with your own particular aspirations and motives that you cannot distinguish between them and the will of the people, then you are not fit to exercise more than the 1/144 influence upon this delegation.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Butler.

MRS. BUTLER: I don't understand, Mr. Chairman, what this genuflecting business is, and who it's to.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: If the gentleman cares to answer. (laughter)

MRS. BUTLER: It is not genuflecting because we have been told to genuflect, as the gentleman seems to imply.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Sterrett.

MR. STERRETT: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, the last statement of passing beyond the point of no return would be perfectly all right with me if we should adopt this amendment, because we wouldn't have to return to do any better. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Kuhn amendment, as revised. The secretary advises me we have an amendment to the amendment. The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Madar offers the following amendment to the amendment of Mr. Kuhn:

1. Amend the amendment after "instruction" by striking out "with the advice and consent of the state board of education and"; so that the inserted language would read, "The governor shall appoint a superintendent of public instruction whose term of office shall be fixed by law."

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to slip this amendment in for a very good reason, which is this: that I have been, personally, for the appointment of certain men in government appointed by the governor without the advice and consent of the legislature. I was for this a good many years ago, and I still am today. I don't believe that any governor appoints any man when he has to do it with the advice and consent of the legislature, whether it be the house or the senate. When it is by this particular method, then it is not the governor who is appointing, it is the senate, as the case is today, over in the capitol, and it would be the same thing with the board of education advising and consenting here. It would be by the board of education, not the governor. Oh, I realize why a lot of people here, a lot of the delegates say "by the advice and consent". I expect to hear them say this on more than one occasion, "by the advice and consent".

The reason I say this is because I have heard, on many an occasion, that if you listen long enough to some people, especially in politics, they will contradict themselves on many an occasion, and I have been listening here today and I have heard an awful lot of contradictions.

First, I heard contradictions as to the idea of changing our entire method of running our educational system, because we want to make it a good educational system. And yet, they say that we have an educational system second to none. For heavens' sake, I don't see how you can make it any better, if it is second to none, and it really is second to none.

I listened today, too, to several states being mentioned as putting the governor on the board of education. Heavens to Betsy, let's stop kidding ourselves, we are second to none in education and these other states that have been mentioned are not any higher on the list than twentieth and some fortieth.

I say right now that I want to keep those responsible for government who should be responsible. If the governor appoints a lousy superintendent of public instruction, then let him take the blame for it. If he appoints a good one, then let the people give him credit for having done a good job, but don't go putting it into the hands of the board of education. That is 8 other people that you are going to have to start laying the blame to, or giving the credit to. I don't think you can do either one with everybody being tied into it. For heavens' sake, let's be consistent if nothing else.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wayne, Delegate Marshall.

MR. MARSHALL: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I am not going to infringe upon your time and patience by making a speech. I haven't said anything in a couple of days, but I do rise on this one to urge you to stop debating and vote. I think all has been said that can be said on this question, and if we keep on you are going to get spenorious again.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Madar amendment to the Kuhn amendment. All in favor will say aye. Opposed, no.

The amendment to the amendment is not adopted. Now we will vote on the Kuhn amendment, as revised. All in favor will say aye.

SECRETARY CHASE: A division has been asked for.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: A division was asked for. Is it seconded? Sufficient number up. Those in favor of the Kuhn amendment, as revised, will vote aye, and those opposed will vote no.

MR. WOOLFENDEN: Point of information, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: State your point.

MR. WOOLFENDEN: There has been on the walls here an amendment which I haven't heard discussed. It was put up as the Madar amendment, but that was not the amendment as it was read by the secretary, and I think the delegates may be confused as to what is before us right now. On the wall over here is an amendment which I don't understand to be the Kuhn amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The secretary will read the Kuhn amendment, as revised.

SECRETARY CHASE: The Kuhn amendment was revised by an amendment offered by Judge Dehnke so that the language to be inserted now reads, "The governor shall appoint a superintendent of public instruction with the advice and consent of the state board of education and whose term of office shall be fixed by law."

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Have you all voted?

If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Kuhn, the yeas are 20. The nays are 100.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The amendment is not adopted.

Pursuant to an order of the convention, the committee of the whole will now rise so the convention may recess.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do rise, if that is correct.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The secretary informed me that the Chair could make that statement, so the Chair did. (laughter)

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will be in order. Pursuant to orders previously made, the convention stands in recess until 3:45.

The convention will be in order.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

I have the following requests: Mr. Sterrett, Mr. Iverson, Mr. Yeager, Mr. Stevens and Mrs. Conklin will be leaving at 4:00 o'clock this afternoon in order to make speeches in Detroit this evening, and would like to be excused after 4:00 o'clock.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, the several requests for excuse will be granted. The Chair hears no objection and it is so ordered.

General orders of the day. The gentleman from Genesee, Mr. Millard.

MR. MILLARD: Mr. President, I move that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider matters on general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question being upon the motion of the gentleman from Genesee, all those in favor will say aye. Opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will convene and Mr. Millard will preside.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The committee will be in order. The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Committee Proposal 47. We are considering section b. Mr. Faxon offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 23, after "education" by striking out "which shall be granted sufficient funds and staff to carry on state responsibilities for education as determined by law"; so that the sentence beginning on line 22 will read, "The superintendent of public instruction shall be chief administrative officer of a state office of education."

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, this was just to clean up the language a little bit. I am sure the delegates are aware of the fact that the language recommended here is legislative, and for the further report on this I should yield to Mr. Bentley, the chairman of the committee.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: I would prefer the gentleman not yield to me. I wish to speak on the amendment.

MR. FAXON: We had discussed this in committee, and somehow when the proposal finally came through, the deletion of those words didn't come through with it. I didn't find any strong feeling for its inclusion because there is nothing you could do. I mean, obviously, the legislature shall grant sufficient funds but you can't mandamus the legislature into determining what is a sufficient amount of money. So I proposed this simply to clear up the language and to keep in line with what is constitutional language and what is primarily legislative or statutory.

I think this is all that needs to be said, unless Mr. Bentley has any questions. I would like to yield to him for any statement he may — no? Well, I just want to say that if there is anybody on the committee that has any objection to this deletion, I haven't heard of them. I showed this to the chairman, and to the chairman of the subcommittee, and to several other people in the committee, and they felt there was no objection to the deletion of the language.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Is the delegate yielding the floor now?

MR. FAXON: Well, to Mr. Bentley. He stands by the microphone.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize the chairman of the committee, Delegate Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, of course, did discuss this amendment with me beforehand, and the gentleman may be correct in that he claims that it is statutory and legislative in nature, with regard to the particular phrase he wishes to be stricken, and he may also be correct in saying that we cannot mandamus the legislature, and therefore the language is unnecessary.

But I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the reason that the committee desired to include this particular language was because of the statements that had been made to us at various times in presentations by the incumbent superintendent and by other gentlemen from the state department of education, in that they felt that in some cases their budgets had been inadequate to enable them to carry out the responsibilities and the duties with which they were charged by law.

It is my recollection that a number of members, if not a majority, of those on the committee on education, felt strongly that the question of adequate appropriations for the state department of education and its officials was so important that we wished to register our belief in this fashion, and therefore desired to include this language under discussion, even though it may be somewhat statutory in nature.

I might suggest to the gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Faxon, that while I do not believe the proposal would be greatly harmed if this particular phrase were deleted, that I would personally prefer to leave it up to the excellent committee on style and drafting to decide whether or not the language is specifically statutory or whether it properly belongs in the constitution.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Does the delegate from Detroit have anything further, Delegate Faxon?

MR. FAXON: I think that I would like to yield to Miss Hart and hear what objections she may have.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: No, the Chair must now recognize the gentleman from Hancock, Delegate Heideman.

MR. HEIDEMAN: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I would just like to say that regardless of this mandamus business, it is perfectly proper to write in a constitutional command to the legislature. That is done all the time in state constitutions and also in the federal constitution, so that a distinction can be drawn between where you can't mandamus the legislature in writing in a constitutional duty which the legislature is called upon to perform and which, if it doesn't do it, it is derelict in its constitutional duty, and then, of course, the recourse is through the polls, through election. But this can be done, and I think this language is perfectly proper and, of course, I think it should remain in the constitution.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the lady from Detroit, Delegate Hart.

MISS HART: Mr. Chairman, I rise to agree with Mr. Heideman. I oppose the deletion of this particular sentence.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Could I have the — I notice that they haven't projected this upon the walls here and I just want to be sure that the delegates know exactly what we are referring to.

The language which I put in for deletion is the end of page 1, the last line in the paragraph beginning,

> The superintendent of public instruction shall be chief administrative officer of a state office of education which shall be granted sufficient funds and staff to carry on state responsibilities for education as determined by law.

This additional language, "which shall be granted sufficient funds and staff", is, in my opinion — and I am not a lawyer here — it isn't constitutional language. Obviously, the legislature is going to grant funds. Now, whether the funds are going to be sufficient to the people who are in the office of education or the people who are in the legislature is another question. I don't think that the words "sufficient funds" are meaningful. I don't think the language is operational.

So, my only concern here is that we have something which is a clear cut statement and leave this determination to the legislature because it is going to be theirs anyhow. That is all.

I would urge the delegates to support the amendment for these reasons.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the amendment to section b offered by Delegate Faxon. The Chair recognizes Delegate Habermehl from Alpena.

MR. HABERMEHL: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the chairman of the committee. Is there some danger that, where on page 2 on line 2 you state "carry on state responsibilities for education as determined by law", when previously in section b, on page 1, line 21, you state that the superintendent of public instruction shall be responsible for the execution of its — referring to the state board's — policies. Is there a possibility of conflict there?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Alpena will yield, the committee did not feel that there was a conflict. I may say something that I think is obvious, not only to the gentleman but to the committee of the whole at large. We have not been blessed, on the committee on education, with as many lawyers as there have been on some of the other committees. That may or may not have been an advantage from our standpoint in carrying on our deliberations, but I am perfectly willing to say that we did not foresee such a conflict, Mr. Habermehl, and, very frankly, I would hope that if a conflict of this nature should be felt, I would personally be willing to leave it to the committee on style and drafting to iron out any inconsistencies in this respect.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Faxon amendment. All those in favor will say aye. Opposed, no.

The amendment is not adopted.

A DELEGATE: Division.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: A division is called for. Is the demand seconded? A sufficient number is up. All those in favor will vote aye. Those opposed will vote nay. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the amendment offered by Mr. Faxon, the yeas are 23; the nays are 90.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The amendment is not adopted. The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hoxie offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 19, after "shall be" by striking out "determined by" and inserting "at the pleasure of"; so the language will then read, "The state board shall appoint a superintendent of public instruction whose term of office shall be at the pleasure of the board."

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Hoxie.

MR. HOXIE: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I think it is self explanatory. It is not my desire to precipitate extensive discussion. As the proposal presently reads, I can see the possibility of some dangers in the term of office being granted to a superintendent with the possible change of the members of the board, whereby they might desire to have a different superintendent.

I think we have seen this repeatedly throughout the state, where superintendents have been hired for a certain term, and for some reason or other, the board desires to make a change. The end result is that the contract which has been entered into with the board is complied with, the superintendent is paid off and he goes his merry way. I don't think we want to get in a position where a state board of education couldn't resolve this matter without obligating the state.

So, I offer this amendment to clarify what I understand was the intent of the committee.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Delegate Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, the gentleman did discuss this amendment with me previously. I, obviously, have not been able to poll the committee, and so therefore cannot speak for them. Speaking personally, I see no objection to the amendment, since, in my opinion, it does spell out more specifically the intent of the committee with respect to the length of service of the term of office of the superintendent.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the amendment offered by Delegate Hoxie. Delegate Brown, from Wayne.

MR. T. S. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, I am a little tenuous about this, but I think "determined by" would imply, in its terminology, that the board would set a specific time period in which the superintendent would serve, and "at the pleasure of" would not require the board to set any time period at all. If this board were to select a man of stature, and they were to say to this man of stature, "Please come and be our superintendent of public instruction, but you serve only at our pleasure," then, I think this would predispose against his accepting the job.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: It is just my opinion that the man of stature whom we hope will be selected to be the new superintendent of public instruction by the new board would be a man of such stature and such prestige that he would — his services could not be obtained without a reasonable degree of security, including, I would assume, some contract or written guarantee of a certain period of time. I think that Mr. Hoxie's fear was that the board might have the desire to terminate his services after the expiration of a given time period and be unable to do so for particular reasons.

Do you not feel that the intent of the committee was that the board should be able to change superintendents if they desired to do so, but that the question of security certainly should be included?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Brown.

MR. T. S. BROWN: Yes, Delegate Bentley. I am not objecting, really, except for the fact that if you take the total connotative effect of "at the pleasure of", then I think it is a little more deleterious and a little more insidious than the total connotative effect of "determined by." That is really what I am objecting to. Now, maybe that is a little far out, and if it is, I apologize.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Bay, Delegate Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and Delegate Bentley, this amendment brings into focus a question that I had been saving, and concerned about and had hoped we might get some further light on before second reading or on the style and drafting committee, of which I am a member. I interpreted the words, "shall be determined by the board", to mean that the board could give a contract to a candidate for this office, and would probably no longer contract than the tenure of the board itself. That is, I don't think, as a matter of law, that the board could bind a succeeding board by its actions.

Is it your understanding, by accepting this amendment, that it would not be possible for a board to offer a contract to a candidate?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I thought I made it quite plain just a moment ago that I thought the board could offer a contract. Furthermore, I don't quite know what the gentleman means by "a succeeding board," since it was our recommendation, I believe, from the committee report, that the board be elected for 8 year terms on a staggered basis, so there would always be a continuing board rather than a whole new board elected at one time. But I tried to make it quite clear that we did not feel, I do not feel that the acceptance of the amendment by the gentleman from St. Louis would preclude the offer of a contract to a superintendent, and I would certainly personally hope that such a contract would be offered.

MR. HIGGS: Perhaps I should direct the question to Mr. Hoxie, then, what his intention is.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Hoxie, do you care to answer? Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Hoxie, is it your intention, by inserting the words "at the pleasure of", to preclude the board from offering a contract to a candidate for this office?

MR. HOXIE: It is not. My only fear is, Mr. Higgs, that in the course of election, in the course of, say, 2 succeeding elections, so there would be probably 4 new members of this board, and perhaps another 2 years — and I would like to clarify this, as far as you are concerned — that we have seen repeatedly, and the courts have substantiated and upheld contracts that have been entered into in the way of employment that extends beyond the time of office of those people, such as your state board would be. In other words, if the members entered into a contract with the superintendent and they were not reelected, that contract would be binding upon the board, regardless of whether or not they were reelected. So that my fear is that we might be tying the hands of the state board of education in the event that they desired to make a change.

I think that they are the ones that are responsible to the people. I think they should be given that authority. But, in answer to your question, it was not my intent with this amendment, nor do I think it precludes the board from entering into a contract for a term with the wording there. If you feel it does, then perhaps it should be corrected, but it was not my intent.

MR. HIGGS: I just want to get at the intent. I would like to ask one further question of Delegate Bentley, then. Did your committee consider the limiting of the term of a contract which might be granted?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Bay City that I don't believe the committee took particular cognizance of this matter. We felt that it was a question that could be handled very appropriately by statute, if necessary. And I say, Mr. Chairman, that although I respect the interest of the gentleman from Bay City and his desire to plumb the meaning and the intent of the committee, I would hope that he is satisfied on this respect, and I would hope that we could move to a vote on this section.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, it would appear to me that "at the pleasure of" means just what it says, and that if the board of education entered into a contract for a period of time, they would be acting in violation of the provisions of the constitution, and there might be personal liability but there would be no other liability. That is my thinking on the provision in the amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Hoxie amendment. The Chair recognizes Delegate Barthwell from Detroit.

MR. BARTHWELL: Mr. Chairman and delegates, since, to me, "at the pleasure of" creates some confusion in my mind, I want to suggest to the committee of the whole that we stick by the committee's original language.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Hoxie amendment. Delegate Garvin.

MR. GARVIN: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I feel, very definitely, that the proposal should remain as it is for the reason that, as has been stated I believe by Ted Brown and others, that if anyone accepts this position, they have to accept it with some degree of assurance that they will be there for a certain period of time, and "at the pleasure" does not mean that, by any means. It means that he might be there tomorrow and he might not be there next week. So, I would suggest, and I will go along with the committee, that the offer is of a more definite nature as it is written in the proposal.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Hoxie amendment. The secretary will read it.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is:

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: You have heard the amendment. All in favor will say aye. Opposed, no.

The amendment is not adopted. The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hoxie offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 19, after "shall" by striking out "be"

and inserting "not exceed 4 years at any one time as"; so that the language will then read:

The state board shall appoint a superintendent of public instruction whose term of office shall not exceed 4 years at any one time as determined by the board.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Hoxie.

MR. HOXIE: Mr. Chairman and fellow members, this amendment is offered in all good faith with the idea of the possible dangers that we are getting ourselves into. All this says is that the board cannot appoint anyone as superintendent for a longer period than 4 years at any one time, so that if your board does change — which it is bound to change — it does give the new board an opportunity to make a determination to hire someone else, if they see fit.

I urge you to adopt this amendment and I ask for a division.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Bentley, chairman of the committee, is recognized.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from St. Louis why he feels it so necessary to bind the board in this particular respect. Within the 4 year period, if the committee proposal is part of the new constitution, the board will have changed by only 50 per cent; that is, only 4 of its 8 members will have gone through the elective process. There will still be 4 members of the board that originally hired the superintendent, and I wonder why he feels it so necessary to restrict the board to a 4 year term if, in the discretion of the board, they can find a good man and want to put him on a longer time basis.

MR. HOXIE: Mr. Bentley, apparently I don't make myself clear as to my thinking on this question. Certainly, we know the possibility of the board changing, the membership on the board changing from time to time. Perhaps at the end of 2 successive elections we will have 4 new members of the board. Perhaps 2 years later, there may be 6 new members of the board.

Let's assume, if we may, that the board would hire the superintendent for a 10 year period, and it was done legally. What happens then if the board changes and they wish and desire to hire a different superintendent? The end result will be the same as we have seen throughout the state, where boards of education have paid off teachers and superintendents because they were under contract, and I think this is a safeguard. I think by the wording "determination by the board", leaves the door wide open. I think this is a safety measure that we should adopt to the benefit of the people of the state. Let's say we have a good superintendent, certainly the board will continue his services. It seems to me that anyone that is interested in this position, with a guaranteed contract of 4 years to start with, is a long enough term for the board to determine whether or not they want to continue his services.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Hoxie amendment. Division has been called for. Is there sufficient number up for a second? The Chair recognizes Delegate Barthwell.

MR. BARTHWELL: Mr. Chairman and delegates, one of the things that was very emphatically impressed on me in the committee meetings was that the advantage of this officer being appointed rests in the fact that he could have security and you could attract men of higher caliber, and it seems to me if we are going to write into this constitution a limitation to his security, then we are starting out now to defeat the very thing that I thought we were accomplishing.

I would urge the delegates to vote against the amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman, I would like to plumb the education committee a little further, if I may, if Delegate Bentley will respond. Are you opposed to this amendment?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman from Bay City, I personally feel it would be helpful if the board would be left with the discretion of setting the time for mutual agreement between themselves and the superintendent.

MR. HIGGS: Would there be any limitation at all, then, in your judgment, on how long a term the board could grant? For instance, could it be 10 years?

MR. BENTLEY: I feel that that is a matter that can be handled by statute.

MR. HIGGS: Would you say that the legislature would have the power, by statute, to limit the constitutional power that we grant them?

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Bay City, I am not, as I said before many times, a member of the legal profession and I don't recall any protracted discussion within the committee on this point, except to reemphasize the point made by the gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Barthwell, that we did believe that the question of security was an important one and we felt that one of the advantages in having an appointive superintendent was that he would be secure in his job for as long a time as he and the board could come to terms.

MR. HIGGS: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I would like to conclude in that I feel — and I would like to hear from other delegates if they disagree — but I feel that the Hoxie amendment has a great deal of merit, because I really don't think that the legislature would have any power to limit the constitutional grant that we have set forth in section b.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Hoxie amendment. A division has been called for. Is there a sufficient number up for a second? A sufficient number is up. All those in favor of the Hoxie amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? The machine will be locked and the secretary will tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Hoxie, the yeas are 34. The nays are 77.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The amendment is not adopted. Are there any further amendments? If there are no further amendments to section b, it will be passed.

Section b is passed.

SECRETARY CHASE: Section a, an amendment is pending. The amendment is offered by Messrs. Boothby, Brake, Dean Doty, Leibrand, Finch, Sharpe, Dehnke, Miss Donnelly and Mr. Downs:

1. Amend page 1, line 16, after "law.", by striking out "The governor shall also be a member of the state board of education.".

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Boothby.

MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I think this question has been exhausted, as far as debate is concerned, and I will not prolong the time of the delegates here on going over and reiterating the various points that have been made on both sides or on behalf of those who are asking for support of this amendment.

I do point out that it is a very vital matter that we are facing here, because, in my mind, the question of the governor being on the board of education or not being on the board of education is simply the question of whether you are going to allow the board of education to become a political arena or whether you are going to follow the traditional approach that the people of Michigan have followed, and that is to keep, as best they can, education out of the political arena. I have always worried about the placing of education in a situation where it would be used as a political football for the advantage of one particular party or one particular person in public office. I urge the support of this amendment, which we have submitted to you, which would delete from the committee proposal the provision which would allow the governor to not only sit on the board of education, but also to vote on the board of education.

I urge the adoption of this amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Boothby amendment. The Chair recognizes Delegate Downs.

MR. DOWNS: I would like, very briefly, to speak for this, since we did discuss it earlier. I would just point out that if the governor is on this board, he would then participate in a vote and later on, as chief executive, be asked to review what was done. This might come up in budget or other policy matters. I believe it is unsound governmentally, and I urge the support of the amendment to delete this sentence.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, and members of the committee, yesterday I spoke on behalf of keeping the language, now I am reversing myself, but that is because additional information has been brought to my attention. Originally I felt that there ought to be a tie in, and I voted for the appointment of the superintendent by the governor, because I felt that would be a much more direct tie in. Now I understand that the inclusion of the governor on the state board — we went ahead and did this in committee, it was a compromise, it was done rather quickly, and I don't believe anybody in the committee bothered to find out what the wishes of the governor were on this matter.

I think the executive committee, at least, had the courtesy of asking the governor, the present governor of the state, or any previous governor, what his position was with regard to executive appointments. We went ahead and put the governor on the committee, and no one asked whether the governor felt he ought to be on the committee. It seems to me that the governor doesn't seem to be happy in his position on the committee, in having to serve on the board of education. I don't think we ought to force him to take this position.

I want to call to the attention of the delegates article VI, section 3, which states that:

> The governor shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed; shall transact all necessary business with the officers of government; and may require information in writing from all executive and administrative state officers, elective and appointive, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

It seems to me that there is constitutional provision now for the governor to request the necessary information in order for him to carry out the mandate of his office. It seems to me that the governor can actively participate, if he so desires, and that the board of education will not deny him an opportunity to speak before it, if there is a matter of pressing urgency.

It seems to me that if the governor feels that his time is required of many agencies and officers, it would be best not to pinpoint a specific one, because I am certain that this may be a source of some embarrassment, participating in budget for this and not being able to participate in the budget making process, say, for mental health or other agencies of government which may feel equally touched by the need for the governor's action.

With these statements, Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment submitted by Boothby, et al.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ann Arbor, Professor Pollock.

MR. POLLOCK: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, the members of the committee of the whole, a good many of them, have scratched all sorts of things on this committee proposal. They have moved this. They have moved that. Cut out a word here, put in a word there, scratched the whole sentence, and all of these have been turned down. I presume they were turned down in the committee in the first place.

Some of us felt that it would be better to have the governor appoint the superintendent of public instruction. I thought this. This has been defeated. Others thought he should be elected. This has been defeated. Every other possible combination has been defeated. I submit that we go back to the obvious compromise which the committee framed in the first place and let this be the judgment of the whole. I am, therefore, opposed to this amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Boothby, et al, amendment.

MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask that we have a division on this question.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: A division has been called for. Is there sufficient number up? There is a sufficient number. Delegate Norris.

MR. NORRIS: May we have the specific wording of the amendment read, sir?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is:

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: All those in favor will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the machine will be locked and the secretary will tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Boothby and others, the yeas are 63, the nays are 57.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The amendment is adopted. The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hubbs offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 9, after "legislature" by striking out "and to the people"; so that the sentence beginning in line 7 will read:

> In addition, it shall serve as the general planning and coordinating body for all public education in the state and shall provide advice to the legislature as to the amount of state support required.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize Delegate Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I am tempted to spend about an hour and a half talking this afternoon. Every time I get up to make an amendment, somebody has just finished talking about scratching and off the cuff and off the top of your head. Well, I have been waiting for 2 days to get this one up here, and I have previously made some remarks in regard to it. But I also notice that the longer you talk, the more people start thinking about your project and before you are done, why, you get people talking on all sides, and I might even win if I talk long enough. So, settle down, and I am going to begin now and see if I can't win one, for a change, instead of coming up here and speaking my piece and sitting down in a hurry.

It has been said that educational expense is about 50 per cent of state expense. On this basis, it seems fair to assume that education will continue to be given adequate support in the legislature. These words presume the necessity of promoting educational programs to gain financial support. The words that I am referring to are "and to the people". It seems to me, as I said yesterday, that these words are constitutional authority to lobby the public with tax money without regard to economy. It looks to me like a large loophole for state tax moneys to pour out in support of projects dreamed up by people on the state board of education which, while worthwhile and noble, I don't think this is the way to go about getting support in the legislature, by putting the pressure on the people by the state board of education. The legislature is supposed to represent the people, and they should not be circumvented in this manner and thereby weakened. I thought that we came down here to strengthen the legislature, and I suggest that these 4 words should be deleted, and the sentence, then, would provide the kind of operation that we need at this level.

The state board of education would make its recommendations to the legislature. The legislature, representing the people, would judge the quality of these recommendations and then appropriate sufficient money. I do not believe that we should permit the state board of education to lobby the people for the projects that they want to put across. This is completely wrong. It is going to lead to a great expense to sell the people on projects when they should be talking to the legislature at close range.

I will slow down a little bit, and if anybody would like to get up and talk on this subject, why, maybe I will quit. Otherwise, I might keep on going for a while to see if I can't get a little support for this amendment which, to my point of view, should produce economy in government. That is what we came down here for, and I am afraid that a lot of things that we have been doing so far are not going to produce any economy in government.

So, with that, I will yield the floor to anybody who might like to take up here. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Anspach.

MR. ANSPACH: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, if you wish to speak — if so, I yield to the chairman of the committee.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: I merely wish to say we are opposed to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Anspach.

MR. ANSPACH: Mine is merely a comment. It is a matter of explaining my position to the standpoint of these words, Mr. Hubbs. For a period of years, since I have been in education, there has been a great deal of criticism of the fact that insufficient information has been going to the legislature and to the public, and my interpretation of this is quite different than yours. You are taking the position that this is for the purpose of lobbying the people of the state. My position is the opposite position. This is to give information to the citizens of the state so they can come to fair judgment as to whether there is too much going into education or whether there isn't enough going into education. So, it is my mistake here, I think.

The chairman said something about a story, here. You see, Mr. Hubbs interprets it this way, and he, according to his interpretation, is right, and I interpret it the other way, which is, of course, my right. It is like this man who came out of his house one morning and it was raining, and he said to his wife, "I need an umbrella." She said, "You have 6 umbrellas. You have broken all of them. You have taken them down to get them repaired. You were forgetful, you have forgotten to pick them up. So, through the rain for you this morning." So he went out and got on a bus, sat down alongside of a very nice looking lady. It came his time to get up and leave, he picked up her umbrella. She said, "That's my umbrella," and he apologized and said, "That's right," and gave it back. That night, when he came out of his office, it was still raining. He thought of these 6 umbrellas and went down and got them, all 6 of them, and he got out and got on the bus and sat down, and to his amazement, he was sitting aside the young lady who had occupied half the seat in the morning. She took one look at him and one look at the umbrellas and said, "Well, you've had a good day, haven't you?" (laughter)

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Does Delegate Hubbs wish to answer?

MR. HUBBS: I don't have a funny story to tell right now. I'll have to think about it.

But the fact that Dr. Anspach and myself differ on the interpretation of this thing is all the more reason that we should spend some time on it, because I can see a great danger here, and apparently he can't. As far as I am concerned, I am not against education, and I am not against the legislature being informed and the people being informed, but I feel that the proper people to inform the people are the newspapers and the radio and TV, and they will inform the people when the state board of education talks to the legislature.

I feel that given a legislature who might tend, occasionally, to be somewhat economy minded, whereas the members of the state board of education might feel that they needed a whole lot more money, then they would look at the constitution and say, "Well, fellows, we haven't got any problem. We will just hire one of the 'narrow tie, blue shirt' boys to do a little press relating to the public, and we will take $50 million or something out of our fund, or maybe ½ million to start with, and we will sell this program to the people whether the legislature likes it or not."

So, the fact that you and I come to different conclusions as to these words, I wouldn't want to leave it to style and drafting because I assume that it is substantive; money being rather substantive, from my point of view, and that is what this involves — economy.

I hope that we will plug this little loophole to a potential expenditure, which I don't consider a legitimate one, and get about the business. I am going to try and win this one if I have to stay here for quite a while.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Lansing, Delegate Wanger.

MR. WANGER: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I think Mr. Hubbs has a very good point, but there is no other office or agency of state government which has express, and I believe self executing constitutional authority, to directly advise the people, which, of course, includes buying time on the radio, time on television, ads in newspapers, and other things of that nature to inform the people, with taxpayers' money, of their particular point of view.

While I am sure the committee on education, at least I hope, certainly did not intend that their proposal would authorize the board to do this, I think, looking at the language he wants to delete, there is a possibility that the language could legally be interpreted to authorize those things.

I think that every authority established in the constitution has power to inform the people in the form of the traditional means of informing them, such as we have now, and I am satisfied that those means are adequate and that we did not need to create a constitutional question by putting these words in the constitution, and, therefore, urge your support of his amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, I did not serve on the education committee, and I don't know all of the reasons which motivated the language, but looking at section a, I understand that the board of education is to have a leadership function as well as a supervision function. It is to indicate to the people of the state, in the form of advice, the amount of state support required for the very fundamental object of education. I think there is a general strain of thinking in this report of the importance of education to the people of the state, and that while Michigan has made significant progress, significant progress can be made in the future and that it ought to be continued.

I think we ought to recognize that not only do we have a leadership function to be exercised on the part of the board of education, we have a leadership function to be exercised on the part of the people. There is a sincere question as to whether or not all of the people of the state of Michigan have that quality and quantity of comprehension as to the function of education in the kind of age in which we are entering. Yesterday Colonel Glenn distinguished himself and gave great pride to all Americans with his feat and the 25,000 technicians that went behind it; it seems to me that this constitution should express what he indicated to be the state of his own constitution, namely, as he stated, "excellent". If we are to project our country and, indeed, our survival and our growth into the twentieth century, we have to look upon education in just a little different way than we have in the past.

As I understand it, it is a basic proposition of this section to advance the concept of a board of education as one giving leadership as well as just providing administerial supervision, and in keeping with that, I think it ought to take such steps as, in its view, may seem appropriate to provide the kind of information that Dr. Anspach has indicated, statistical information, probative information and, given general currency in suitable form, it need not necessarily involve expenditures of money of the kind apprehended by the author of this amendment. I think if you give this constitution, as we look upon Colonel Glenn, in terms of saying that our motions and our projectory should give our constitution more orbit than obituary, we should give this kind of concept to this section.

I would concur heartily in the spirit and letter of the committee proposal, and would ask people to support it.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Bad Axe, Delegate McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: I would like to support the Hubbs amendment. It appears to me that this gives unlimited authority to spend the people's money to lobby for matters that should not be paid for in this respect.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: As a member of the committee, I think that some of the members of the committee of the whole have misinterpreted what we mean here. First of all, the only information which is being given is information as to the amount of state support required, and as I understand it, the place that the money is derived, where the money comes from is the legislature, and I don't believe the legislature is going to appropriate money to the state board of education for the dissemination of information of a propaganda nature. I think what we had in mind here was that the people ought to know what amounts may be expected or what the expenditures and costs of education are, and, in the way of being specific, I think the most that this would involve, in terms of the actual operation of this little word, is that a brochure or an information sheet would be given out which would be available to the people to see what education costs in Michigan. The total cost and the breakdown and what recommendations the state board may want to make to the legislature, the people ought to know, too. I think that we are over exaggerating what this might mean.

As long as the legislature maintains control over the amounts of money that the state board receives, and how that money is to be spent, I think that I will trust the legislature to see to it that this is not used as a means of going into the business of public information.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Fennville, Delegate Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, paying attention to this language, saying that the state board of education shall provide advice to the legislature and to the people as to the amount of state support required raises 2 questions in my mind. The first has to do with budget procedures, which, I suppose, will, in the future, as they are now, be an executive budget. It would seem to me as though the amount of state support required, desired, or available, for that matter, for the field of education would be a matter which would have to be submitted to the legislature through the executive budget.

I don't understand how this kind of advice, which, obviously, has to do with finances since it is advice of state support, if it is intended that this is to come directly to the legislature and bypass the governor, just how is that going to fit in with the budgetary provisions of the constitution? Haven't we got a conflict here? Is it your intent that this contact shall be directly to the legislature? Apparently it bypasses the budgetary procedure. That is the first question.

The other question has to do with the field of public relations. This problem of public relations in government is something which has definitely grown up in the past few years since world war II, very obviously. We used to think, or at least I did when I was in my early years in the legislature, that it was not the function or the proper responsibility of an agency in the government to go out and sell to the people or influence the people as to the work of its services or as to the work of its programs; but that information and influence should be placed upon the legislature, that is to say, directed toward the legislature.

I am willing to say that back a number of years ago, when the treasury department of the United States — I believe it was they — and the armed services used to start to finance programs on the radio. It was quite surprising to me. I didn't think it was proper. We have this problem of public relations. But, as I read this language here, which we are now considering, it seems to me as though we are building right into the constitution a public relations function, and I am reminded of what has happened in regard to several of the executive departments in recent years, where, by reason of their public relations' activities, they have literally produced reams of press releases and other stuff intended to attract the attention of the public sometimes in 4 or 5 colored printed brochures. One department of government or another department of government and so on, in order to attract public attention and support to a particular program.

We are all for education. We are all for education, and I don't deny, for a minute, the importance of education in the middle of this twentieth century. But, of course, we also have to keep in mind the fact that the course in which education is to take, the emphasis that is to be put upon certain education, certain methods of education, certain areas of education, and all that, leads that into the political arena, perhaps not in a partisan political sense, but they get into the political arena. I am greatly concerned about the language that is here, because I think that in its breadth we are writing into this constitution constitutional power for a board of education acting under its constitutional power to advise the legislature and the people as to the amount of state support required that will give them constitutional power to use any amount of money necessary in order to carry on that advice, to make that advice felt, to make it available, and if anybody is surprised that the legislature would be concerned at our idea that we needed a million copies of the address to the people, in connection with the end product of this convention, I think that we will, in the future, be surprised, perhaps, at the amount and the great volume of material that would be forthcoming under the guise of public relations under this constitutional grant of advice, out of the department of education or the state board of education.

Perhaps the situation might evolve into the situation where the education department will have this constitutional grant of authority to do all this, whereas all the rest of the departments in state government will have to go to the legislature in order to satisfy the legislature in its budgetary and appropriation processes that they need a certain amount of money to inform the people about the work of their programs.

So, I leave you with these 2 questions, and neither one of them, have I been able to resolve in my mind from reading this language. I understand the intent of the committee, and if, somehow or other, after further working on this section, before the final constitutional provision is finally adopted, we can refine it and do a better job, perhaps, of defining what the intent of the committee actually is, I think that will be our absolute duty, because as it now stands I see a great loophole here, and it will be in the constitution, too. It will be hard to change.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alpena, Delegate Habermehl.

MR. HABERMEHL: Mr. Chairman, I think Mr. Hutchinson has expressed most of what I intended to say. I would like to draw this, though, in practical terms. The committee, I believe, anticipated the establishment of a state office of education. On line 23, page 1, they refer to a state office of education. Then, on these budgetary matters, apparently the state board of education would decide upon a certain figure. This would be transmitted to the governor for his approval. And he, of course, would have the right to make changes in it. The governor would then transmit it to the legislature. If, however, the legislature made any further changes in it, we would here grant a constitutional power to the state board of education to take their case, by any means whatsoever, in contradiction to the head of their own department, in contradiction to the governor's office, and in contradiction to the legislature, and plead their case before the people with the use of state funds. This is a monstrosity.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Detroit, Delegate Binkowski.

MR. BINKOWSKI: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, I can't pass up this opportunity to be a bit jocular, but after all the argument that we advanced Monday evening with respect to the post constitutional convention budget, it is rather gratifying to see that we have now won some converts for that line of thinking. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Hodges from Detroit.

MR. HODGES: I think Mr. Binkowski expressed what I was going to say. I was just going to say that Mr. Hubbs, I think, could be justified in his conclusion that bodies are liable to do this, because he was just a member of a body and also voted to propagandize that body to the tune of a $1/3 million.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Perras.

MR. PERRAS: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I just rise for a point of information. All the delegates have talked for removing this word "people" from this section, and it seems that nobody from the committee has stood up to kind of testify why they put that in. I would like to find out why they put that in and what the intent was before I vote intelligently on this thing.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Anybody care to answer the gentleman's question? If not, the Chair recognizes Delegate Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, following through Mr. Perras' question, I would like to direct a question to the chairman of the committee, if I may, and that is: is it not the contemplation of the language of the proposal that advice to the people with regard to the amount of support for education would be financed by budget that would be approved by the legislature, and that the nature by which this advice would be communicated would be a matter upon which the legislature would express a judgment? So that the question of lobbying for the people might be an irrelevant matter?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I would concur in the interpretation placed on it by the gentleman from Detroit. The reason I did not respond to the question of the delegate from Nadeau, Mr. Perras, was because I was planning to speak on the amendment myself before discussion terminated, and endeavor to explain, and I hope to the gentleman's satisfaction the intent of the committee in inserting this language.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Muskegon, Delegate Hanna.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Mr. Chairman, now that we have taken the governor off the board of education, it seems to me there is further defect in this language, which was raised by Mr. Hutchinson. It seems to me that this advice by the state board of education should not be to the legislature but should be to the governor. The governor is the chief executive, responsible for the budget, trying to fit the expenditures for education into the rest of it. I wonder if we shouldn't, in addition to adopting the Hubbs amendment, provide that they will furnish advice to the governor, and to the legislature when requested, but it should be to the governor. This board should not bypass the chief executive. I realize that your language was drawn in contemplation of the governor being a member of the board, but I ask you whether or not, in view of the action of the committee of the whole and if sustained by the convention, if it should not be advice to the governor, and to the legislature when requested, and if this isn't sufficient, that with the newspapers the general public will be informed.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Is that directed to the chairman of the committee?

MR. W. F. HANNA: Yes.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Well, Mr. Chairman, if the action of the committee of the whole is, of course, sustained by the convention, I would be willing, of course, to admit that the gentleman from Muskegon has a valid point there. I would not be prepared to concur in the deletion of the words, "and to the people", but I would concur that the insertion of the words, "to the governor", if the governor is not to be a member of the state board, would have a certain amount of validity.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: I would just like briefly to answer Mr. Norris. He used what I consider the "motherhood" approach to defeating this change. You know, you don't dare touch the sacred cow of education, or pull a feather — not a feather — from her tail, because cows don't have feathers in their tails. (laughter) You see, Dr. Anspach, I don't have to tell jokes to be funny.

What I would like to have is a division when we vote on this, and I would like to have you people who are seriously interested in economy in this state in the future to vote for this amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Douglas.

MR. DOUGLAS: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I am not going to try to answer the question specifically, but I think that we should try to separate, in section a, the first sentence from the second sentence. The first sentence here:

> There shall be established a state board of education which shall provide leadership and supervision over public education including adult education and instructional programs in state institutions other than colleges and universities.

Now, the function of the state board of education in the second sentence is different.

We had a very difficult time, and this was a little touchy subject here; we were trying to create within the state board of education a function of coordinating and planning, and the minute you start to talk about coordinating and planning in higher education, you are on a very touchy subject. There was some criticism brought to our attention that higher education had not been too responsive to the legislature as to the finances. I think that those in higher education responded quite well, and they showed the committee where they did submit to the legislature all the proper documents showing income. Somewhere else, in the latter part of the sentence, we have provided there that they will show this income. But still, the problem arose in the state of Michigan, we have nobody to say whether or not a certain institution shall expand to a point, no one knows where, and we, on the committee, felt that somewhere along the line in the entire educational program there should be some body, some central body that could at least say, well, schools A, B, C will not have a medical school or a dental school.

This is part of the entire program. How can this be done? One thing brought to our attention was that a state institution can't expand too much because the legislature holds the purse-strings, but we also had other evidence that different institutions do have somewhat of a lobby, or influence people who go throughout the legislature trying to get the things that they want. So, I think that the language here resulted from our many discussions on how shall this body influence the legislature, how shall the people know what kind of higher institutions we shall have. I want to repeat that the second sentence here has to do with the state board of education and their function and coordination with the higher institutions.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Wanger.

MR. WANGER: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, Mr. Bentley, the chairman of the committee, stated some time ago that the committee did not have the opportunity to have perhaps as many lawyers within its membership as some other committees have. Perhaps, therefore, some language in the report was not, from a legal standpoint, quite expressive of the committee's intent. As one of the lawyers here, I do want to remind the delegates that while intent of the committee is important, what is even more important is what the words actually say, and I want to emphasize what the words say here, "advice to the people" on this subject could be interpreted as authorizing some of the evils which have been suggested on the floor.

I think, without unduly belaboring the point, it should be added that the board will be a partisan board. That is, it will be elected on a partisan basis, having been nominated at a party convention, and that there is certainly no other partisan elected or nominated office in the constitution which has words surrounding it which could be so construed. I therefore suggest that the committee's intent will best be shown by every member of the committee voting in favor of the Hubbs amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Hubbs amendment. Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the committee, the committee on education was certainly not attempting to look under the bed to try to discover a propagandizing agency in the newly created state board of education. I seem to recall within a fairly short period of time ago, I think it was only yesterday to be exact, that there were a great many statements made here on the floor of this convention by various delegates, not members of the committee on education, regarding the splendid work done by the committee on education with regard to the new concept of the enlarged state board of education. We felt, as I stated and as was stated by other delegates, that this represented one of the most constructive achievements which had come out of our entire committee during the work which we had done. We felt and I felt that that thought was shared by the majority of the delegates here, that the new state board of education would be one in which all the people, educational and noneducational alike, could have confidence. But now, the committee of the whole has acted to decrease the membership of the state board by one member, and now the committee of the whole, at least certain members of the committee of the whole, are voicing their mistrust of this agency to such an extent that they are afraid it will turn into a lobbying organization using public money to lobby the people of the state around and behind the backs of the legislature for new money.

I think, Mr. Chairman, it might be helpful to the delegates for them to turn back and just review very briefly those paragraphs of our supporting reasons in which we explained our concept of the function of the state board of education, and I am going to read those 3 short paragraphs at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I can assure the delegates here assembled that it was far from the thought of any member of the committee on education to set up a super propagandizing or super lobbying organization here in this respect.

If, in accordance with the suggestion of the delegate from Fenneville, Mr. Hutchinson, the distinguished vice president of the convention, we might on further examinaton, whether in the education committee or in the committee on style and drafting, adopt words which would more clearly specify and carry out the intent of the committee on education, I believe that our committee would have no objection. But merely to say that we are going to remove this part of the proposal with no substituted language suggested is, I think, showing a lack of trust and confidence in the proposed new state board of education regarding which delegates only yesterday were so laudatory, and also, I might suggest that it shows to some extent a lack of confidence in the committee on education, which I hope is not the intent of those delegates who address themselves to the support of the pending amendment.

The state board of education, Mr. Chairman, as the committee on education conceived of it, was a coordinating body between the people, the state government and educational circles throughout the state. To properly fulfill the concept that the committee had of the state board of education in this manner, we felt that it was important that the state board of education should advise the state government — whether through the person of one of its members or directly to the governor, if he is not to be a member — should directly advise the legislature and should advise the people regarding its overall recommendation as to the financial needs of this state in the field of public education at all levels for these many years to come.

I am sorry, beyond more words than I can say, that the distinguished member of our committee, the gentleman from East Lansing, Dr. Hannah, is not here today, because he spoke so eloquently in the committee, and I cannot and do not have the power to reecho his words and his explanation in this concept. But I feel sure that if he were here today, he would strongly urge the retention of the committee proposal and the defeat of the pending amendment because of our very real hope that this board of education, the real milestone, insofar as I, as chairman of the committee, am concerned, which the committee has performed in its deliberations, should act as this coordinating body between the state government and the legislature and the people, and, as such, have equal right of access to all 3, laying down its considered opinion as to what the needs of the state are. Certainly, with respect to those distinguished delegates who have voiced fears that the state board of education would be lobbying on public funds, I remind them that after all, the legislature, I would assume, would have some control over the amount of money to be granted to the state board for this or for any other purposes, and I doubt very much that the legislature would grant lobbying funds to the state board to permit such a board to lobby behind its back.

But sincerely and honestly, ladies and gentlemen and Mr. Chairman, the committee on education had no such intent when it conceived this language, and I beg you to believe of us that we would be the strongest supporters of the amendment if we felt there were any real danger of this terrible prospect arising.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Wanger.

MR. WANGER: Mr. Bentley is entirely mistaken if he thinks that my support, and I am sure the other people whose support for the Hubbs amendment, is evidence of any mistrust whatsoever with respect to the intentions of any member of the committee on education. But the point is simply this: that we want to write a constitution which will last long after we are gone and that in which case it will be interpreted long after we are gone.

The problems of interpretation in this language have been clearly pointed out, and I am sure that no person supporting this amendment, which we ask you to support and adopt, has any thought at all that it will weaken the power of the board of education to advise and offer information to the people, the same as any other office or unit of government could do. We merely wish to remove the language which could be interpreted in the future, perhaps by the people not yet even born, in such a way as to be to the detriment, rather than to the benefit, of the people of the state of Michigan and to our system of education.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Heideman.

MR. HEIDEMAN: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I do not think the chairman of the education committee and distinguished delegate from Owosso has been lacking in eloquence. I think he has been most eloquent, indeed, in defining our position, and I wish to endorse him.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman, I believe this is another one of those situations where we are all agreed upon the intent, and I would like to rise in agreement with the report of the chairman of the committee, and I believe certainly the intent here is to see there is more coordination, yet not put various agencies in a straitjacket.

I would suggest, if it is agreeable to the committee, that the problems that have been raised might be ironed out in style and drafting. I think this is a case where the convention delegates are agreed upon intent, and I would urge the adoption of the language as it is, with the understanding that style and drafting do some revision, if necessary, to make it more clearly consistent with the intent of the committee.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Hubbs amendment. All in favor will say aye.

A DELEGATE: Division.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: A division has been asked for. Is there a sufficient number up? Sufficient number up. The question is on the Hubbs amendment and the secretary will read it so everybody will know.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is:

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: If there are no further amendments, the section will pass.

Section a, as amended, is passed. The question is on the proposal, as amended. All in favor will vote aye, and opposed will vote nay. Have you all voted? The secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs, the yeas are 60, the nays are 51.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The amendment is adopted. The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Chairman, there are no further amendments on the desk.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Durst.

MR. DURST: Mr. Chairman, I move that we reconsider the vote on the Boothby-Brake amendment to section a of Committee Proposal 47.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the motion to reconsider. All those in favor of reconsideration will say aye; opposed, no.

A DELEGATE: Division.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: A division is called for. Is there sufficient number up? The demand for a division vote is supported. The question is on the reconsideration of the Boothby amendment which has been previously adopted. The secretary will read the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The Boothby amendment, on which the motion is to reconsider—

MR. BENTLEY: The vote is not on the amendment; it is on the motion to reconsider.

SECRETARY CHASE: May the secretary clarify the situation? The question, as your secretary understands it, is on a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Boothby amendment was adopted, and the Boothby amendment was as follows:

1. Amend page 1, line 16, after "law.", by striking out "The governor shall also be a member of the state board of education.".

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: All those in favor of reconsideration will vote aye, and those opposed will vote nay. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the motion to reconsider, the yeas are 45, the nays are 74.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The motion to reconsider does not prevail. The Chair recognizes Delegate Brake.

MR. BRAKE: A question to Mr. Bentley: I notice you make no provision in this section for filling of vacancies on the board. Is that to be taken care of some other place in the constitution or are you just leaving it blank?

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: We did not take care of this contingency, I will say to the gentleman from Stanton, and if the gentleman wishes to offer an amendment to so provide, why, the committee would, of course, consider it.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Lesinski and Miss Hart offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 16, after "law.", by inserting "The governor shall fill board vacancies by appointment. Any such appointee shall hold office until a successor has been nominated and elected as prescribed by law.".

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize Mr. Bentley, the chairman of the committee.

MR. BENTLEY: No, no. The proponent of the amendment first, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Lesinski.

MR. LESINSKI: Mr. Chairman, this amendment is proposed to provide for vacancies and to be consistent with what we adopted yesterday as pertaining to section b, Committee Proposal 98, which relates to the 3 universities.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to comment on an amendment having just immediately seen it. I will agree with the gentleman that it is consistent with the policy we adopted yesterday regarding filling vacancies on the governing boards of the higher institutions. I have no opinion. I just can't make a statement on behalf of the committee at this time.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the amendment. The Chair will have the secretary read it once more, so we will all know what we are voting on.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is:

[The amendment was again read by the secretary. For text, see above.]

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the amendment. All in favor will say aye; opposed, no.

The amendment is adopted. Are there any further amendments to the body of the proposal? If not, the proposal will pass.

Committee Proposal 47, as amended, is passed. Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The motion is that the committee now rise. All in favor will say aye. Opposed, no.

The motion prevails.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Genesee, Mr. Millard.

MR. MILLARD: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had certain matters under consideration on which the secretary will make a complete report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 47, A proposal to replace sections 2 and 6 of article XI; reports the proposal back to the convention with 3 amendments, recommending the amendments be agreed to and the proposal, as thus amended, do pass.

Following are the amendments recommended by the committee of the whole:

1. Amend page 1, line 9, after "legislature" by striking out "and to the people".

2. Amend page 1, line 16, after "law.", by striking out "The governor shall also be a member of the state board of education.".

3. Amend page 1, line 16, after "law.", by inserting "The governor shall fill board vacancies by appointment. Any such appointee shall hold office until a successor has been nominated and elected as prescribed by law.".

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon concurring, and the Chair recognizes Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. President, I would like to inquire how many amendments the secretary has pending at the desk.

SECRETARY CHASE: Those are the only ones, Mr. President.

MR. BENTEY: These are the only ones? Mr. President, I move that we adjourn.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Bentley moves that the convention do now adjourn. The question is not debatable.

MR. DOWNS: Is a preferential motion in order?

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: There is no preferential motion.

MR. DOWNS: If I get the floor, there will be.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: There could not be a preferential motion to a motion to adjourn.

MR. DOWNS: There cannot be a preferential motion to a motion to adjourn?

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: There cannot be.

MR. DOWNS: Thank you. (laughter)

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon adjournment.

MR. HOXIE: Mr. President, I ask for a division.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Upon which motion a division has been asked. Is the demand for a division supported? It is supported.

There is no preferential motion, Mr. Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: If you look on page 49 of our rules they have the order of what has preference, and there is one ahead of the motion to adjourn. I don't have this motion, but I just believe there is one, and I would like you to rule on it.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: All right. There is 1 motion that has preference. Do you want to fix the time to which to adjourn?

MR. KUHN: All right. I just wanted Mr. Downs to be aware of it.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Does Mr. Downs wish to set the time to adjourn?

MR. DOWNS: May I thank Mr. Kuhn and thank the president. I move a preferential motion that we adjourn after we have disposed of these 3 amendments.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: That is not in order.

MR. DOWNS: All right. It must be a time certain? I move we adjourn at 6:00 o'clock, as the time certain.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: That is not in order. The only motion in order would be a motion to fix the time to which to adjourn, not at which to adjourn.

MR. DOWNS: Thank you. I move the time to which we adjourn (laughter) be fixed at 6:00 o'clock.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Six o'clock when?

MR. DOWNS: Six o'clock tonight.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Does the gentleman understand that he would then be starting another session day with a new journal?

MR. DOWNS: I'm not concerned. Thank you for the information though. I am sorry, Mr. President. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. The intent of my motion was we would stay in session for another ½ hour. Am I out of order?

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: You are out of order. That can be accomplished by voting down the motion to adjourn. The motion to adjourn is before us. The motion is not debatable.

MR. DOWNS: I have one preferential motion. I move we adjourn until 5:35.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The motion is not in order.

MR. DOWNS: May I have one more try, Mr. President? (laughter) I move that we, when we adjourn, adjourn until the time certain of 5:35.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The gentleman is intending thereby to start a new session day with a new journal?

MR. DOWNS: That is correct.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: All right, I will accept that motion.

MR. DOWNS: Thank you.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: All those in favor that when the convention adjourns today, we stand adjourned until today at 5:35 p.m. —

A DELEGATE: Division.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: A division is demanded on this motion. Is the demand supported? The demand is supported. All those in favor of fixing the time to which to adjourn will vote aye, those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the motion of Mr. Downs to fix the time to which adjourn, the yeas are 36, the nays are 88.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The motion does not prevail. The question recurs upon the motion of Mr. Bentley that the convention do now adjourn, upon which a division has been demanded. All those in favor of adjourning will vote aye, and those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the motion to adjourn, the yeas are 58; the nays are 60.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The motion does not prevail. The question is upon concurring in amendments made by the committee of the whole. Mr. Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. President, on that I ask for a division and a separate roll call vote, with the yeas and nays on the Boothby amendment.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Are you asking for a division on all of them?

MR. BENTLEY: I ask that the Boothby amendment be separated from the other amendments to be voted on en bloc, the Boothby amendment to be voted on separately with the yeas and nays demanded.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: All right. The secretary will first read the 2 amendments upon which no demand has been made.

SECRETARY CHASE: The first amendment is:

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. President, I would like to move to separate those 2 questions.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Very well. Then the convention will proceed to vote upon these amendments separately. The secretary will read the first amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hubbs' amendment:

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: All those in favor of the amendment will say aye; opposed, no.

The amendment is adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Amendment 3:

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: As many as are in favor of the amendment will say aye, opposed will say no.

The amendment is adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Amendment 2 on which Mr. Bentley has demanded the yeas and nays:

2. Amend page 1, line 16, after "law.", by striking out "The governor shall also be a member of the state board of education.".

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Is the demand for the yeas and nays supported? The demand is supported. The question is upon concurring in the amendment. As many as are in favor will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and record the vote.

Following is Committee Proposal 47 as amended and referred to the committee on style and drafting:

The committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Sec. a. There shall be established a state board of education which shall provide leadership and supervision over public education including adult education and instructional programs in state institutions other than colleges and universities. In addition, it shall serve as the general planning and coordinating body for all public education in the state and shall provide advice to the legislature as to the amount of state support required. The power of the boards of institutions of higher education otherwise provided herein to supervise their respective institutions and control and direct the expenditure of the institution's funds shall not be limited by this section.

The state board of education shall consist of 8 elective members who shall hold office for 8 years. They shall be nominated by party convention and elected at large as prescribed by law. The governor shall fill board vacancies by appointment. Any such appointee shall hold office until a successor has been nominated and elected as prescribed by law.

Sec. b. The state board shall appoint a superintendent of public instruction whose term of office shall be determined by the board. He shall be the chairman of the state board without the right to vote, and shall be responsible for the execution of its policies.

The superintendent of public instruction shall be chief administrative officer of a state office of education which shall be granted sufficient funds and staff to carry on state responsibilities for education as determined by law.

SECRETARY CHASE: We have the following announcement, Mr. President: the committee on judicial branch will meet in room B tomorrow at 9:00 o'clock a.m.

We have 2 requests for leave of absence: Mrs. Butler would like to be excused from the sessions of Thursday and Friday and Mr. Hutchinson requests leave from the session of Thursday to fulfill a speaking engagement.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Is there objection to the requests? If not, they will be granted and it is so ordered.

What is the pleasure of the convention? The Chair recognizes the lady from Kent, Mrs. Koeze.

MRS. KOEZE: It isn't very often I get a chance at this microphone, so I am going to keep you sitting here for about 20 minutes now. I have been pretty quiet, but let's adjourn.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mrs. Koeze moves that the convention do now adjourn. All those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails and the convention stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 9:30 a.m.

[Whereupon, at 5:40 o'clock p.m., the convention adjourned until 9:30 o'clock a.m., Thursday, February 22, 1962.]

EIGHTY-FIFTH DAY

Thursday, February 22, 1962, 9:30 o'clock a.m.

PROCEEDINGS

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The convention will please come to order.

The invocation this morning will be offered by our fellow delegate, Joseph Snyder, from St. Clair Shores.

MR. SNYDER: O Lord, we implore Thee, let Thy inspiration precede our actions, and Thy help further them, so that all our prayers and deeds may ever take their beginning from Thee, and so begun—may through Thee, reach completion.

We are ever grateful for Thy divine guidance and the protection given by St. Christopher, Patron Saint of Travelers, in our journeys to and from these deliberations. Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The roll call will be taken by the secretary. Will those present please vote aye.

SECRETARY CHASE: Will everyone present please vote aye. Have you all voted? If so, the machine is now locked and the attendance will be recorded.

Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

Prior to today's session, the secretary received the following requests for leave:

Mrs. Hatcher, Messrs. Gover and J. A. Hannah; from today's session.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Without objection, the requests are granted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Absent with leave: Mrs. Butler, Messrs. Gover, J. A. Hannah, Mrs. Hatcher, Messrs. Hutchinson, Karn, Nisbet and Pellow.

Absent without leave: Messrs. Nord, Pollock, Shaffer and Sterrett.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Without objection, the delegates are excused.

Reports of standing committees.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Reports of select committees.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Mr. Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. President, I would like to rise to a point of personal privilege, and actually I believe I might be wrong there. But I did receive a communication this morning, and I understand that all of the delegates weren't thought of quite as well by the gentleman who sent it, or at least he thought I could use it a little better. But I would like to have the delegates know what this gentleman wants done, and it is very short:

Michigan Constitution of 1962—Short Short Form.

Article I. The state of Michigan relinquishes all rights in the county of Wayne and regretfully withdraws all objections to the establishment of the sovereign state of Wayne.

The state of Michigan shall give recognition to this new state with a period of silence of 1 hour.

Article II. Within 30 days the delegates from the other 82 counties shall reassemble to rewrite portions of the new constitution to conform with the action designated in article I. The delegates shall also write a message of congratulations to the new and fifty-first state on having the right to its own governor, legislature, supreme court, 2 United States senators on an area basis, and members of congress on a population basis, just as at present, except the legislature.

This is from Lloyd's, incorporated.

I would be very happy, gentlemen, any of you who happen to know him, if you will just vote for this. We will be happy too. (laughter)

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Mr. Farnsworth.

MR. FARNSWORTH: Mr. President, would Mr. Madar answer a question? Is there some reference in there, Mr. Madar, about 1 hour of silence? (laughter)

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Communications from state officers.

SECRETARY CHASE: No communications, Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Second reading of proposals.

SECRETARY CHASE: Nothing on that calendar for today.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Third reading of proposals.

SECRETARY CHASE: Nothing on that calendar.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Motions and resolutions.

SECRETARY CHASE: There are no resolutions on file.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Unfinished business.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Special orders of the day.

SECRETARY CHASE: There are no special orders for today.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: General orders of the day. The gentleman from Genesee, Delegate Millard.

MR. MILLARD: Mr. President, I move that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the consideration of matters on the general orders calendar.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Those in favor of the motion say aye. Opposed?

The motion prevails. Mr. Millard will preside.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The committee will be in order. The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Item 3 on page 2 of the calendar, from the committee on education, by Mr. Bentley, chairman, Committee Proposal 97, A proposal to amend article XI by adding a new section pertaining to the arts and recreation.

Following is Committee Proposal 97 as read by the secretary, and the reasons submitted in support thereof:

The committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Sec. a. THE PROMOTION AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE ARTS AND RECREATION SHALL ALWAYS BE ENCOURAGED.

Mr. Bentley, chairman of the committee on education, submits the following reasons in support of Committee Proposal 97:

The Michigan constitution has always had a forward look. One may document historically many incidences where constitutional encouragement has placed Michigan far ahead in social and cultural advancement. Two typical examples in this regard, on which this committee has already acted, are article XI, section 14 (libraries) and section 15 (charitable institutions).

Now we must look forward again to the next 50 or 100 years. Much of our consideration has been with the materialistic side of life. It would be tragic if we move so far towards the materialistic that we minimize the cultural and aesthetic. Thus to assure proper balance in our new constitution, it is being proposed that a section be designed to encourage the arts and recreation. With changes in present employment practices, shorter working hours, with the growth of automation in business and industry, now is the time to encourage creative, constructive, leisure time activities.

This recommendation also is made with the realization that in recent years there have been strong accusations that Americans are going "soft" physically. Studies which reveal deficiencies in the physical dexterity and strength of American youth have alarmed many of our thinking citizens, including former President Dwight D. Eisenhower and President Kennedy.

It is not the intent to set up a complicated organizational structure to implement this section but rather to present a simple statement of encouragement and intent which would add to the strength and esteem of this document. We leave the mechanics of implementation to the citizens of Michigan and the legislature.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize the chairman of the committee, Delegate Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, Committee Proposal 97, which was unanimously supported by the committee on education, is now before you. Because of its extreme complex and difficult aspects (laughter) we have decided to divide the presentation into 3 parts, not necessarily equal. (laughter) I will first call upon the chairman of the subcommittee which handled this proposal, the lady from Port Huron, Miss Andrus, to make a brief comment with regard to the proposal. We will then divide the proposal into 2 parts for purposes of presentation. The entire field of the arts will be discussed by Mr. Faxon. And then the fascinating subject of recreation and all of its ramifications will be covered by the gentleman from Oakland, Mr. Kuhn. (laughter and applause)

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize Delegate Andrus.

MISS ANDRUS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am sure you are all very glad to hear that this is our last proposal and you will be through with our education committee.

Tuesday we saw a great historical event out in our lobby, but also Tuesday and Wednesday, I think you saw something here in this hall which will be considered of great historical significance. We provided for an overall board of education and for a board for junior colleges. As the years go on, those will be considered of great historical importance to the young people of the state, to adults and, I think, to us taxpayers. We will be able to get much more for our tax dollar.

When we were first given this proposal, we didn't quite see its implications. I would like, however, to tell you something about the reaction as we studied the question. Our subcommittee was made up of Mr. Faxon, Mr. Heideman, Miss Hart, Mr. T. S. Brown and Mr. Kuhn. As we studied it and as we heard evidence, we came to feel that this is a very important question. It is not one to take lightly.

In our first constitutional convention, as I told you the other night, our forefathers looked forward to a time — and they were in a wilderness, you know, in 1835 — when everyone should have a chance at education, when there would be a library for everyone and there would be a state university. That was a dream. Our forefathers in the 1850 constitution again took the lead. They provided for the first state agricultural college in the whole United States, for the first state normal college west of the Appalachians. They provided for institutions for the insane, for the deaf and the dumb. We have a tradition, a background, here in Michigan of looking forward, of thinking of the needs of our people. In 1908, they did the same.

Now we are in 1962 and, as we looked at the future, we saw that there was, as we said the other day, a great need for training of people who are past high school, people who are working and who find that they need further training. But we also found another problem, and it goes right along with this new civilization of ours: that is the question of leisure time. We are going to have more and more people who have more and more time. What are we going to do with it? I am sure everyone here realizes that the most important resource that we have in this country is people. The people of this country are our most important resource. However, today, with our shortening of the working days in the week, there is an enormous amount of leisure. We are finding that people do not know how to use this leisure. They flounder around in spending it. And we have found juvenile delinquency increasing very rapidly. You know, we are living longer now and people retire early. They have so much time on their hands that this has become a serious problem in this country. We were shocked to hear that in institutions they talk of people as vegetables. Have you ever heard that? I never heard it before. These people have no interest in life. They just live. They have no idea of what to do with their time.

Now, this proposal as we studied it came to mean more and more to us and our subcommittee was unanimous in bringing this report out to the committee and they voted to submit it to you. I wish you would give it very, very serious consideration. This is something of the present, but it is going to be of even more significance in the future.

I told you the other night that I spent a summer in Russia studying their educational system, and it was most interesting to see at that time most Russians couldn't read and write. They didn't know anything about technology. Look at them today. We need to train people to be able to compete with them. Now all over Russia they have a physical training program. I think we have seen this very, very clearly in the Olympic games in recent years. The United States with its great size used to win those. We are not doing it any more. People in cities don't have the opportunities that we did in the earlier days living in the country and in smaller towns, so physical fitness has come to be one of the big problems in national defense. And then there is the other side to it, not only the physical side but the mental, emotional and the moral side of people who don't know what to do with their time.

The same summer I was in Russia, I came back through Italy and Germany. There all the youngsters were marching. They were taking part in physical exercises. And here is a point Mr. Eisenhower stressed to us the other day: if we don't meet problems locally in our states, they are going to be met by the national government. I am sure that most of the people in this convention don't want to go to Washington, but questions of leisure time, questions of physical fitness are so important that the national government will, as they have done in many other fields, feel that they have to take this over if we don't meet it ourselves.

Now, in our proposal we are not saying that any certain thing should be done. We are just saying to our state legislature in the future that we, the people of Michigan, who speak through the constitutional convention today, would like to have them know that we are interested in this problem and that we would like them to participate; to encourage, in any way that seems desirable, young people, retired people, people of all ages in the use of their leisure time. If someone has something constructive to do, they are interested.

I think there is one other point I would like to leave with you. I imagine most of you are like me. You have had very interesting work to do. You aren't just standing at a machine. You are not doing something routine and mechanical. I work 10 hours a day and enjoy every minute of it and take work home over the weekend. But most of our people today — and there are going to be many more in the future with automation — are not going to have anything very interesting. Have you noticed how many people have taken up painting? You hear every now and then about people who never painted before. In our town through our junior college we have a little theatre group. We have an orchestra. We have art classes. Those are our activities which will give people a sense of achievement, of creating, of doing something that is worth while. Mr. Faxon was the proposer of this.

I would like to say one other thing. It will take about 2 sentences in the constitution. And I would like to have you, when you vote on it, think about 40 years from now or 50 years from now. How are people going to look back at this constitutional convention? Are they going to feel that we were looking forward and we saw a need, as they did in 1835 and 1850 and 1908? This is the way we could show that.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, a constitution, as some of you may know, is not just a document which concerns itself only with setting up the structure of government and the outlines of its functions. A constitution also contains within it statements of purpose and intent and it has this appearance and it has had for several hundreds of years.

Before I get into the specific wording, I just want to call to your attention that as early as 1682 in the frame of the government of the colony of Pennsylvania, a concern for the arts was expressed. And I might add that it was expressed on an equal basis with that of justice, because they were concerned then with a committee of justice and safety, and they were also concerned with a committee of manners, education and arts, and as it goes on into the frame of 1682, "That all wicked and scandalous living may be prevented and that youth may be successively trained up in virtue and useful knowledge and arts." And so the word that we are dealing with here is nothing new to our American heritage and in fact goes back before the very creation of our federal constitution.

Now, when we refer to the arts as we do in this particular section, it is understood that we are referring to the creative arts and the creative arts include those of music, painting, drama and expressions of artistic forms. You will note that in our bill of rights, we had added the words "to express" dealing with freedom, freedom to express, as another area where a free society functions, so we have in essence already acknowledged that this is something which we have concern with and this is only following it up with more concrete words.

Originally the proposals that have been put in, Delegate Proposals 1055 and 1056, dealt with the establishment of an art commission or commission of the arts and with the director of the arts. These aren't entirely new. You will note that a good deal of talk on the arts has been had on the federal level where there has been mentioned that there might be a federal department of the arts. Other states have already made efforts in the direction of encouraging this form within their respective states, so for Michigan to take a position in this area would not represent any departure from what other states are doing. It would simply represent, in my opinion, a forward look and a feeling on the part of the citizens of this state that the future welfare of our citizens depends in part upon the providing of facilities and opportunities for artistic expression.

In addition to other states having made efforts in setting up programs for artistic development, that the federal government is evincing an interest in this area, I should call to your attention that in other countries, especially those of Europe from which we derive most of our culture today, this area of the arts forms a very important part of their society. Just to illustrate with an area of equal population, take the country of Holland, whose population is not far from the state of Michigan. You would have at least 15 or 20 symphony orchestras. You would have art museums. You would have various institutions that promote the arts within the country throughout this small area of small population.

It is not the intent in this proposal to establish a state subsidy for arts. It is not the intent of this proposal to in any way depart from what the historical pattern of the arts has been in this state. It is simply to give expression to the concern of the citizens of this state for an area which is in need of future action and an area which most people will agree is necessary to a free functioning society.

I therefore would invite anyone, after I finish, if you have any questions on the arts, to ask them and I will be very happy to answer them, but I feel that I would like at this time to permit Mr. Kuhn to give you his explanation with regard to the word "recreation."

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize the delegate from Oakland, Delegate Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, when this question came before our committee on education, I really had no idea that I would support anything like this. (laughter) In fact, I was inclined to be opposed to it. But after giving it serious consideration and thinking of it on the serious side and not on the humorous side, I saw where it did have real merit, a step forward, a progressive step.

As you know, former President Eisenhower, President Kennedy and J. Edgar Hoover all say that we must do something for our youth in order to have a good free society. Juvenile delinquency has been on the rise for many years.

I think it would be fitting to know at this time that in 1961, in October, the national recreation congress had their national convention in our Cobo hall in the city of Detroit and that they had 2,500 volunteer and professional workers in recreation on hand, and the speaker for the day was secretary of the interior, Stuart L. Udall. They also had Dr. Forbes, director of health, physical education and recreation. They had the president's chairman on youth fitness, Dr. Donald P. Kent. Martin S. Hayden, editor of the Detroit News, opened the congress Sunday night.

This is an important question. People say, "What do you mean by recreation?" I say it can mean anything your mind says it is. I like to think of it on a very high level. (laughter) One of the greatest experiences I have had since I have been out of school and have been working is to be able to have recreation. Personally, until this year, when I came down here in con con, I used to play basketball at least once a week. It was fitting that last night I had to return to my district to make a speech. The snow was heavy. And when I got home late last night, I decided I better look through my newspapers. It was very encouraging for me to see our circuit court judge of Oakland county, Frederick C. Ziem's picture with a bunch of kids; that he takes time every Saturday morning to go over to our local junior high school and coach one of the basketball teams. This is the kind of recreation that I have in mind.

Our township spends maybe $70,000. Where does this money come from for recreation? Half of it comes from the board of education. The other half comes from our township government. In cities, generally, the board of education participates half and the other half is paid for by the city government.

I was on this committee on legislative powers. We toured the state and we heard these older people say, "We need to play bingo. We don't have any recreation." Well, I was thinking then of what we had back in Waterford township and what most of our cities have and what they are pushing, and that is these golden age groups where these older people who are retired, 65 and older, can go and have recreation and fellowship. This is the thing we are talking about.

Another significant thing, I think, is that the state of Michigan's third largest industry is our tourist industry. We are known for our lakes, for our parks. We are now getting known for our skiing facilities, for our winter sports. I say it is all where you put your mind.

To me there is nothing better than clean, healthy recreation, and I would be one that would support this, along with our arts.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Binkowski.

MR. BINKOWSKI: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I would like to direct a question to Mr. Kuhn because he struck a very tender chord in my heart when he mentioned bingo. (laughter) Under your interpretation, Mr. Kuhn, can we play bingo now, I mean under this section? We have "recreation" in there.

MR. KUHN: I would say you certainly can play bingo.

MR. BINKOWSKI: Legally?

MR. KUHN: There has never been anything wrong with playing bingo. The only thing you can't do is play for prizes or consideration.

MR. BINKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Kuhn.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Anspach.

MR. ANSPACH: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I rise in support of this proposal, and in doing so I use the words of another in support. The first, a reference to the Master Himself:

> He grew in stature and wisdom and in favor with God and man.

Second, the proverb of the Arab:

> If I had 2 loaves of bread, I would sell one to buy a hyacinth that I might feed my soul.

And last, the words of the Master Himself:

> Man does not live by bread alone.

I support the proposal.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to get up to declare myself in favor of this proposal because I just heard Mr. Kuhn mention "our Cobo hall." (laughter) This is wonderful. Who knows, we may even open the subject of local home rule and taxation, and maybe Pontiac will be able to help us with our Cobo hall.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The committee recommends:

Mr. Stevens has filed the following amendment, and Mr. Hubbs has filed the same amendment:

1. Amend page 1 by striking out all of lines 8 and 9. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Stevens from Detroit.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, it will not take me long to present the opposition to this. I am opposed to this for about 4 reasons. It is meaningless, useless, of no effect, and it serves no purpose.

I do not object to retaining a few of these things in the constitution because of their historical importance, but I see no reason for burdening the constitution by putting in new and ineffective statements of philosophy of this kind. It in no way increases or decreases the present power of the legislature or anyone else in the field of recreation or the fine arts. The long dissertations on fine arts and recreation are entirely irrelevant and immaterial. They have nothing to do with our consideration of a constitution. I am sure there are others who want to speak at greater length than I.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Hubbs is recognized.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I hope that I am the last to speak and I tell you that I am not going to speak at great length. I only would like to suggest that the material contained in the education preamble is sufficient to accomplish the noble objectives of the committee on education.

Committee Proposal 97 is a declaratory statement, and to a degree could cause a little difficulty in the future by being used as an excuse to spend money in areas of questionable value and I am concerned for economy as usual. Any unnecessary increase in the already large cost of education or any other section of government should be avoided if possible. I feel that this statement might lead to difficulty because it is both too specific and too general. Arts may be construed by some to mean only certain fine arts, painting, sculpture, things of that sort; recreation being so general as to encompass anything that any individual considered provided him with relaxing effects.

I therefore respectfully suggest that we vote to strike the entire Committee Proposal 97. I would say that yesterday we pulled a feather from the tail of the sacred cow. Today I think that maybe we should pull a horsefeather from the tail of the sacred cow. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize Delegate Howes.

MR. HOWES: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I rise not only to speak in favor of this proposal, but to bring to your mind another gap or place where we are falling down in the job of education. The gap that I am referring to is in the training of our young people who do not have the ability to finish high school or who cannot, try as hard as they can, get through the first year of college. The real heartbreak of our society can be found by delving into the feelings of these young people who have tried and not made the grade.

Many of the boys in this category try to enlist in the armed forces, but the armed forces during the past few years have been turning to the men of higher ability and sending a large share of these boys back home. I had 2 of these boys working for me planting forest trees a year ago last spring. They were good workers on a job where they had supervision. When I was through with the tree planting, I did not have this type of job for them. They both enlisted in the army. In 4 weeks they were both back. Next week one of them comes up for sentence for breaking and entering and robbery of a gas station in the nighttime. I believe that instead of the feeling of resentment that naturally comes to us at such young men as this one, we should have feelings of remorse that we have not provided a job at some small pay, and along with it some training which would enable them to get a good job and become good citizens of our state.

I believe if we owe about $1,000 per student — which I believe is about the amount which is appropriated now by our state to the young people with ability — we do owe something to the young people with lesser ability, and I believe it is a part of the job of education. I support higher education and I will continue to support it with all my ability but I will not feel right to do this while my back is turned on this other more unfortunate segment of our society.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Lansing, Delegate Wanger.

MR. WANGER: Mr. Chairman, fellow alumni — (laughter) fellow delegates, I rise in support of the amendment to the proposal this morning in all seriousness because I believe that this proposal as it has been reported out from the committee is somewhat discriminatory. It picks out recreation and the arts and says that they shall be promoted and developed, whereas I think that there is a very honest division of feeling whether or not in addition or instead, science, wildlife, the humanities, philanthropy, honesty, patriotism, citizenship, or a host of other qualities might be just as much in need of promotion as the qualities which the committee's proposal is limited to.

I also speak in favor of the amendment because, frankly, the word "recreation" has a very definite connotation of frivolity. I know the educators will appreciate Roget's Thesaurus which defines recreation as "Refreshment, play, pastime, relaxation. See amusement." And Evans' Dictionary of Contemporary American Usage in defining recreation states, "A recreation is an agreeable pastime or diversion which affords relaxation and enjoyment."

So regardless of what arduous and high forms of recreation the committee and Delegate Kuhn certainly have in mind, the words of themselves connote something far more frivolous. In fact, indeed in the light of the presentation that has been made by members of the committee, I think it would be more appropriate to their intent to include the words "hard work, physical fitness and mental health" in this part of the constitution rather than the word "recreation" because, considering the real meaning of the word "recreation" in its broadest sense, in its real sense, I think we can all agree that while man does not live by bread alone, the proposal as it stands really just adds more bread. (laughter)

The next point which I would like to make with respect to this proposal is simply that in the state of Michigan and pretty much in this part of the United States, recreation and the arts do not need constitutional encouragement. You know, many years ago the writer, H. L. Mencken, spoke of one segment of our country which is far removed from this as being a sahara of the beaux arts. Yet today in Michigan we have many cultural advantages in the field of literature, athletics, amusements and art of every form. In fact, I believe Delegate Kuhn just pointed out that recreation now has a congress. Now, under this situation of development, I am sure that we are not in need of placing specific constitutional encouragement on recreation or the arts so far as the need for adequate future development in the state is concerned.

Finally, I would like to add that, as has perhaps been implied by a couple of previous speakers, including recreation and the arts in the constitution might be interpreted as an endorsement of state owned, state subsidized or state controlled theater, opera, orchestra, perhaps an official poet laureate, or perhaps even a state football team.

We must remember that the document we are drafting has to do with government and certainly if there is anything in the constitution which the constitution provides should be promoted or developed, it is only natural to conclude that the drafters of that constitution meant that it should be promoted and developed directly by the state. I frankly don't believe that, as a constitutional convention, we should be concerned with settling this question one way or the other, but rather, leave the situation as it is, so that the legislature, if and when it is necessary in the future to do so, can take such steps as may be necessary in this field. But to include these words in the constitution would be adding something that might be interpreted unfavorably for the public good in the future and as something which is entirely legislative in character rather than constitutional.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment and to support the committee recommendation in this regard. I appreciate the crusty remarks of Delegate Wanger and I suggest to him that there has always been a difference of constitutional purpose as explained to us by Chief Justice Marshall and those who took a broad construction theory of the constitution and those who took a very narrow one and that constitutional struggle is being perpetrated in this arena today.

I think what is involved here is a broader recognition of the function of a constitution. It is not merely one to proclaim specific delegation of powers and to limit the powers and to provide a structure of government. It is also to proclaim constitutional policy. It is also to indicate principles not only for the present but for the future and what is intended here is indigenous and germane and related to all the other provisions of the education article.

I think it is a step in the right direction of indicating that we are placing high on the order of values in the democratic society the cultivation of the arts and perhaps of a different concept of recreation, a recreating, if you will, of the will of the people in their devotion and desire on behalf of a democratic society. I think that the committee is to be commended for implementing the kind of spirit that was proclaimed in the principle which we have accepted as the first section of the education article about the means of education shall forever be encouraged.

I think what we are saying here is the arts also and recreation in the highest sense ought to be encouraged as part of the values in a democratic society. To be sure, words that have some latitude may be misconstrued, but that is why we have the courts. It is also a fact that in constitutional language you try to implement a policy. I think the statements by Miss Andrus, Mr. Faxon and Mr. Kuhn, as part of the intent of this particular projected language, will serve a very useful purpose, and as time goes on it will afford a basis for those who wish to say that the legislature ought to implement it by appropriate legislation to take care of the problems that are related to these 2 fields.

I am sorry myself that there isn't appearing in the constitution other statements of broader constitutional policy so that there may be some guide lines to the future. So we are trying to develop a document here in a different age altogether from the age of 1908 and the years that preceded it. We are trying to lift our sights to a totally different world that the balance of this century will reflect, and we ought to proclaim in this constitution the kind of standards and judgments and values that we want our civilization to be judged by. We judge a person by what he honors. We judge a people by what they state in their constitution. And I think that by stating that here, we are indicating the kind of standards we wish our legislature and our people to promote in the time to come.

I support, Mr. Chairman, the committee proposal and I rise against the recommendation in the Stevens amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, the statement has been made here that this statement is new and an ineffective statement which doesn't increase the power of the legislature. I would like to call to your attention that we could go through any number of articles in the present constitution and in the proposed constitution and find equal statements which do not increase the power of the legislature because the legislature already has the power to move in these particular fields.

Just to bring to your attention 2 articles or proposals which you have already acted upon, we might look at libraries. The legislature has a responsibility for libraries. Putting it into the constitution doesn't make it any less responsible. We may look at the proposal dealing with institutions for the care and rehabilitation and treatment of those who are physically and mentally and otherwise seriously handicapped and indicate once again this doesn't have to be in the constitution because the legislature already has the power to act.

I might say that you could take a look at that tax article, with all due respect to its chairman — it is a good one; at least some of it — and you might also note that there are many parts there that the legislature could do without putting it into the constitution. So let us not try to diminish the importance of this statement by using the argument that this is completely of a legislative sort and doesn't belong there.

Statements have been made to misread what this language says so that it ends up that we are promoting and developing the arts and recreation. And, my friends, I ask you to look at this statement and see whether this is what it says at all. It says, "The promotion and development of the arts and recreation shall always be encouraged." Not that we are promoting and developing but that we are encouraging the promotion and development, and I think there is a significant difference in the interpretation between one and the other. And the language was deliberately worded in this way so as not to make any confusion as to what our role as a state is with regard to the arts and recreation.

A previous speaker referred to a number of other generalities of qualities that we might insert here, as if to indicate why be discriminatory to these areas when there are others that deserve our attention and he indicated in there such words as humanities and others. And I wish to call to your attention that the creative arts include the humanities and that some of those aspects or qualities which he referred to could be construed as being part of recreation and/or the arts.

The allegation has been made that recreation has a connotation of frivolity and this may be true to some, but I don't think we laugh when we refer to our state as a recreation area. I think we are proud of the fact that Michigan ranks third in the field of recreation and we are proud of the fact that people from all over the country come to the state for recreation. It is an important industry in this state. It is an important aspect to our whole culture in this state. It is not one which is simply one of frivolity.

The other charge has been made that this could lead to the state in the arts business. If the original statement is true that this doesn't increase the power of the legislature — and I support this as being true; it doesn't increase the power of the legislature — then for the proponents of the amendment to delete the lines to assert that it makes possible state owned arts is to deny their first premise upon which they say that it doesn't increase the power of the legislature. I could point out to you, therefore, that if the legislature saw fit to indulge in any field of artistic endeavor or in some support of recreation, they could do so without this language, and so to support the idea that the language will make possible the legislature moving into an area which it cannot move into, I suspect, is a false conclusion.

In concluding my rebuttal here, I simply wish to point out to the delegates that we are dealing with one sentence, a sentence of few words and only 2 lines. We have acted quickly on pages of language dealing with bonding — and I don't say that this wasn't important, but pages, hundreds of words, and now all you are being asked to consider are about 10 or 12 words as a statement of purpose and intent. I think it ill behooves any delegate who has acted with such care and caution over such matters as finance and powers to suddenly look upon this in any great suspicion or feeling that this is opening up an area which cannot be opened otherwise.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I rise in favor of the committee report and in opposition to the amendment. I can only say very briefly what Miss Andrus said so adequately, that when the people who founded Michigan came here as a territory, they, who were living in log cabins with no television, none of the conveniences we have, dedicated their government to the promotion of education and institutions for the well being of people. I think rather than being anything new, this continues by directive to lift our sights to do just a little bit better than has been done and follows the great historic tradition of our state of trying to reach out ahead.

I think the intent is fine, I agree completely with those who say that it is not spelled out in detail any more than some of the other provisions are. I think the intent is clear and urge the support of the committee report and opposition to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize the proposer of the amendment, Delegate Stevens.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I realize the importance of that axiom that the volume of the discussion is inversely in proportion to the importance of the subject matter under consideration. I will therefore, after one brief statement of appreciation of Professor Norris' paper on his philosophy about constitutions, a philosophy with which I disagree but, at least he did explain his idea and purpose in this, merely repeat my prepared address on this that I believe that this is meaningless, useless, of no effect and serves no purpose. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I think that we have spent entirely too much time on this subject for the moment. I would like to rebut in detail the good many arguments that have been made but I will say only this, the proponents of this language should fire their retrorockets and get back into orbit or get out of orbit and let's bring them down to earth with a division when we vote. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Pontiac, Delegate King.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I am somewhat torn on this particular issue. One of my most influential constituents is an artist — and that's my wife (laughter). But I am concerned about this recreation. I think the term is rather broad. I never know what my good friend and colleague is up to. Last night he corrected our distinguished vice president and parliamentarian by finding a motion which would take precedence over a motion to adjourn, which reminded me of a story of a fellow who had some trouble with speech and he had gone away to a speech correction school. It seemed as though he stuttered. And when he returned, his friend came up to him and said, "Has this school helped your problem?" And he said, "Y-y-y-yes. I can n-n-now say Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers, b-b-but it rarely comes up in c-c-c-conversation." (laughter)

Now, our president of this land of ours has said, "Ask not what your country can do for you but rather what you can do for your country." I think perhaps we are emphasizing the wrong thing. I admit when Mr. Kuhn thinks of recreation, he thinks of circuit judges teaching high school boys how to play basketball, and golden age groups playing payless bingo. (laughter) Others may think of horse racing and burlesque shows, (laughter) with "burlesk" being spelled phonetically for those whose backgrounds are heavy on recreation. (laughter)

Frankly, I hope we can attack the problem separately and consider the, what I think, very worthwhile proposal encouraging fine arts and, if that can be done, I would be happy to support that part of it.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Detroit, Delegate Dade.

MR. DADE: Mr. Chairman, I think there is a very basic problem here and I think this problem is the increasing dehumanization and mechanization of society; that man today is so engrossed in scientific things, scientific work methods, that he is losing his soul, and that social scientists are increasingly concerned about this problem, and that instead of looking at this in a frivolous manner, we should look at this in its high aspects.

And I am certain that we are aware when we speak of recreation, we are thinking of recreation in the idea of recreation, and we are perfectly aware we are not talking about burlesque. We are not talking about the lesser pursuits. We are talking about the higher definition of recreation.

And I notice as I read this it says nothing about "promote." It says "encourage." And I think as a matter of the general welfare of the people of this state and looking forward to some 25 years, it is good to encourage, and looking to the nature of society some 25 years from now, it will be a good thing to have in our constitution a general encouragement of the arts and recreation, and in doing this, we shall be doing something that we shall be proud of.

And I say again it is a good thing and I support the committee proposal.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Wanger.

MR. WANGER: I can't help but comment, Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, on the thoughts of our forefathers when they were building this country when we did not have the advantages which we have today. I would like to say that our forefathers had done their job very, very well. Perhaps some day historians might say too well. They have given us the highest standard of living in the world, more leisure time than any other population generally ever enjoyed before in the history of the world. And I think today when we are thinking of emphasizing something in the constitution as a choice, the emphasis should rather be on hard work rather than on recreation with its connotation of frivolity which so naturally attaches to it.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Grand Rapids, Delegate Blandford.

MR. BLANDFORD: Mr. Chairman, Delegate Wanger in his opposition to this proposal defined recreation as "an agreeable pastime." Instead of turning me against this proposal, I suddenly find myself in favor of it. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the lady from Grand Rapids, Delegate Judd.

MRS. JUDD: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I was not going to speak on this subject originally but the levity with which it has been treated causes me to get to my feet. Personally, I do not think it is necessary to put it in the constitution, but I should hate to have the general public's impression of this convention be that we felt these were light matters.

I have worked closely with the national recreation association for about 30 years and I know that recreation is increasingly a need. And I agree with Father Dade that this is a lot more than just having fun; that it involves a whole problem of our society today with its increasing leisure and increasing crime that goes with that leisure. This is a positive way of trying to handle this problem.

I do not think that it is necessary in the constitution, however, because our legislature has ample power. The conservation department is busy with this problem all of the time. Our cities and our boards of education are involved in recreation. It does need more promotion, more funds, more encouragement, but this will only come as the citizens of the state want and demand it and they can get what they want if they go after it.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Taylor, Delegate Marshall.

MR. MARSHALL: Mr. Chairman, we spent slightly over an hour, approximately one hour, debating this one provision with 13 words in it, 13 words being an unlucky number. And I agree with Mrs. Judd in the statements that she made. I don't believe this should be written into the constitution. If it is to be, however, I have offered an amendment that is on the secretary's desk that I intend to speak on for about 20 minutes. However, if the delegates will agree that they have talked long enough on this one and vote, I will agree to withdraw my amendment. I would like to ask the secretary to read the amendment, though, to see if the delegates think it is necessary.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Marshall, you are the last one on the list. Maybe we are ready to vote.

MR. MARSHALL: I would still like to have my amendment read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Marshall's amendment is to insert after the word "recreation" the word "oratory". (laughter)

MR. MARSHALL: I will, however, if the committee is ready to vote, withdraw the amendment provided that we vote now on this question. I offer this because 13 being an unlucky number, we would have 14 words.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: I don't want anybody to do us any favors. If this is a serious question, which I think it is, I do not think we should take it lightly. I am very disappointed the way some people talk about recreation but maybe that is the only recreation they know. As I said, this is taken in the way we think of recreation.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Does the delegate from Taylor want to answer?

MR. MARSHALL: I want to advise Delegate Kuhn that I am not taking it lightly. I think, though, that when we spend over an hour and we know and realize we aren't going to change any minds, that minds are made up on this question, we begin to look a little silly. I will still withdraw my amendment providing we vote at this moment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Stevens-Hubbs amendment. Mr. Hubbs has demanded a division. Is it seconded? A sufficient number up. All those in favor of the — Mr. Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: May we have the amendment read, please?

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is to strike out all of the proposal, all of lines 8 and 9.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question now is upon the Stevens-Hubbs amendment which has just been read. All those in favor will vote aye; those opposed will vote nay. Have you all voted? The secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the amendment, the yeas are 64, the nays are 54.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The amendment is adopted.

Delegate Conklin.

MRS. CONKLIN: Mr. Chairman, in spite of putting the recreation out, I would like to remind them it is 10:40. Do you intend to recess? (laughter)

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Is that a motion? Under the convention orders, the committee will rise.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, Vice President Romney resumed the Chair.]

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The convention will stand in recess for 10 minutes.

[Whereupon, at 10:40 o'clock a.m., the convention recessed; and, at 10:50 o'clock a.m., reconvened.]

The convention will be in order.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Millard.

MR. MILLARD: Mr. President, I move that the convention now resolve itself into committee of the whole for the consideration of further matters on general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Those in favor say aye. Those opposed?

The motion prevails. Delegate Millard will preside.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The committee will be in order. The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Faxon has submitted the following amendment to Committee Proposal 97:

1. Amend page 1, following line 6, by inserting "Sec. a. The promotion and development of the arts shall always be encouraged.".

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, during the past hour's discussion with regard to the original proposal, much time was spent with regard to the use of a particular word which seemed to some to indicate all sorts of dangers which I didn't agree with but which seemed to be the feeling of the committee. There was not such a feeling expressed with regard to the arts which, as I mentioned to you before, dealt with the creative arts, as they have been a part of our heritage for some several hundred years.

I don't intend to begin any prolonged debate on this, but I feel that we ought to carefully consider that this proposal was the unanimous recommendation of the committee on education, that there was considerable feeling for its inclusion, and that the arts play an ever increasing role in our society as the leisure time develops for the people of this state. I cannot over emphasize the need for the kind of breadth of scope that this would permit in our constitution, and I would urge all of you to consider and to vote in favor of this amendment.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Delegate Stevens.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I oppose the pending amendment for the same reasons, which I will repeat at some length. It is meaningless, useless, of no effect and serves no useful purpose. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I honestly think that we have spent a lot of time on this thing and I respectfully agree with Mrs. Judd that this is something that can be taken care of in another way and shouldn't be in the constitution. And I think that as we go along, our thinking has even become just a little bit cloudy, and I am quite disturbed with Mr. King's position when he said that he favored separating the question because he favored art — and he mentioned burlesque with reference to it as being a recreation, and actually we all know that burlesque is not recreation; it is art. (laughter) So I really think we shouldn't waste any more time. Let's vote on this. I hope we will vote this new amendment down, and let's get on to the judicial article where we who really like to tear into things can find a lot of meat to work on. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Grand Rapids, Delegate Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy at this time to agree with my compatriot, Mr. Hubbs. I second his motion.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The Chair recognizes Delegate Dade.

MR. DADE: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make the one observation that in our consideration of this matter, in our references, we be reminded that in the audience there are young people.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The secretary will read the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Faxon's amendment is:

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The question is on the Faxon amendment.

MR. FAXON: Division.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Mr. Faxon has demanded a division. Is that seconded? A sufficient number up. All those in favor of the amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote nay. The secretary will restate the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The delegates will be reminded that prior to the recess, lines 8 and 9 were stricken out of the proposal by amendment. Mr. Faxon now offers the amendment to insert in lines 8 and 9 the words, "The promotion and development of the arts shall always be encouraged.".

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: All in favor will vote aye, and those opposed will vote nay. Have you all voted? The secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Faxon, the yeas are 47; the nays are 71.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The amendment is not adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: There are no further pending amendments, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: Committee Proposal 97, as amended, is passed.

I recognize the chairman of the committee, Delegate Bentley.

MR. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, this completes the proposals from the committee on education, which I might remind the committee has extended over a period which began last October 23 and continued on until today, almost exactly 4 months.

At this time I would just like to make a very brief statement regarding the committee on education. It is not my intention to name by name the dedicated members, men and women, of the committee that have worked so hard to bring these proposals to the floor, proposals which, with the exception of the last one, 97, have, I think in whole, met with the general approval of the committee of the whole on first reading. But I would like to give my own personal thanks and pay my own personal tribute to the 20 ladies and gentlemen that composed the committee on education for having cooperated and collaborated almost 100 per cent with no thought of any motive in mind but that of doing their very best in the field and for the cause of public education in our state; and, as I say, express to them my own very deep sense of personal gratitude for the cooperation and assistance which they gave me, as chairman, during this long period of deliberations and consideration.

At this time, again, I wish to remind the committee of the whole that we have completed our work as a committee on education and I wish to thank the members of my committee and I wish to thank the members of the committee of the whole for the consideration which they gave to our proposals during these past 4 months.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN MILLARD: The chairman of the committee on education moves that the committee do now rise. All in favor say aye. Opposed, no.

The motion prevails.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, Vice President Romney resumed the Chair.]

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Millard is recognized.

MR. MILLARD: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has risen and the secretary will make a detailed report of what occurred there.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 97, A proposal to amend article XI by adding a new section pertaining to the arts and recreation. The committee of the whole reports the proposal back to the convention with the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1 by striking out all of lines 8 and 9.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Those in favor say aye. Opposed?

The amendment is agreed to.

Delegate Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. President, we would like to demand the yeas and nays on this amendment.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Those in favor of the yeas and nays, please indicate.

SECRETARY CHASE: Seventeen.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Not a sufficient number.

Committee Proposal 97, as amended, is referred to the committee on style and drafting.

Following is Committee Proposal 97 as amended and referred to the committee on style and drafting:

The committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

(Note — The complete content of this committee proposal has been stricken.)

Mr. Gadola.

MR. GADOLA: Mr. President, I have a point of order here or information. What are you going to propose to style and drafting? There is no Committee Proposal 97.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: I think the delegate is right. There is nothing to refer. It was voted down.

The secretary advises me that it will be reported to the style and drafting committee as a negative report. It will be an indication to the style and drafting committee as to the sentiment of the convention and for their guidance in their work.

Delegate Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. I am wondering if a motion would be in order as an amendment, then, which would be what the committee report is, "The promotion and development of the arts and recreation shall always be encouraged." Could we put that in, say, as an amendment to that and then ask for a vote?

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Kuhn, this is not a proper amendment. The convention has just expressed itself on that matter.

Delegate Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for further consideration of matters on the order of general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: You have heard the motion. Those in favor say aye. Opposed?

The motion prevails. Delegate Van Dusen will preside.

[Whereupon, Mr. Van Dusen assumed the Chair to preside as chairman of the committee of the whole.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will be in order and the secretary will read the first proposal.

SECRETARY CHASE: Item 1 on your calendar, from the committee on judicial branch, by Mr. Danhof, chairman, Committee Proposal 90, A proposal pertaining to the judicial branch. A substitute for section 1 of article VII.

Following is Committee Proposal 90 as read by the secretary, and the reasons submitted in support thereof:

The committee recommends that the following be included in the Constitution:

Sec. a. THE JUDICIAL POWER OF THE STATE IS VESTED EXCLUSIVELY IN ONE COURT OF JUSTICE, WHICH SHALL BE DIVIDED INTO ONE SUPREME COURT, ONE COURT OF APPEALS, ONE TRIAL COURT OF GENERAL JURISDICTION KNOWN AS THE CIRCUIT COURT, ONE PROBATE COURT AND OTHER COURTS OF LIMITED JURISDICTION THAT THE LEGISLATURE MAY ESTABLISH BY A 2/3 VOTE OF THE MEMBERS OF EACH HOUSE.

Explanation—Matter within [ ] is stricken, matter in capitals is new.

Mr. Danhof, chairman of the committee on judicial branch, submits the following reasons in support of Committee Proposal 90:

After 3 months of hearings and another of discussion, the committee members are in general agreement that Michigan's judicial system is basically sound. The committee, therefore, took the approach that the deficiencies of the system should be corrected, but the structure should be maintained. A study of systems available in other comparable states confirmed this opinion.

The proposed section makes 3 basic changes. It creates "a court of justice." This is primarily an administrative matter, but incorporates the concept that we have a single court, with several branches, each devoting its attention to a certain level of judicial administration. This is the modern concept originally propounded by Dean Roscoe Pound, and since adopted in most new state constitutions. The language comes from the model judicial article of the American bar association.

The second change is to create an intermediate court of appeals. The committee believed that the present degree of work of the supreme court might well justify this new court. Certainly the mandate of this convention, that an appeal of right in criminal cases be granted, makes the creation of an intermediate court of appeals, in the opinion of the committee, essential.

Finally, this section removes the constitutional status of the justice of the peace system. The purpose is to enable the legislature to create a modern court of limited jurisdiction. The committee gave serious consideration to several proposals for the creation of a county court system. While a number of the members felt in sympathy with these ideas, it was concluded by the committee that the legislature should be given the leeway and the obligation to create courts of limited jurisdiction. It was the thought of the committee that a flexible system could thus be designed to meet the differing needs of large and small counties.

Following is the minority report to Committee Proposal 90 as offered, (no reasons were submitted in support thereof):

Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister, a minority of the committee on judicial branch, submit the following minority report to Committee Proposal 90:

A minority of the committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Line 5, after "vested", strike "exclusively"; and line 6, strike "one court of justice, which shall be divided into"; so that the section will read as follows:

Sec. a. THE JUDICIAL POWER OF THE STATE IS VESTED IN ONE SUPREME COURT, ONE COURT OF APPEALS, ONE TRIAL COURT OF GENERAL JURISDICTION KNOWN AS THE CIRCUIT COURT, ONE PROBATE COURT AND OTHER COURTS OF LIMITED JURISDICTION THAT THE LEGISLATURE MAY ESTABLISH BY A 2/3 VOTE OF THE MEMBERS OF EACH HOUSE.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize Mr. Danhof, chairman of the committee.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, after having discussed such high level topics as fine arts and recreation of various forms, we come down now to such mundane things as the supreme court, circuit courts and the justices of the peace. Looking back at Mr. Hubbs' statement of a few moments ago in which he said that he wanted to get into something he could sink his teeth into, I approach this with a little fear and trepidation and advise him that the chairman of the committee is not of sufficient size to satisfy everybody. (laughter)

In starting out, I should state that the committee was composed of 21 in number, of which 20 were licensed to practice law in the state of Michigan. I have no problem but what we can convince the lay members of this committee that our proposal is good. My only concern is with those other 37 members licensed to practice law who were not on the committee. Mr. Barthwell, who served as the only nonlawyer, has stated that he will readily take the blame for any mistakes that may have occurred, (laughter) since he knows that 19 lawyers could not possibly have made any mistakes in writing this article. (laughter)

Earlier today on the desk you received 2 pamphlets. The committee proposals are found in Committee Proposals 90 through 96, and the one that the secretary has just read is Committee Proposal 90. The committee on judicial branch decided very early in their deliberations that we would write a new article and, as such, everything you find in the committee proposals will be in caps. Exclusion reports have been filed for every section in the old article VII. However, for your information and for your guidance, there has been prepared, taken from the sections of the 1908 constitution and insofar as it could be arranged, the interlineations of the new language and the new sections. I also took it upon myself to prepare a very sketchy outline which will show to you Committee Proposal 90, for instance, section a, the corresponding section of the 1908 constitution, being article VII, section 1, and very briefly the changes that the committee has recommended. This will allow you to follow along and to be kept informed as to the change. We have added new sections, of course, which are not found, and we have recommended the exclusion of others. I hope that this ready reference, particularly for the nonlawyers, will be of benefit so we can readily see, as we start out, the changes from the 1908 constitution, section 1, and section a of Committee Proposal 90.

At this time for some explanatory remarks concerning section a, Mr. Chairman, I would like to yield first to Mr. Ostrow, the gentleman from Detroit, and then to Delegate Everett, the gentleman from Battle Creek, for some remarks. We will then be yielding for the answering of questions.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof yields to Mr. Ostrow.

MR. OSTROW: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, Committee Proposal 90 and the committee report are found on page 464 of the journal.

Our committee held hearings for 3 months and discussions for another month, after which the committee members were in general agreement that Michigan's judicial system is basically sound. The committee, therefore, took the approach that the deficiencies of the system should be corrected but the structure should be maintained. A study of systems available in other comparable states confirmed this opinion.

I would like to interject here that we brought people from Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois and New York because we heard that they might be able to contribute something toward an improvement in our system. The more we looked at other systems, the better we liked our own. I think you would be interested in this. This that I hold in my hand, very small type, 5 columns on one side and 3 on the other, is the New York judicial article submitted last November. As closely as I can estimate, this contains from 9,000 to 12,000 words. You can readily understand, therefore, that after looking at systems like that and considering our simple and efficient system in Michigan, why we did what I am about to explain that we did do.

The proposed section makes 3 basic changes. It creates a court of justice. This is primarily an administrative matter but incorporates the concept that we have a single court, with several branches, each devoting its attention to a certain level of judicial administration. This is the modern concept originally propounded by Dean Roscoe Pound and since adopted in most new state constitutions. This language comes from the model judicial article of the American bar association.

The second change is to create an intermediate court of appeals. The committee believed that the present degree of work of the supreme court might well justify this new court. Certainly the mandate of this convention, that an appeal of right in criminal cases be granted, makes the creation of an intermediate court of appeals, in the opinion of the committee, essential. Incidentally, in that connection, almost everybody that testified before our committee agreed to the need for an intermediate court of appeals.

Explanation—Matter within [ ] is stricken, matter in capitals is new.

Finally, this section removes the constitutional status of the justice of the peace system. Here I would like to say for those who are concerned about justices of the peace — and I know that there are many — this section merely removes them from the constitution. There is a section later on, Committee Proposal 96, section 1, which you might say is the death penalty for justices of the peace. So if you are only concerned in preserving justices of the peace but don't care particularly whether they are in the constitution, save your fire for 96 1, and not here.

The purpose is to enable the legislature to create a modern court of limited jurisdiction. The committee gave serious consideration to several proposals for the creation of a county court system. While a number of the members felt in sympathy with these ideas, it was concluded by the committee that the legislature should be given the leeway and the obligation to create courts of limited jurisdiction. It was the thought of the committee that a flexible system could thus be designed to meet the differing needs of large and small counties. I would like to add that this is merely the basic structure of the court system of Michigan. If you are concerned specifically with how supreme court justices are elected, then instead of concerning yourself with amendments to this section, because this has nothing to do with their election or appointment or choosing or their powers or duties, for the supreme court you will be interested in Committee Proposal 91.

If you are interested in the court of appeals, it is Committee Proposal 92; if you are interested in the circuit judges, it is Committee Proposal 93; the probate judges, Committee Proposal 94; a new section dealing with appeals from administrative agencies, Committee Proposal 95; and the catchall, the general provisions, Committee Proposal 96.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Does the chairman of the committee now desire to yield to the gentleman from Calhoun, Mr. Everett?

MR. DANHOF: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett is recognized.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I think Mr. Ostrow has very ably covered what the thinking of the committee in submitted Committee Proposal 90 is. I would prefer rather than to add to his comments to simply assist him in the event there are questions which might develop in the minds of any of you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Powell, did you desire recognition for the purpose of asking a question?

MR. POWELL: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, what I am about to say you might call a little bit of a privileged statement, possibly. I have great esteem for the members of this committee and the work they have done. I am just calling attention to the fact that they have set up their reports in a different form than the others and do not show the deleted material, but they have thoughtfully provided this compilation here which I think most of us that haven't been working on these will want to follow because it shows what the changes are; that is, what is being deleted, and I thought if you hadn't caught on to that, it might be well to mention that at this juncture so that we can follow along in this rather thick bunch of white pages here and see exactly what these proposals are in comparison with what the existing corresponding provisions of the constitution are. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Thank you, Mr. Powell. Judge Leibrand, did you seek recognition?

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman, I believe the practice has been to consider minority reports and amendments prior to the main question.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: That is correct, Judge Leibrand. Mr. Danhof had made his explanation, and I thought that when the explanation was complete, we would then proceed immediately to the minority report.

MR. LEIBRAND: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: And if there is no further question on the majority proposal, the secretary will read the minority report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Pursuant to their minority report, Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister offer the following amendment to Committee Proposal 90:

1. Amend page 1, line 5, after "vested" by striking out "exclusively in one court of justice, which shall be divided into" and inserting "in"; so that the language will then read, "The judicial power of the state is vested in one supreme court, one court of appeals, one trial court of general jurisdiction known as the circuit court," et cetera.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Mr. Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. Mr. Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman and delegates, you have heard the reading of the majority report on this section and also the reading of the minority report. Now, with reference to the words contained in those reports, there may appear to you to be very little difference, just a change of 3 or 4 words, but in general philosophy there was a world of difference, and what this committee of the whole does with this first section may greatly influence what is done with the following sections.

Basically I will say that the majority report on the nature of the court system in Michigan had its birth with an eminent judicial and legal theorist by the name of Roscoe Pound, whom I believe was dean of the law school of Harvard University. The conception and introduction to our committee of his theories begins to be covered on page 9 of the pamphlet that all of you have somewhere in your piles of reading material entitled, The Michigan Constitution and the Judiciary. As with most of those types of theories, his theory was one that the only good court system was one where somebody at the top was cracking the whip and the courts down below were dancing.

The minority report has its genesis and conception in the Constitution of 1908. It has been in there for 54 years and, as Mr. Ostrow has told you, the general overall court system has been considered to be satisfactory in Michigan.

The theory of the judicial system in the constitutional system of 1908 was generally that there were a number of independent courts with a considerable degree of independence, the circuit courts primarily and the probate courts. Of course, the Constitution of 1908 also created a supreme court, but primarily that supreme court was for the purpose of hearing appeals from specific cases. In other words if a litigant was dissatisfied with the kind of treatment he got in a certain court, he could appeal that specific case to the supreme court.

Under the Constitution of 1908 the Michigan supreme court was given the power to make general court rules covering general operations of the courts so that an attorney from one county or from one area could go into a court in another county or area and find himself confronted with the same type of general rules of procedure that he had in his own county or his own district. For 54 years that quasi independence of the circuit courts has been found to be eminently satisfactory.

In our long months of committee hearings we considered 5 levels of courts, 3 old levels and 1 or 2 possible new levels, and as we take the principal 4 courts that have been in existence under the Constitution of 1908, we have at the top the Michigan supreme court; then the courts of circuit court status; then the probate court; and then the justice court. We have had a 4 level system.

I don't believe any member of that 21 man and woman committee will disagree with me when I say that the complaints that we had or the objections that we had or the suggestions that we had as to revision came primarily with respect first, to the system of justice courts, to justices of the peace. The complaints came, secondarily, about the supreme court, its method of selection and tenure and that sort of thing. I don't recall reading a single letter or receiving a single letter or hearing a single criticism of the Michigan circuit court system. People seemed to be satisfied with the kind of justice and the operations of the circuit court and to my recollection the committee has recommended no changes whatever in the operation and method of selection and tenure of the circuit judges.

Now, the theory of those of us who are in the minority, who have joined in the minority report, is that where a system, a circuit court system, has proved so eminently satisfactory over a period of 54 years, this is no time to change by interjecting into the circuit court system a great degree of dictation, control and domination by the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan. What the minority report amendment would do, if adopted, would be to continue the circuit courts and their operation as they have been in the past.

What the majority report would do, if adopted, would be not only to permit but almost direct the supreme court outside of regular appeal cases to intervene in and direct and control the operation of each separate circuit court and circuit judge in the state of Michigan.

We of the minority don't think that this is a good change. I am not going to go on longer trying to persuade you. How you will vote on these respective reports I think will depend upon your individual philosophies which have been building up within you for from 30 to 75 years. If you are a delegate and a person who thinks that all good things come from the top with direction from the top, you will, I believe, vote for the majority report. If you are a true believer in the principle of home rule and independence of your local elected judiciary, you will, I believe, vote for the minority report.

Thank you very much. And I recommend the adoption of the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I should like to state, if I can, that we have gotten into the usual practice that approximately at this time the convention recesses for lunch. We have heard the majority report. We have heard the opening statements on the minority report.

I would move at this time, Mr. Chairman, the committee do rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves the committee do now rise. Those who favor will say aye. Opposed? The motion prevails.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration one proposal of which the secretary will give a detailed report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 90, A proposal pertaining to the judicial branch; has considered one amendment thereto and has come to no final resolution thereon. That completes the report of the committee of the whole.

Mr. President, we have 2 requests: Delegate Bentley requests to be excused from the early part of this afternoon's session; and Delegate Dell requests to be excused from the afternoon session and tomorrow's session.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McLogan.

MR. McLOGAN: Mr. President, point of personal privilege.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The gentleman will state it.

MR. McLOGAN: Ladies and gentlemen of the convention, 75 years ago this date there was born in the village of Corunna, Michigan, one who was destined to become a force for good in his community of Flint, one who was to hold a position of public trust for many years. The delegate to whom I refer is held in esteem by his city, his state and the constitutional convention.

May I express the wish of a very happy birthday to Judge Paul Gadola on completing ¾ of a century of a fine and productive life.

[Mr. Gadola was given a standing ovation.]

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Judge Gadola.

MR. GADOLA: Mr. President, there is little I can say. I am overwhelmed by your kindness and I thank this northwest section over here for this beautiful tribute that they gave me. I have endeavored through my life to further the interests of humanity, and being elected to this convention was my greatest endeavor, and I will continue to do that so long as the Lord gives me power to speak. Thank you. (applause)

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move the convention do now recess until 2:00 p.m.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Those in favor say aye. Opposed, no.

The motion prevails and the convention is recessed until 2:00 o'clock this afternoon.

[Whereupon, at 11:35 o'clock a.m., the convention recessed; and, at 2:00 o'clock p.m., reconvened.]

The convention will come to order.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. President and ladies and gentlemen, I rise to perhaps a personal privilege to remind all of us of a little history. Two hundred thirty years ago this year a man was born. He was born on February 10, 1732. Why February 10? Because the English speaking world hadn't gotten around to changing their calendars to conform to the Gregorian calendar, so he was born before the English people made the change of 12 days, so his birthdate had to be changed to February 22, new style calendar.

His name was George — and I hope I do not bring the wrath of the Democrats down on my head by mentioning that at this gathering (laughter) but since he had 3 syllables to his surname rather than 2, perhaps I will be forgiven. He is probably the greatest sire of all time. He is supposed to be and I think in fact was the father of his country.

I think, Mr. President, at this moment we ought to salute George Washington. (applause)

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the purpose of considering certain items on the calendar of general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Those in favor of the motion say aye. Opposed?

The motion prevails and Delegate Van Dusen will preside.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will be in order. When we last met, we had under consideration Committee Proposal 90, and the question is on an amendment thereto offered by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman, during the noon hour it has come to my attention that a number of delegates have not received the reasons for the minority report which supposedly was distributed. Most of them have but a number have not. It is short. I would like to read it for the benefit of those who do not have that sheet:

> The minority report would strike the word "exclusively" from line 5 and would strike the words "one court of justice which shall be divided into" from line 6 of Committee Proposal 90.

The underlying concept of the majority report is that the judicial system of Michigan should be a single unit, having a number of branches, with the supreme court to assume widening control over all lesser courts. This concept differs from that found in the Constitution of 1908, which regards the circuit and probate courts of Michigan as distinct and independent courts. A right of appeal lay from the circuit court to the supreme court, and the supreme court was empowered by the Constitution of 1908 to provide general rules of practice and procedure for all courts. The control of the lower courts by the supreme court ended at this point.

It is the opinion of the minority that the tenor of section a of Committee Proposal 90, as well as the tenor of subsequent sections of the majority proposal, is to increase supreme court dictation to courts at the circuit and probate court levels. We believe that undue interference with courts at the circuit and probate levels, even by the supreme court, will tend to destroy the independence which these lower courts must have if they are to dispense real justice.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: When last we met, the Chair had noted 3 delegates seeking recognition and will call on them in the order in which they are noted. The first is Delegate Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I would like to speak in opposition to the minority report and at this time to support the majority report with the understanding, proviso and reserving the fact that I do have an amendment in as to the majority report which is not in order at this time, but which I will mention in only one respect, and that is that the latter part of the majority report which would also be in this report is the part that I have the amendment to; in other words to create a court of county wide jurisdiction inferior to the circuit court.

As many of you know, the matter of selection and tenure of judges has been the one field that I have been interested in for a number of years. I will just mention for those who I haven't told this before that 12 years ago I was placed on the state bar committee of judicial selection and tenure. Five years ago I was made chairman of that committee and have remained such to this time. A part of our duty has been to go into this matter of selection and tenure of judges and their activities on the bench. During the course of those years, I have come to the conclusion that in a state with as large a population, as dense a population as we have in the southeastern part of this state, if we are going to get the efficient and proper use of our judicial manpower, of our courts, there has to be some sort of order. You can't have a number of separate planets operating entirely by themselves, determining the amount of time that they will work, the hours that they will keep, the manner in which their courts will be conducted, and still get the best for the public. Delays are one of the things that the courts are criticized for, and when you have courts operating without any general plan by themselves, delay is fostered.

As to the supervision of the courts, the fear that apparently too much power will remain in the supreme court or be in the supreme court that will effectively hamper the functioning of the lower courts, I have only this observation to make: within the last 3 years it came to the attention of the bar committee that there were certain things going on in Wayne county at the justice court level and particularly in connection with one justice of the peace that were not proper. At the request and at the instance of that bar committee, an investigation was conducted. As a result of that, the justice of the peace resigned.

At that time it was the hope of the committee — and the committee did offer its services to the Wayne county circuit court which has supervisory power over the lower courts in the county — to have an investigation made of all the justice courts. We offered the manpower. There was, of course, no charge for that. We offered to turn the results over to the Wayne county circuit court. Rather than have that occur, a special committee of the Wayne county bar was formed to perform that function.

Now, the difficulty has been that there hasn't been enough supervision rather than too much supervision. There is a need to coordinate the activities of the courts throughout the state — not of telling them how to decide their cases. I don't mean that at all. Certain areas of the state have too few judges. Other areas in the state have a workload so that the judges or the judge in the circuit has some spare time. Also as a result of efforts of that bar committee, the court administrator bill finally was passed in the state and we now have a court administrator whose function it is to see that the workload of the courts is distributed in such a way that if one court is not busy and another court is busy, some assistance is given. So we do have in the state the situation where at certain times of the year at least there is an excess of manpower and at the same time in other areas there is an overloading, and it is in that area where the supreme court, of course, can exercise a very good and beneficial function for the people.

It is only if you do have an integrated court system, however, a court system that starts with a supreme court at the top of the pyramid, goes down through an intermediate appellate court, if one is had, to the circuit and probate courts and on down into the lower courts, that you can make full use of that manpower. And as our state grows — I notice that there are some 4 or 5 more judges now asked for Wayne county at the circuit court level — as more judgeships are created, the need for supervision and coordination of those courts throughout the state is going to be more and more apparent.

For that reason, instead of diluting the committee report, instead of taking away the teeth, in other words, so to speak, of the authority given them as suggested in the minority report, I feel that it should not be lessened, that the court should be given every authority in the constitution to set up a truly integrated and efficient court system in the state. For that reason, it seems to me that, contrary to the best interests of the state, the minority report would tend to weaken that system and would result in the type of thing that we have been faced with in the past of no coordination anywhere, no direction as to the operation of the courts.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The delegate from Huron, Mr. McAllister, one of the movers of the amendment.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, the supreme court has always been considered as an appellate court. The first time there was any superintending control or any indication that they would have some control over the lower courts appeared in the Constitution of 1908. From 1908 until approximately 1959 that superintending control on the part of the supreme court was merely in assigning judges and seeing that dockets were taken care of. During all this period, from 1835 on, the circuit court was an independent court. The probate court was an independent court. In fact, the province of the supreme court was to correct errors in these other courts, and if a judge failed to decide a case according to law, then the aggrieved party appealed to the supreme court and, if the supreme court determined that the judge had erred, they sent it back for a retrial or they made a decision in lieu of the one the judge made, or due to the failure of a judge to make an order that he was required to make, they ordered him to make the order as they decided, and in the event he did not follow their direction, he would be cited for contempt of court.

Now, up until 1958 or 1959, when the Huff case came along, the courts were really independent, and you who are not lawyers are probably interested in the Huff case. In the Constitution of 1908 they required a judge would sit in the circuit in which he was elected and such other circuits as he might be directed to go to. Judge Huff was assigned to Detroit, although he had plenty of work in Saginaw, and another judge was assigned to Saginaw to do his work. He protested and refused to comply, and under the legal authorities, both statutory and constitutional, the supreme court had the right to do what they did, and immediately after that, they formulated a set of rules, and one of the things that was set forth in those rules was that any act that was made by the legislature which was contrary to their rule was of no force or effect, so that today we in effect have in the supreme court by their own decision and without any other authority except their own minds, a rule that says, even though the legislature passes a statute to govern the courts, if they don't like that rule, it is set aside automatically.

Now, our circuit courts in all the history of Michigan have done a commendable job, and during our hearing before the judiciary committee, we had no complaints that I recall of any circuit court. The complaints that we had were concerning the justices of the peace and the supreme court.

Now, the supreme court, if they become the supreme court in every respect, will be almost able to tell the circuit judge how to part his hair, and the circuit judges will be merely puppets under this legal system. There is no limit to what the supreme court can do to our lower courts.

The circuit judges are elected by the people, and the people know their circuit judges. In my county, my circuit, in the history of that whole area covering a period of about 160 years, we have had 4 judges. There has never been the slightest taint of scandal. They have been elected and reelected without opposition.

There is a trend by a group here in this convention — and maybe their thinking is right — to centralize everything more and more. In other words, they want a head here in Lansing that just will run the whole state, and that is the premise and the only premise on which this unified circuit court system can be sustained. It seems to me that all the way down the line in everything we do we want more people appointed. We want to take more things away from the people.

Now, as far as the circuit judge is concerned, if he does something wrong criminally, he can be arrested. Under the existing constitution and under the new constitution, if he does something corrupt or is guilty of malfeasance or misfeasance in office, he can be removed by impeachment proceedings.

We have a splendid court system, but if the circuit judges throughout this state are going to be continually under control of the supreme court from Ironwood to Monroe and from Benton Harbor to Sault Ste. Marie, and continually harassed, and rules are made for the whole state of Michigan, we are going to be not a better state but a poorer one. Our judiciary is going to be, if not destroyed on a lower level, considerably weakened because of the constant fear and the constant direction of people who are many miles away and in most instances don't know the problems as well as the circuit judge who is on the scene.

So I say that from every angle in this particular matter, we should retain our independent court system because it will give justice in a better form to all concerned. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Calhoun, Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I can say without any false modesty that Tom McAllister and Karl Leibrand are better lawyers than I am. I can also say without any false pride that they are poor historians. The matters about which they complain did not arise in the Constitution of 1908 but were written into the Constitution of 1850 and have been part of the judicial practices of this state for over 100 years. What they are talking about is not trying to stop us from moving forward. What they are suggesting in not only this amendment but other amendments which they plan to offer to later sections is that we move the clock back beyond 1850. The majority of us in the committee felt that we should move forward.

I don't quarrel with them when they say that we have a good circuit bench in this state. I don't think there are any people who could quarrel with them. No doubt the primary reason is because the people in the locality have selected good men. But certainly one of the contributing reasons is the very rulemaking power and superintending power about which they complain. This our supreme court has had for 100 years. It has exercised this sparingly but well and it has made a distinct contribution to the development of an excellent circuit bench. Without it we would certainly not have as good or as strong a bench.

Lawyers who came to us from outstate told us that they were now trying to get what we have had in the state for 100 years, superintending powers, powers of administration vested in the supreme court. Certainly it would be a tragedy to take it away and to do as Don Lawrence has suggested, make 60 or 80 separate courts wandering off in their own direction.

What we are suggesting is not that you go to the other extreme and vest all power in some top area, but that you permit the logical and natural development of a court administration as it is taking place in this state to extend where it belongs, particularly to the lowest level, the inferior court system. Now, the supreme court has had this power for over 100 years, but has never been able to exercise it for the very simple reason that it doesn't have the time or the manpower to the level where as a matter of fact its administration is probably the most necessary.

In the creation of a new intermediate court of appeals we are going to be offered a choice of a hodge podge of different rules in different parts of this state familiar only to those who happen to live and appear in those areas, or some degree of uniformity directed from a central administration. That is the choice we are being offered between the majority and the minority reports. To me there is no choice. There must be a degree of central administration from the top down. So far as I know, all administration flows that way. It would be almost impossible to administer from the bottom up.

I think it goes without saying that we don't share the fears of these gentlemen. The fact that it goes without saying won't keep me from saying it; it hasn't deterred anybody else from saying the unnecessarily unsaid things here before. (laughter) None of us want a system which would destroy a degree of independence, and there should be a degree of independence and there should be total independence within the proper judicial area — the making of decisions. No court above, except through the appellate process, should have a right to change a decision or influence a decision made below.

But in the administrative side of justice, there should be a continuity, a high degree of uniformity — not exact but a high degree — and this can only come about if you permit the direction of administration from some common seat. In our case, obviously, the only obvious one is the supreme court, unless you would create some super administrator. What we are doing here is not going to a totally unified court system. Some members of the committee would like to. Many of us felt otherwise. The majority of us felt otherwise.

We are not creating totally independent courts nor totally dependent courts, but we are trying to create a degree of interrelationship which should exist in a system which is common to the state, and we feel that not only in this particular section but in some of those which follow to which other minority reports will be offered that we have hit a middle ground which will permit development along the lines which our state has taken for 100 years; allow it to proceed in that direction without forcing it into some common mold which many of us feel would not be advisable.

I know that I am representing the opinion of the majority of the committee when I strongly urge you to defeat the amendment and to support the original proposal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett, do you yield to the gentleman from Bay, Judge Leibrand, for a response?

MR. EVERETT: I will be glad to.

MR. LEIBRAND: I will ask Mr. Everett just one question, if I may. Is Delegate Everett familiar with the rules as to the discipline of judges adopted on June 5, 1959, by a majority of the supreme court?

MR. EVERETT: I am not as familiar as you are, Judge.

MR. LEIBRAND: Are you familiar with the last paragraph of rule 1, which provides, "Any statutory provision that is inconsistent with any provision in these rules shall be considered as superseded by these rules"?

MR. EVERETT: That, I am sure, was the rule of our court and the rule of law in the state of Michigan long before the date which you have cited. Court rules within constitutional framework supersede statutes which might be derogatory of constitutional rights.

MR. LEIBRAND: Isn't it correct then to say that it would be a useless gesture for the legislature to provide any proceedings for the discipline of judges, since the supreme court has preempted that field?

MR. EVERETT: I doubt it. You can correct me if I am wrong, but my understanding of the development of procedure within courts is simply this: the legislature has the authority and exercises the authority to enact practice statutes, but these can be modified by the rulemaking power of the supreme court. If the supreme court does not act to modify them, the legislative enactments stand. However, the final authority, because of the provisions of our constitution since 1850 which gave the rulemaking power to the supreme court, give the supreme court the final word in this area. They do not preempt the field in the sense that the legislature may not act, but the supreme court does have the final say.

MR. LEIBRAND: Other than what might be done in this constitutional convention?

MR. EVERETT: No. That power arises from the provision of the constitution which says that the supreme court shall have rulemaking power. That is where they get their authority.

MR. LEIBRAND: Yes, but then this convention is the only body in the state of Michigan that can control the discipline powers of the Michigan supreme court, this body right here.

MR. EVERETT: I would say that you are probably correct, yes.

MR. LEIBRAND: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Garvin.

MR. GARVIN: Mr. Chairman, delegates, I rise to support the majority report for the following reasons. Reading section a very closely, we will run over it rather rapidly:

> The judicial power of the state is vested exclusively in one court of justice, which shall be divided into one supreme court, that is important

> — divided into one supreme court, one court of appeals, one trial court of general jurisdiction known as the circuit court, one probate court and other courts of limited jurisdiction that the legislature may establish by a 2/3 vote of the members of each house.

I do not have the written reasons for the amendment. However, Judge Leibrand read them, and it seems that the big objection is to a unified court which would give the supreme court too much power over the circuit courts. I submit, as Mr. Everett did, that they have had power for these number of years, and perhaps sometimes it is needed from some superior body, and according to the rules of the court it would be the supreme court.

Now, for the layman, you can compare the proposed amendment, the minority report, with the majority report and you will find that "vested" is left and "exclusively" is stricken. I don't recall hearing much about the word "exclusively." The other line, line 6, "one court of justice, which shall be divided into" is stricken, which still leaves, "The judicial power of the state is vested in one supreme court, one court of appeals, one trial court of general jurisdiction. . . ." I submit that the majority report does not create such a unified court; that in that particular section it sets up the supreme court as a superior body.

We will get to Committee Proposal 91 which sets out the various authorities for the supreme court and also the justices of the supreme court, to which Delegates Leibrand, McAllister and Donnelly have filed amendments. I am just wondering in making these statements if we are not going ahead of ourselves in discussing the various powers of the supreme court, and I wonder whether this particular section would not be vitiated or controlled by Committee Proposal 91. Until I hear something better or some better reason for changing the present committee proposal, I shall vote for the same.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from St. Joseph, Judge Mosier. The Chair might suggest that Mr. Garvin may have been unduly optimistic in suggesting that we were going to get to Committee Proposal 91. We still have 9 speakers listed on the amendment.

Excuse me, Judge Mosier. You may proceed.

MR. MOSIER: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, for something over 52 years it has been my privilege to observe the courts of this state from the lowest to the highest. And as I look over the Constitution of 1908 dealing with the judicial section, I cannot help but be impressed how well that convention did working with the background of the Constitution of 1850 which carried many of the provisions that have been referred to here today. And as I have seen the Constitution of 1908, I am impressed with the few changes that have been made in that document dealing with the judiciary of Michigan.

It has been said here — and I think that I am only repeating a well known fact — that the judiciary of Michigan has served the people of Michigan well. Remember that when that constitution was written, the population of Michigan was something like 2 million, and today it is close to 8 million and yet that document has served us and served us well.

Now, let's just find out what the facts are. That is the first thing that a lawyer or a judge would be concerned with. The amendment that is proposed to the proposal by the minority strikes out the word "exclusively" in line 1 and strikes out the words "one court of justice" in line 2.

Let's take the first amendment. The proposal made by the committee says, "The judicial power of the state is vested exclusively in one court of justice. . . ." The word "exclusively" in my opinion doesn't add a great deal except as it is tied in to the term that is used in the second line which is new, and that term is "one court of justice."

You have heard other speakers here speak of the fact that throughout the length and breadth of this land, in many court structures they have what they call a unified court, and that was one of the thoughts that prompted this committee to see if it was possible to create our judicial system into a unified court. And the plans that have been produced by the committee which will be presented to this convention provide for 5 tiers. The first, of course, is the supreme court; the second is the court of appeals, which would be new to Michigan; the third is the circuit court; the fourth is the probate court; and the fifth are courts of limited jurisdiction. That is what this section seeks to establish. The phrase "one court of justice" is a phrase or term that is applied to courts that are unified, and it was the feeling of the committee, in making this proposal, that our system was already unified. We, as members of the bar of Michigan, were required to recognize the jurisdiction that the circuit courts had over the justice court, that the supreme court had over the circuit courts, and recently the authority that the supreme court has over the probate court in the matter of superintending power.

Now, the arguments made in favor of the amendment bring into focus things that I think are not to be seriously considered because this doesn't change materially the power of the court. Now, let's see what our court has at the present time. Under our present constitution — and this was written in 1908 — it says:

> The supreme court shall have a general superintending control of all inferior courts; and shall have power to issue writs of error, habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, procedendo and other original and remedial writs, and to hear and determine the same. In all other cases it shall have appellate jurisdiction only.

Now, all of those powers we have had and they have been used. But the constitution goes further and says this, "The supreme court shall by general rules establish, modify and amend the practice in such court and in all other courts, and simplify the same."

Now, I can say as a practitioner before the courts of this state for upwards of 52 years that the practice in this state has been simplified. I remember very well — and some of the older members of this convention will remember — that in 1912, I believe, at the extra session of the legislature they passed the workmen's compensation act, and I know it was the howl of the lawyers at that time that the legislature had put the lawyers out of business because up to that time one of their principal jobs was the handling of labor claims where an employee was injured. The lawyers, of course, at that time weren't able to foresee that the remuneration from that type of litigation would be replaced by the coming automobile. But there was a form of bringing our court system and means of jurisprudence into line with modern thought.

This proposal does nothing more than to bring all our courts into one system — and I think we have always had it, but it names it in terms and in fact:

> The judicial power of the state is vested exclusively in one court of justice, which shall be divided into one supreme court, one court of appeals, one trial court of general jurisdiction known as the circuit court, one probate court and —

mind you

> — other courts of limited jurisdiction that the legislature may establish by a 2/3 vote of the members of each house.

It will be seen from that that this does not provide for a group of so called splinter courts. These courts will be united in the same manner that they always have been but the proposal by the committee is going to restrain the legislature from creating courts that are somewhat of a hybrid court. We have the superior court of Grand Rapids. We have the court in Detroit that handles the criminal matters. But under this proposal the legislature is confined to courts of limited jurisdiction. In other words the legislature would have power to establish courts in a county, a combination of courts. It might well combine the probate court with a county court or a court having the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace. It might combine it with what we know as the office of circuit court commissioner.

There is nothing to fear by this proposal, and I rise to support the proposal and oppose the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to ask a few questions for the purpose of making up my mind regarding this amendment and I should like to direct my questions, if I may, to Judge Leibrand, with your permission.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. NORRIS: What we have before us is some projected language, and the question in my mind is what is the effect of this language on the rulemaking power, the superintending power and the power to assign judges where they may be needed in the state? Does the contemplated amendment comprehend any alteration or abridgment of these presently existing powers in the supreme court? I understand as far as the majority is concerned these powers would remain unaltered or unabridged. Is it the intention of your amendment, sir, to abridge them or change them in any respect at all?

MR. LEIBRAND: With respect to the power to assign judges from one circuit to another, there is no intent to create a change. With regard to the general rulemaking power, there is no intent to make a change. The amendment or minority report does have some connection, however, with Committee Proposal 91 which follows.

Regarding the power to discipline a judge for misconduct or make rules under which a judge may be disciplined for misconduct, when you speak of discipline, you are speaking of something. No rule is any good unless it is enforceable in some way. The present constitution, the Constitution of 1908, and the proposed judicial article of this constitution place no limit upon penalties. I believe in the Huff case, which arose in 1959, the supreme court, as I recall it, imposed a fine of $100. Since the constitution places no limit upon this rulemaking power so far as it goes to discipline matters and since the legislature cannot control it, since the supreme court rule preempts the legislative field, presumptively the supreme court under its rulemaking power as applied to disciplinary action could remove or suspend a judge of its own motion. And that, Delegate Norris, is what we are trying here to prevent.

What we are trying to do in the minority amendment to Committee Proposal 90 is just simply preliminary to what we are going to try to do in sections b and c, I believe, of Committee Proposal 91. Do you follow me? Does that answer your question?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Norris, have you further questions or do you yield the floor?

MR. NORRIS: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The lady from Highland Park, one of the movers of the amendment, Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: In getting in line waiting to be heard, I think part of my statements have just been answered by Judge Leibrand. I hope the group will forgive all the lawyers. We have been living together so long on this subject that we jump on it and I don't know if the rest can follow us.

To me, part of the argument directed against our amendment to 90 is controlled by our 91 c and d. It is very difficult to argue every proposal at once and I know we are digressing. Mr. Lawrence definitely went after, I believe, the dockets. I think if you will read our c, you will see that we want the dockets controlled. You will also read in our d that we agree the supreme court shall by general rules establish, modify, amend and simplify the practice and procedure. You will also, if you will read our section a realize that we are only striking out the one court and that we are generally retaining everything else.

We have made very subtle changes. Our basis of approach for the subtle changes, in our opinion, is to preserve the individual dignity of the members of the lower benches such as the circuit bench. As a Republican practicing in Wayne county, I am confronted with members of the opposite party on that bench, and I don't want anybody to think for one moment that this member of that bar does not believe that those circuit judges of the opposite party should not be protected. I have every respect for those people. This is the bench that I know the best. I believe that their dignity as well as the dignity outcounty must be preserved. Their individual judicial power should be retained.

As to the argument that things must be unified throughout the state, the state is not the same throughout. In Wayne county we have different problems. I will certainly stipulate that as to history, Mr. Everett was right but I think if Mr. Everett goes back into history, I think he will believe that the Wayne county bench started the pretrial. The Wayne county bench has done much on their local level to change the system throughout the state and to take their problems as they come and to help build forward. To say that each bench must practice in each individual court exactly the same to my mind ignores the difference in basic fact that our lives are somewhat different. Their dockets are different in the degree of busyness and the nature of the cases that come before them.

But I assure you that the minority does not wish to remove most of the supreme court power. If you will read everything together, you will see we are trying to keep the basic power that we believe should be in the supreme court in the supreme court but attempting to retain in the individual circuit judges their individual rights to conduct their courts.

When the dockets are overloaded, when they are not moving correctly, when they wish aid, Wayne bench has given aid, for instance. This is the busiest bench. This is where the worst trouble comes. This is what most people are trying to cure but there are ways of curing it and the minority does not wish to argue, basically, on most of the things the majority wishes; they just wish to retain individual dignity of each member of the lower courts and not to destroy the so called system that has been set up over the years. I think if you go through it, you will realize that our changes are very subtle. They are to the degree of individual power over the individual members of the bench, not over every part of it. We certainly have a 5 tier system, so, obviously, from our amendment we certainly are in accord with this. We are in accord with most of it. We are only dividing from them in the degree over the individual bench.

And the other issue is the conflict between the supreme court rule and the statutes; that the substantive law of the statute shall prevail. We are saying in effect that the rulemaking power should not become the lawmaking power of the state; that we are trying to preserve to the legislature a certain amount of responsibility and right in this field as well as to other people. We are not trying to break down this court system, in my opinion, in any way. Our changes are minor. They are slight and they are just to the degree of independence of an individual judicial officer.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes that the amendment which is under discussion is one of some breadth and of some degree of interrelation with other proposals but will ask the speakers to try to confine themselves as closely as possible to the amendment currently under discussion. The Chair will recognize the delegate from Bay, Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I certainly don't feel that the committee proposal in any way impinges upon the individual dignity of the circuit bench or any other lower court. I would like to call your attention to the word "exclusively" which Judge Mosier has already drawn your attention to. Actually the amendment seeks to strike simply the words "exclusively" and "one court of justice."

You have heard that the theory of unification in the development of this principle was fathered by Dean Roscoe Pound of the Harvard law school. While all due credit should be given to him for having pioneered this principle, this is not a strange principle or really a wild idea. It has a great deal of support in the legal profession. I would like to call your attention to the comparative analysis by the citizens research council of Michigan, which you have received a copy of, and that part under the judicial article which was prepared by the University of Michigan law school under the supervision of Dean Allen F. Smith. I happen to have had the pleasure and what I consider to be an honor to have graduated from that school.

On the second page and returning to the words "exclusively" and "one court of justice", these words appear in the model state judiciary article of the section on judicial administration of the American bar association. Our proposed section a corresponds with the model state judiciary article, with the exception that we have included the probate court and we have not provided for one trial court of limited jurisdiction known as the magistrate court but I think what is particularly important about these particular words that are sought to be stricken may be involved in the statement which appears and that I read on page 2 in that section, "Such a provision would achieve full unification and avoid many questions concerning the technicalities of jurisdiction of various separate courts." And for the layman, whenever you can avoid questions concerning technicalities of jurisdiction, I want to tell you you are talking about saving some money.

I would also like to call your attention to the article appearing in that treatise by Professor Charles W. Joiner, whom we have the privilege of having on our staff, in an article appearing in the Detroit Law Journal, wherein he states:

> The need is for far reaching statutes and constitutional provisions creating an integrated court structure for the state embracing Pound's 4 general principles: (1) unification; (2) flexibility; (3) conservation of judicial manpower; and (4) responsibility.

Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Barthwell.

MR. BARTHWELL: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I think that I am the person here that is in the most unique position on this committee. I think I am the only person on this committee who could have solved, learned and tried to distinguish between what he thinks he has heard and read on this committee because I had no past experiences to be prejudiced by.

One of the things that I think I learned from the testimony and what I read bears out what has been said here, that I found out that Michigan does have a fairly good court system. From some of the experts that testified before us, I heard them hoping that they could get some of what we had in our court system from an administrative point on a voluntary basis.

So for this reason I kind of wanted to fall back on my way of thinking that in this system, since I favor it, anything you can do on a voluntary basis, I seem to feel very much for it. But after sitting awhile with lawyers, they convinced me that not only did you go by what is written down but by what you have written what it means, so I became fairly well convinced that I believe thoroughly in a unified court system, a court system defined in our constitution that wouldn't be changed.

I listened to witnesses from New York, Illinois and maybe Wisconsin or Minnesota, I don't know which, talk about what a hodge podge of courts they have gotten into by having everybody all over the board create courts.

So I, for one, am very much in favor of this unified court system and I think that it has been very well planned in our constitution whereby it preserves what we have and gives us possibilities not to fall into ruts that some other courts have fallen into that were not controlled as definitely by statute and the constitution as we will be. So for this reason, I am very much in favor of the committee's report.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Ostrow.

MR. OSTROW: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I had hoped to avoid just exactly what is happening here now by the explanation I made in my opening remarks but apparently I didn't do a good job.

Regardless of the merits of the amendment of Miss Donnelly, Mr. McAllister and Judge Leibrand, this is not the time or place for that amendment. There isn't a word in Committee Proposal 90 about the jurisdiction of the supreme court or the powers and duties of the supreme court or the supervision and control by the supreme court.

If in the succeeding paragraphs we were to say the supreme court shall have jurisdiction of cases up to $500 and misdemeanors and appeals from the supreme court should go to the probate court, that would be the law. There isn't a word here that is pertinent to the arguments that have been made here. Those arguments belong on Committee Proposal 91 c, which provides the supreme court shall have general superintending control, so forth and so on.

All that this does is say we are going to have this 5 court structure and there isn't anything here that should give rise to the alarms that were expressed here. For that reason, because you are just going to be duplicating it again when you come to 91c, I am opposed to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Might I rise to move the previous question?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Unfortunately, Judge Leibrand, the previous question is not in order in committee of the whole. The gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Krolikowski.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In view of the preceding comments, Mr. Chairman, I think it is somewhat difficult to sharply confine oneself to the amendment which is on the floor. So with your indulgence I should like to try to face up to some of the questions that were posed by the proponents of the majority report. As I understand the principal argument advanced by the proponents of this report, they feel that it will enhance the supervision of the courts. Of course, I think Miss Donnelly averred to Committee Proposal 91 c, which certainly would answer this need.

The second argument that they advance for their justification of this proposal is unification. Now certainly, the last clause of the present committee proposal will be unaffected by the minority amendment. Therefore, I don't see any merit to their objection on the grounds of unification.

I think that in weighing the comparative merits of the majority and minority reports, particular attention should be paid to the supporting reasons to the majority report. The majority report incorporates by reference the doctrine of unification enunciated by Roscoe Pound. This doctrine of unification, as I understand it, contemplates a vestiture of power at a base and a vertical flow to all the branches which comprise this system of justice. Now, since the power flows vertically, it follows, under Pound's theory, that the authority is contingent upon this flow of power. Cut the flow of power and you interfere with the authority.

In his own analysis of this system, Roscoe Pound proceeds to demonstrate some of its true merit. He points out that because of these principles, the vertical flow of power, judicial manpower can be utilized very effectively and he goes on to detail how effectively it can be used. This would permit the assignment and reassignment of judges not only in the branches themselves but also between the branches; that is, not only intrabranch assignment but interbranch assignment. This means that its application upon the Michigan court system would be this: the apex of this power could take a circuit judge and reassign him to a lower rung. It could take a municipal judge and reassign him to a circuit basis.

Now, it is conceivable under this Roscoe Pound theory for the supreme court to take a group of circuit judges and actually demote them to a lower tier of activity. I think that this theory is very desirable in the context of an appointive system of justice and, if you note, it is taken from the American bar association plan which, of course, endorses a quasi appointive system.

I submit, however, that the Roscoe Pound theory can be very disruptive in an elective system of justice because a group of constituents electing a circuit judge can have that circuit court judge demoted under the full logical application of the Roscoe Pound theory. I think that since the majority report clearly adopts the theory enunciated by Roscoe Pound, it has the seeds of some serious disaster upon the elective system in the state of Michigan.

For that reason I would urge you to support the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Hillsdale, Mr. Prettie.

MR. PRETTIE: Thank you. Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, you have been treated in the last 45 minutes to what we of the judicial committee have heard for the past 3½ months. I support in principle the majority report and I oppose, not in its entirety but in part, the minority report amendment for these reasons: if I may invite your attention to the majority report, it speaks first of the judicial power being vested and so forth. The power, as Mr. Krolikowski has just pointed out, is one thing. Our courts are something else. The flow of that power is important. Part of that power stems — I am speaking particularly of the probate courts — from our statutes. The power does not stem from the constitution itself.

As suggested in the minority report, we really have before us 2 questions: is the judicial power of the state vested exclusively in one court of justice and then flowing down or fragmented between our court system? And the second question, as suggested by the minority report, is that we have a court of justice divided into a supreme court and so forth.

Although the amendment as it appears on the wall appears to be an integral amendment, I think to vote intelligently on this, Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, this question should be divided.

Although I did listen, I think, most attentively certainly in all meetings of our committee to the arguments, the subtleties that Miss Donnelly suggested of the amendment here had rather escaped me until I had an opportunity to hear the debate here this afternoon. I think it would be most unfortunate if we found a constitutional statement that the judicial power is vested exclusively in one court, because it is not.

I think it would be equally unfortunate if we found that our courts could not be divided as they are or if our proposals are adopted, will be divided into several courts and so I support the majority report in principle.

I support the minority report as it proposes the striking of the word "exclusively". I oppose the minority report as to the striking of the remainder of the language and I would ask that the questions be divided when we vote.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Prettie requests that the question be divided when it is submitted for a vote and it will be so divided. The gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Cudlip.

MR. CUDLIP: Mr. Chairman and members, Delegate Cudlip passes and he passes with the hopeful prayer that the members of our profession will not unduly tax the patience of the rest of the committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Thank you, Mr. Cudlip. The Chair will call to the attention of our visitors today the fact that 35 of our lawyer members have thus far exercised notable self restraint. (laughter) The gentleman from Huron, Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I will be very brief. It is my interpretation of this proposal in the form in which it is written that the complete power over all courts will be in the supreme court and that in effect any judge who doesn't conform to the rules which the supreme court makes can be removed, suspended or almost anything can be done to that individual. And the most vital part insofar as it affects a judge is that he will have no right to appeal. The supreme court will be judge, jury and prosecutor. And I don't think where we have adequate laws and adequate provisions in the constitution concerning judges that we should ever give exclusive power to the top bracket of the court with the right to do almost anything they desire to do without the individual involved having a remedy. The first principle of American justice is that a man shall have a right to have a fair trial and a right to an appeal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. In accordance with the request of Mr. Prettie, the question will be divided. The secretary will read the first portion of the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment as divided:

1. Amend page 1, line 5, after "vested" by striking out "exclusively"; so the language will then read, "The judicial power of the state is vested in. . . ."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment as so read. Those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is not adopted.

A DELEGATE: Division.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Division is requested. Is the demand supported? The demand is supported. The secretary will ring the bell. The secretary will read again for the benefit of our latecomers, the portion of the amendment upon which the question will now be put.

SECRETARY CHASE: The first amendment offered by Miss Donnelly and Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister.

[The amendment was again read by the secretary. For text, see above.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment. Those in favor will vote aye. Those opposed will vote nay.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, for what purpose do you rise?

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, may I urge the defeat of the amendment?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: You are not in order but I guess you may. (laughter) For what purpose does the gentleman rise, Mr. Ford?

MR. FORD: A question. Are we now voting on Mr. Prettie's amendment to strike the word "exclusively"?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Only on the question of striking the word "exclusively."

MR. FORD: And those who wish to vote no on the amendment will vote by machine or how?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: We have voted by machine. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine.

Miss Donnelly inquires what the question is. The question is on the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister to strike the word "exclusively" from line 5. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment to strike out the word "exclusively" from line 5, the yeas are 47; the nays are 62.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is not adopted. The question is now upon the second portion of the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. The secretary will read that portion of the amendment. Will the delegates please clear the machine.

SECRETARY CHASE: The second part of the amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 6, by striking out "one court of justice, which shall be divided into"; so that the language will then read, "The judicial power of the state is vested exclusively in one supreme court, one court of appeals, one trial court" and so forth.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: On behalf of the committee and the majority, I would urge the defeat of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment. Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I wish to oppose the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment. Those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no. The amendment is not adopted. The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Lawrence offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 8, after "probate court" by striking out the balance of the section and inserting "and a court of limited countywide jurisdiction."; so that the language will read:

> The judicial power of the state is vested exclusively in one court of justice, which shall be divided into one supreme court, one court of appeals, one trial court of general jurisdiction known as the circuit court, one probate court and a court of limited countywide jurisdiction.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, the Chair recognizes Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, on your desk this morning someone, not I — put photostatic copies of the Michigan State Bar Journal. If the members can find it in the maze of papers and will turn to the next to the last page, which is 59, at the bottom of the page is the report of the judicial selection and tenure committee. It starts there. If you will turn then to the last page, you will find under item 1 the following statement; in other words, that our committee recommended in principle the following items that are shown, item 1 being:

> A new state constitution should provide for a court system consisting of a supreme court, an intermediate court of appeals, a trial court of general jurisdiction, a separate probate court and a court of limited county wide jurisdiction.

It is that last part, of course, that this amendment seeks to effect.

One of the difficulties encountered since the 1908 constitution was adopted has been the fact that it has been within the power of the legislature to create courts. As a result of that power the legislature created the superior court of Kent county, or in Grand Rapids anyway; the recorders court in Detroit; the common pleas court and then passed a municipal court act which has allowed municipal courts to spring up throughout the state.

It was the hope that in creating this unified court system, some order could be achieved and that it could be made impossible for these special courts to be created and for that reason the amendment has been made for the fifth tier, so to speak, of this pyramid, the lower tier to provide for a court of limited county wide jurisdiction. Now, I would like to explain that a little bit more. In a county like Wayne, instead of having one court in the city of Detroit, it would be possible to establish branches of that court throughout the county the same as now the justice courts, municipal courts are in the various areas, but that court would be one court. The details of that, of course, would be worked out by the legislature. That would be the same in each county as far as being one county court and it would then be impossible to create, as time went on, additional courts. I don't know whether you realize it or not but for instance in Wayne county a person who commits a crime in the city of Detroit finds that he is to be tried in recorders court. If the same crime is committed outside of the city limits of Detroit, he is tried in circuit court. The recorders court also has other jurisdiction.

There now is before the legislature a bill to create 4 new circuit judgeships in Wayne county. I haven't been able to follow that in the newspapers or obtain the information but there seems to be a slight disagreement between the sponsors of that bill, in any event, and the board of supervisors of Wayne county, because the board of supervisors are going to have to put up ½ plus $1 of those judges' salaries, so they have appointed a committee to investigate to find out if they do need more judges down there. And I believe the recorders court has got into the act by the suggestion having been made that maybe they might do a little more work and take over some of the duties and maybe those additional circuit judges wouldn't be needed. And the recorders court at the same time is saying they don't want to take over those additional duties and they are objecting very strenuously. At least that is what I gather from the paper.

That sort of thing, of course, is not conducive to a proper respect for the court system. It isn't conducive to good court management. I would like to see the court system simplified and the fifth tier of courts, a countywide court system, provided for. Let the legislature implement it by proper act and there would be uniformity throughout the state.

I will admit that there is going to be a great deal of objection in certain municipalities that are depending on the fines from traffic cases and so on for a portion of their income. Let me say that is a deplorable situation also. Our courts should not be money making devices either for the judges who operate them, as we find under the fee system, or for municipalities or other branches of government. I think the proper allowance, if that is a necessary function, for the proper flow back from the county to the municipalities of fines, money that comes in, could be provided for but that seems to me to be more or less beside the point.

Let's get a court system that is uniform so that if your case comes up in one county, you are not going to be before one kind of a court; in another county before another court. I think that the state of Michigan and the people of Michigan will be benefited by the adoption of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, the Chair recognizes Mr. Danhof, the chairman of the committee.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, a moment ago Mr. Lawrence rose to defend the position of the committee for which I was most grateful and now I find that I must rise to defend the position of the committee against his amendment. What he has stated and the objective which he has is one which perhaps a number of the members of the committee had originally.

Now, insofar as we have the recorders court and the superior court in the city of Grand Rapids, we have provided that in the future this type of court operation cannot arise. These courts — at least the superior court and also it is true of the recorders court — have a jurisdiction that is similar or equal to that of the circuit court and we found that in those states in which there has been a complex of courts of similar or equal jurisdiction, the problems have become tremendous.

Therefore, we have deviated from the 1908 constitution and we would provide that the court of general jurisdiction will be the circuit court and only the circuit court.

Now the recorders court and the superior court of the city of Grand Rapids are created by statute. They are statutory courts that are creatures of the legislature and can be abolished or amalgamated or consolidated by statute. We would hope that perhaps in the distant future this might be done.

The committee began to consider the court of limited jurisdiction. By this we simply mean that there is a constitutional grant of general jurisdiction to the circuit court and that deviation from that grant of power and grant of jurisdiction must be made by statute or otherwise constitutionally as it is later provided.

The circuit court takes cognizance of all matters — and this is true in the 1908 constitution — except that which was constitutionally granted to the justices of the peace and the probate court as it related to children.

But when the committee began to consider this type of lower or limited court structure and we got into the ramifications of establishing a single county court, you just can't find a picture or idea that will fit one mold. The municipal courts are created by the legislature. We studied this problem for something like 3½ months, not exclusively on this one idea as we had other problems to take care of, but the study which will have to be done is something which may take in the neighborhood of 2 or 3 years perhaps, to determine what type of court of limited jurisdiction might be adequate and suitable for the highly urban or the highly industrialized areas, and a totally different type of court of lower jurisdiction, structure, jurisdictional amount, perhaps even where it will be situated, is something in the rural areas which would have to be determined by the legislature. It may be that population classifications will have to be built in.

We found ourselves confronted with the fact that in Wayne county you have municipal courts in tremendous amounts of areas. It may be found by the legislature that the municipal court act should be extended to urban and highly populated townships on a very similar basis. Maybe this is the answer. But this is the court that will change. This is the court that most people will come in contact with over the years. This is the one that will have to vary from locality to locality, which will vary as the population rises in certain areas and falls in others. It can't find a mold in which to fit all counties of this state.

The objective that Mr. Lawrence has is laudable. I realize it was endorsed by the bar association of which I am a member but I can state that we studied the problem. We debated it. We had a subcommittee work on it and they ultimately came to the conclusion that the establishment of these courts of limited jurisdiction should and must be left to the discretion of the legislature and this is what we have adequately and ultimately provided for in this constitution.

I feel, therefore, that we should defeat the amendment. We should retain the wording here which allows the legislature to set up these courts by a 2/3 vote, not a majority. This was done for a reason. It was done for the reason that when the legislature acts, we want it to act more than on a strictly partisan basis. We want it to be the considered opinion of the legislature that this is the right thing for the state of Michigan. We don't think that the establishment of courts by one vote over half is in the best interests and, therefore, we have deliberately left the 2/3 vote, to force — if you wish to say that — the legislature to agree substantially on a court system in its courts of limited jurisdiction.

I therefore feel that to adopt the amendment would not be in the best interests and I therefore very respectfully oppose and urge the defeat of the amendment. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Ostrow.

MR. OSTROW: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, these judicial department stores or supermarkets sound awfully good on paper but when you have problems — I am thinking now in terms of the public, not of the lawyers or the judges or anybody else — you have a problem with a specific court. If you are charged with a crime, you go to that court, not voluntarily, and you don't want to be mixed up with any other court and while you are being tried for a crime have your estate probated and get a divorce or do 5 or 10 other things. Every large city has its own problems.

Now, the theorists will give you, with this county court, for a county of 2,400 or a county of 15,000 a circuit judge, a probate judge and an inferior court judge and yet they complain about having a municipal judge in a city or a village of 15,000, 25,000, 30,000.

We have a problem in Detroit. We have solved our problem. First I want to take care of this money matter. It was raised once before. It is true that our criminal court, our traffic court, takes in about $5 million. We spent $4,600,000 for libraries, the traffic court costs $2 million, the recorders court costs $5 million to operate.

Our recorders court is recognized as one of the finest courts of its kind in the country. It and its predecessors have been there and have done their jobs since 1824. I think it is the only court in the state of Michigan that works on a 6 day week 52 weeks a year. The reason they have refused to take any circuit court cases is that they don't have the facilities and they don't have the time.

Let me give you some statistics on our recorders court. In 1960 they disposed of 5,735 felony cases, 18,443 misdemeanor cases, 4,511 miscellaneous matters, 5,129 preliminary examinations held or waived. In addition to that, they disposed of 101 condemnation cases with awards totaling $25 million.

They were one of the first courts in the country to have a probation department, a psychiatric department. They have probably tried the highest average number of cases per judge and the time lag between the time a man is arrested and tried is probably shorter than any comparable court in the country, much shorter than circuit court. They are doing their job.

There is no sense in putting in one of these systems unless it is going to improve something. How will it improve anything? I am not familiar with the superior court in Grand Rapids. There must have been an equally good reason for creating that.

As our population grows, other cities will have their problems. I don't understand this dog-in-the-manger attitude. We are not bothering anybody. The legislature created us — I am speaking of the recorders court. They can put us out of business tomorrow. We are doing the job. We have enough problems in the constitution. Let the recorders court alone.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask Mr. Lawrence a question.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Lawrence, I have not looked at this before. It says Michigan State Bar Journal. It says that the committee sometimes unanimously and sometimes by a majority has agreed in principle that — and then it gives these recommendations and then it has a distinguished group of names of people who are on the committee. Am I to assume that this recommendation has the endorsement of the members of the committee as named here or was this a matter of controversy or just how do I interpret this?

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Faxon, don't assume anything. I merely pointed out that item 1, the way it was worded, was the way that I was trying to get our provision, particularly the last phrase there beyond the comma. In other words, the amendment on the board does not show the plan in its entirety. Do you see what I mean? Oh, that wasn't unanimous. There isn't anything on there that was unanimous.

MR. FAXON: In this journal does the committee of which you were chairman report back to a larger group of lawyers or do they just report to the membership?

MR. LAWRENCE: I see what you mean. No. The annual report appears in the bar journal, the September issue of each year and then the bar association annual meeting is held the latter part of September so that when the bar association meets, the committee reports are all before it and at that time they are either adopted or rejected or amended or changed. In this case the report of this committee was accepted. It doesn't say anything.

MR. FAXON: Then as far as these names are concerned of the members of the committee, they may have been split on this question?

MR. LAWRENCE: Oh, yes. They admit that this was the majority rule. Their names appearing on this doesn't mean they all approved of it. No. But they do say it is a correct statement of what the committee adopted, a majority.

MR. FAXON: That is all. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I want to say that I was responsible for placing the copies of the bar journal on the desks of all the delegates. I am sorry that Mr. Lawrence so qualified the recommendation of his committee that — you will notice that he is the chairman of the committee that made the recommendation we are talking about — that it isn't going to be possible to hold him responsible for all of their recommendations when we get to another section of this judiciary article.

Let me say that the committee considered this particular problem perhaps as long as any other matter that came before us. Judge Pugsley had a subcommittee that did a very, very exhaustive job in examining all sorts of possible forms that such a countywide court might take and the committee was finally compelled to the conclusion that you couldn't devise a single system of countywide courts of limited jurisdiction that would work all over the state of Michigan and I think the committee finally came — and perhaps somewhat reluctantly — to the conclusion that once you pass the level of the probate court and get down to the small peoples' court, the court that handles the more or less minor matters but the one that handles the matters that most people in this state will become involved in, that there are differences that have to be handled on a local level.

There is no question that the law is the same in all counties of the state but the procedures and the type of machinery necessary to enforce the law at the local level are different.

I rise to support the majority report of the committee and oppose the amendment because I feel that our committee did as well as any committee could with this problem and came to the conclusion that when you put the rigidity in that the amendment would put in, you start to get into trouble.

Now let me point out where it happens. Mr. Lawrence says that really he is not saying too much when he says a court of limited countywide jurisdiction. The real difference between his amendment and what the committee says is the "countywide" phrase, because the minute that you freeze into the constitution countywide jurisdiction, that is where we start to have trouble.

There was a proposal for a county court system and there was such a tremendous howl out of the courts in Wayne county that the committee dropped back and took another look at this problem. The common pleas court, for example, which is now on a docket that is well over 3 million, said, "We don't want countywide jurisdiction. We have all the business we can handle within the city of Detroit." And the recorders court said the same thing when we talked to them down there.

Now, down in Wayne county, using it as an example of one of the places where a system that might work in a smaller county comes a cropper, we have 30 municipalities. We have a lot of home rule cities down there and there is included in the home rule concept the idea of local self government, as a principle, the treatment of a local court system and most of the cities in Wayne county and throughout the state have in their charter a municipal court. It is established by charter, subject to restrictions placed on it by the legislature, and the effect of this amendment would be to create a super court. Admittedly, you might have 50 judges in this court and have them spread all over the county, because there are over 50 judges in Wayne county in courts of limited jurisdiction outside of the city of Detroit now and admittedly we don't want to replace them in toto and say to the people, "You now have a court but we're going to put you out of business." Even if this were done, you still get into a situation where you are trying to handle Grosse Pointe in the same manner as Rockwood on the other end of the county and there is a distinct difference.

You can't even use a population factor to try to work this thing out because taking, for example, the Grosse Pointes and the communities out there, some of them have judges who I don't imagine try on the local level 200 cases a year in the whole bunch of them. But when you get into the downriver area where you have a lot of business and industry and communities that are growing and moving, you find that their courts are very busy.

In the last session of the legislature the legislature tinkered with this countywide jurisdiction and, when they did this, they sought to give to the common pleas court — let me back up and say this: the common pleas court and similiar courts now have countywide jurisdiction after you reach a certain amount of money involved in a civil suit, for example. They have countywide jurisdiction in criminal cases now. The justice courts have countywide jurisdiction and so do the municipal courts. But the real hue and cry comes from the people when you start to lump small civil cases — the 15 and 20 and 30 and 50 dollar items — into a super court some place in the city of Detroit where they have to have an attorney represent them on a very small matter because of the very complexity of having it handled in such a large system.

The legislature sought to give the common pleas court countywide jurisdiction and there was an immediate howl not only from all of the lawyers and various groups outside of the city of Detroit but from the common pleas bench itself.

And when our committee was down in Detroit and we asked them about this, they said that they didn't want this countywide jurisdiction; they hadn't supported it in the first instance and they wanted it removed and there is now pending over in the capitol house bill 81 which will revert back to the former jurisdiction because they know already by trying it for a year that it just doesn't work in Wayne county.

And I hate to keep isolating this to our own county because there are unquestionably places in this state where a county court would work advantageously and would be better than what they now have. But the committee recognizes this and recognizes it should be left to the legislature to provide for a method for those counties which want a county court to have one and for those counties where they feel that a county court will not work not to have one.

But Mr. Lawrence's amendment would by constitution require that any inferior court system that is established throughout the 83 counties would have to be a court of countywide jurisdiction. I recommend that you vote against the amendment and vote for the majority report of the committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the lady from Wayne, Miss McGowan.

MISS McGOWAN: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I rise in support of the committee report and ask you to vote against the Lawrence amendment. And I think there are some excellent reasons on the committee report for it, and they set them out, and I would like to read a part of them to you:

> . . . it was concluded by the committee that the legislature should be given the leeway and the obligation to create courts of limited jurisdiction. It was the thought of the committee that a flexible system could thus be designed to meet the differing needs of large and small counties.

And for that reason I ask you to vote for the committee report and to vote against the Lawrence amendment. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the mover of the amendment, Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: I merely would like to say that apparently everybody agrees with the theory in part but not in toto. I think that you should know — I think you are entitled to know — what happened. If you feel it is the proper thing, vote against the amendment. One of the benefits of at least not caring whether you ever appear in court again and having been in this so long that you just are thoroughly imbued with it, you don't care whether you make friends or not.

When I left here one Friday, it was my understanding that we were to have a court of limited countywide jurisdiction. Over the weekend the roof fell in. The first thing that happened was that I received a long telephone call from a judge of the recorders court protesting against this. I then was advised by the paper that they were sending a delegation up to protest against it. It so happened that I couldn't come the first day. I wasn't here. We have been receiving letters from justices of the peace, from the common pleas court. This has been what has been going on. And when I got back, I found that they had made the provision they had and had eliminated the countywide court.

Now, if you want to yield to pressure, if you want that sort of thing to happen, it is all right with me. If you want to establish a court system that will have meaning, that will be the same throughout the county, here is an opportunity.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Bay, Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I feel constrained to speak on this because I am one that favors a countywide court although at this particular point I am supporting the committee proposal. But a great deal has been said with regard to what is involved. Now, in all due respect to Delegate Lawrence, there is a great deal of truth in what he said. His analysis of the situation fairly fitted the description.

And as a member of the committee, I decided, when we got this immediate howl, not from the people of Taylor township as you might expect, but from the judges, that I would sit back in committee and let the delegates from Wayne county decide this question. I thought, "Why should I tinker with their system if they are happy and satisfied with it?"

And we heard that the recorders court was the finest criminal court in the whole country and of all the citations and awards and that may very well be true because I don't practice in that court. I would like to see a unified court of limited jurisdiction. But it was not long after we had approved the present language of the committee proposal that we began to hear from Delegate Ford and some of the others on the committee of what they wanted us to do in the constitution to correct some of the problems with their recorders court.

For instance, you cannot appeal from a judgment in that court on a conviction for a misdemeanor to the circuit court. You have to go directly to the supreme court because it is a hybrid court. We had many ideas as to how we might solve this problem and work out a limited court of countywide jurisdiction. We never got as far as proposing that the recorders court judges be permitted to retain their incumbency designation and run as circuit judges.

I urge you at this particular juncture to support the committee proposal. I think that within the language of the committee proposal the legislature will have a sufficient degree of flexibility to create a countywide court of limited jurisdiction. I believe there is a lot of merit in it.

Apparently we can't sell this idea in Wayne county at the present time. I don't propose to do that. I will back away from that as far as I can. But when I vote in favor of the committee report and against the Lawrence amendment, I don't want you to feel that it is because I do not have confidence in the proposition that he sets forth. I think it is set forth with a great deal of sincerity and merit and I think we may have an opportunity at some later time in the convention to discuss a countywide court but at this time I urge your support of the committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair would call to the attention of his fellow attorneys the fact that a few moments ago he counted and we were largely talking to ourselves. Only 40 nonlawyer delegates remained on the floor. (laughter) The Chair will recognize Mr. Pollock.

MR. POLLOCK: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I have no hesitation in talking with lawyers, or against lawyers as far as that goes. (laughter) This isn't a matter of law; this is a matter of organization, structure, and I see no reason why one has to be a lawyer to understand such matters. I have a very simple question. I am not making any speech. I merely wanted to have a point clarified if Mr. Lawrence will be good enough to answer this question. Am I correct in thinking that if your amendment is adopted, this would, among other things, eliminate the justice of the peace system?

MR. LAWRENCE: Delegate Pollock, you are 100 per cent correct.

MR. POLLOCK: Then I have another question. I can't find in any of the other judicial committee proposals that this question is squarely faced up to at any other point. Is that correct?

MR. LAWRENCE: I haven't found it. In other words, if this is put through, we still have the legislature with the legislative courts and the legislature enabled to create additional courts one on top of the other, yes. I would say it is not in there. I didn't get what Mr. Higgs was talking about. I found that he was of kindred mind but I didn't follow where it was coming up later.

MR. POLLOCK: Is this the only point in the report of the judicial committee where the question of the justices of the peace system can properly be discussed and acted upon?

MR. LAWRENCE: I am sorry, I cannot answer that. I don't know.

MR. POLLOCK: Can Mr. Danhof answer the question?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, Dr. Pollock, the answer to your question is no. Now, it is true that in this section the justices of the peace have been eliminated, if you want to contrast this section to section 1 of article VII of the Constitution of 1908.

It has further been provided that an exclusion report has been filed relative to sections 15 and 16 of article VII of the Constitution of 1908, which granted the constitutional jurisdiction to the justices of the peace.

In section 1, I think, of Committee Proposal 96, it provides that this is given a 5 year moratorium, if you wish to call it that, to the office of justice of the peace and circuit court commissioner. In other words, taking a combination of the 2, Dr. Pollock, as the committee report now stands, within 5 years it will be incumbent upon the legislature to develop, by a 2/3 vote of the members of each house, a system of courts of limited jurisdiction to serve the people of this state.

I agree with Mr. Lawrence that we got a lot of letters and we read things in the paper. I didn't get any phone calls. I think it would not be fair to say that the majority of the committee buckled under the pressure. But when you consider the problems that are involved in setting up a lower, if you want to call it, court structure for all of the counties and the cities and the townships of this state, it is going to necessarily, perhaps, involve different laws creating different types of courts.

The municipal court system of this state is a creature of the legislature. It has proved very beneficial. The American bar association and other organizations have looked to the municipal court system of this state as one of the finest in the nation and this is a creature of the legislature and this is a court of limited jurisdiction.

And it was the feeling of the majority of the committee that the legislature and the court administrator — and we provide for a court administrator and for a staff — during the time that is allotted in this constitution — because this is going to take a lot of study and a lot of detail and even more than we had time to lend to it — along with the deputy court administrator and the bar association, both state and local, to study this and develop what they feel will best serve the needs of the people in the rural areas, in those areas that are half rural and half urban and then in the so called truly metropolitan areas and that is why we left open and allowed the language "and other courts of limited jurisdiction that the legislature may establish."

We have recommended the deletion — and this, I can say, was concurred in by all members of the committee — in the constitution of references to making and creating a constitutional office of justice of the peace and this is the same reason that we did not feel that we should create a constitutional office of countywide court. It might not work. Therefore, we allowed the flexibility.

These other things we set out distinctly because we don't want any more trial courts — this we can have by circuits and by districts; we don't want any more probate courts. But in this field of limited jurisdiction, because of the myriad of problems that you run into due to the complexity of the society of the state, we best can leave it to the legislature.

It means that in 5 years or 10 years after they develop a system, it will have to be changed and it was for this reason that we did not want to hinder it because we have a good municipal court system.

We have provided that there will be no further recorders court or superior court of Grand Rapids. We hope that as time goes on, the legislature has the authority to make the necessary court reform which it did not have. You find in those states which had real trouble where the court was affected, there was a rigidity in the system and we feel that we have here a good system which sets it up, which will eliminate the problems, which will allow growth for the future. That is why we wrote it as we did, Dr. Pollock.

MR. LAWRENCE: Does that answer the question, Dr. Pollock?

MR. POLLOCK: Yes, I think very adequately.

MR. LAWRENCE: Will you explain the answer to me maybe this evening? (laughter)

MR. POLLOCK: I wanted to bring out the effect of your amendment in the immediate — I assume it would not wait for 5 years — elimination of the justice of the peace system.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: Many of my points have already been made by the prior speakers but I would just like to point out that I would be opposed to the amendment. The basic reason is that I think it goes even further than Mr. Lawrence would want it to go. We have all these special legislative courts here—the superior court of Grand Rapids, recorders court, the common pleas courts and all the municipal courts — that would be abolished overnight and I don't think that Mr. Lawrence would want to create this kind of a situation where overnight recorders court, as such, would be out of business; their total docket would flow over to the Wayne county circuit court, which would create more of a circus down there than we have now. (laughter)

Then at the same time Mr. Lawrence's amendment would strike out the language that gives the legislature the power to create, with the safeguard here by a 2/3 vote, additional courts of limited jurisdiction. I don't think that a countywide court or a court of countywide jurisdiction is the answer to all the problems of all the counties. I think that the amendment is just too rigid. It just won't work all over the state and for that reason I would be opposed to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Does Mr. Mahinske care to yield to Mr. Lawrence for a reply?

MR. MAHINSKE: Yes, I do.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Mahinske, I don't believe the constitution is going to be adopted overnight. There is going to be plenty of time between the time that the constitution is finalized and the time it goes into effect for the system to be set up.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: To which, Mr. Lawrence, the Chair might say, "amen." (laughter)

MR. MAHINSKE: And which I might say at the most 60 days. This is practically overnight when you are talking about abolishing this total concept of municipal courts and so forth. Sixty days is not enough time to get yourself prepared for the crash here.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ingham, Mr. Wanger.

MR. WANGER: Mr. Chairman, I have a point to add to the discussion which I don't believe has been made before. I am not so much concerned by the fact that Mr. Lawrence's amendment would add a court of limited countywide jurisdiction to the constitution as I am by the fact that his amendment would also prohibit any other court.

Here, for example, in Lansing we are in what we call a tricounty area. While we have not yet annexed, I believe, into Clinton county or Eaton county, it is quite probable that in the not too distant future we will do so, so that our corporate limits will extend across county lines.

Under the Lawrence amendment I see that in order to try an ordinance violation in the city of Lansing, if it was committed in the annexed territory, we would have to go perhaps to St. Johns to get the seat of this court of limited countywide jurisdiction to have jurisdiction over the case because, after all, a city court and a county court or any other court is limited by the word "jurisdiction" not only over the amount of money involved but also over the territory within which violations and violators may be pursued.

So unless I am in error in my interpretation of the language, I think that this defect alone would very definitely be cause for voting against the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes Judge Pugsley.

MR. PUGSLEY: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I rise to support the committee report. In doing so I wish it to be strictly understood that this is a compromise. I was chairman of the subcommittee and we gave a great deal of study to the matter of the creation of some system of a county court to take over the function of justices of the peace and circuit court commissioners and we tried to work out a system that would be flexible enough to take care of a situation in the very small counties and which would not disturb or upset those efficient courts which are operating in Wayne county.

I don't care to take up more time. I am not happy with this situation and I may as well say so frankly. I think it would have been possible, had we given it a little more time and a little more thoughtful consideration, to have been able to come before this committee at this time with something to take the place of justices of the peace and circuit court commissioners in a form that could have been made workable throughout the entire state. That has not been done. We are leaving the matter entirely with the legislature. I understand that there is a proposal which may be submitted as a supplement later on at the end of this judicial article which may take care of the situation.

I might talk for some time about the facts that have been revealed to this committee which have not been covered by any of the remarks that have been previously made but I don't think it would add any contribution to helping us to reach a decision at this time.

So I am supporting this proposal which has been submitted to you as a compromise with the reservations which I have made. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Oakland, Mr. King.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I would like to address a couple of questions, if I could, to Mr. Lawrence.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Lawrence, is it your understanding of this particular wording that the recorders court and the common pleas court in the county of Wayne would be eliminated?

MR. LAWRENCE: I wouldn't say eliminated, of course. I would say that they would cease to be recorders courts and common pleas courts, as such. Obviously they or their successors would become a part of the countywide system.

MR. KING: And, of course, the same would be true of the municipal courts in the various cities?

MR. LAWRENCE: Unless, as a part of the limited countywide courts, the municipal courts or some court of similar stature were created in the municipalities, yes.

MR. KING: With regard to Mr. Wanger's question, would it be possible for the jurisdiction to extend across county lines, say into adjoining counties, or does your language prohibit that, do you think?

MR. LAWRENCE: Well, I would think the words "countywide jurisdiction" would limit that. I don't see how the legislature could vary that. I am sorry, I didn't get Delegate Wanger's import but, if there is some municipal court or justice court that has jurisdiction in 2 or 3 different counties, I wasn't aware of it. I thought I understood what the constitution and the statute said about that.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Lawrence, would you be willing to accept any amendments to this language which would provide for continuation of existing municipal courts and provide for the possibility as provided by law of jurisdiction crossing into adjoining counties?

MR. LAWRENCE: I would say this: you should vote against the amendment and have the original go through if you want that. That is the very thing it was hoped that we could do away with, to get rid of municipal, justice, recorders, superior, common pleas and all these different courts. If it is that that you wish to retain, I would say vote against it. In fact, your circuit courts have only jurisdiction basically within the county except in chancery cases. A crime has to be committed in the county in order for the circuit court to have jurisdiction, except in Wayne county, and then if you want to commit a crime and want to get into circuit court, you have to do it outside of the city of Detroit. As I said, I know of no municipal court in the state that has a larger range of jurisdiction than the circuit court.

MR. KING: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Bay, Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman, I no longer seek the floor.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand passes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Stevens.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I merely wish to compliment Delegate Ostrow on his fine exposition of Detroit's recorders court. As a delegate from Detroit, I must oppose this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is upon the amendment offered by Mr. Lawrence which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment offered by Mr. Lawrence:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Lawrence. Those in favor will say aye. Opposed?

The amendment is not adopted. Are there further amendments to the proposal?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Habermehl offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 9, after "establish by a" by striking out "2/3" and inserting "majority"; so the language will there read, ". . . that the legislature may establish by a majority vote of the members of each house."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment the Chair recognizes Mr. Habermehl.

MR. HABERMEHL: I would simply like to call the delegates' attention to the fact that I think we are being more than a little wildly illogical here. We speak in one breath of leaving this matter to the legislature and down at the bottom of the proposed section require a 2/3 vote of the legislature in order to establish any such court of limited jurisdiction.

I find we are illogical largely on the grounds that here in the convention by a simple majority — and on a number of occasions a very slim one — we may put into the constitution for perhaps up to the next 50 years provisions relating to our courts, the changing or amending or revising of which would be extremely difficult. At the same time we would require the legislature to get 2/3 of the members elect, I presume, of each house to try any sort of court system which, if it did not work out, they could repeal at the next session.

I would say that while I am not particularly modest, I don't believe that our judgment, our competence, is that much greater than that of the legislature that what we can do by simple majority and freeze into the constitution, the legislature should not be able to do by the same simple majority, especially since they could repeal it very simply at the next session. I must call your attention to this: even if the need for some additional courts, and particularly these courts of limited jurisdiction, were well demonstrated, were needed by something over 7 million people in the state of Michigan, this 2/3 requirement would permit 12 people to prevent the establishment of any such court, 1/3 plus 1 of the senate. I question again if that is a very good constitutional provision.

We have an additional complication here which unfortunately involves another section but we do know that there will be some sort of moratorium on the present courts of limited jurisdiction. The figure of 5 years have been mentioned. I would ask after the 5 years has expired and in the event of the inability of the legislature to secure a 2/3 vote for the establishment of any courts, is then our circuit court in the counties the lowest or inferior court? There is well the possibility here of an inability on the part of the legislature to secure this sort of a 2/3 majority. If so, the inferior courts or courts of limited jurisdiction would be abolished by constitutional provision. There would be no method to provide any substitute.

Now, it may be said — and I know that this provision has been in the constitution for a long time — that it has worked well in the past. I would simply like to point out that in the last few years there has been a much closer division in the legislature; that what may have worked in the past quite possibly might not work now and if the question has any partisan political overtones — and I have found very few questions here at the convention at least that don't have some partisan political overtones — the possibility of getting a 2/3 majority may be a complete impossibility. I suggest, therefore, that if we are going to let the legislature act in this field in reference to this convention let's at least make it possible for the legislature to act.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment the Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, previously in answers to questions propounded by Dr. Pollock, I alluded to this particular provision. In the booklets by the citizens research council, this is commented upon as being a valid restrictive provision. The members of the committee considered this quite carefully and actually for some of the reasons that Mr. Habermehl has put forth, we felt a 2/3 vote was needed so that it would not be partisan. It is not partisan to administer justice properly. One may have a philosophical viewpoint but the administration or the court structure is not a partisan matter. Everybody is in favor of adequate, efficient justice.

And I might state as Judge Pugsley did — and he worked long and hard on this matter and put in many hours and made a very valuable contribution to the committee, especially in this particular field — that we tried and, as he pointed out, maybe we would have, if we could have gone on longer, found a better solution. And this is the very reason for the fact that we have allowed for the 5 year moratorium.

And I would assume — and I would point out to Mr. Habermehl that the 5 year moratorium applies only to the constitutionally recognized offices of justices of the peace and circuit court commissioners — that it would be possible that the circuit court, being the court granted general jurisdiction and there being no other available tribunal, that they would. And I submit that if that happened, we would probably get the fastest action in the legislature that you could imagine.

But the fact remains that if we are going to have a judicial system — and it is only in the requirement of the establishment of the court that you need the 2/3 vote, not in the jurisdiction, dollar amount or territorialwise in the court's function — the committee was of the opinion that, because the political nature of this state is such that it is in even balance, this is even more of a safeguard and a requirement which we should have.

I would therefore urge again, although, as Judge Pugsley said, it is a compromise, we believe it is a good one, because as you see here now, you cannot foresee the problems that you find when you endeavor to go into this particular aspect of a court structure.

I would urge the defeat of the amendment, the retention of the 2/3 vote as it has been in the constitution since 1908.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Calhoun, Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: If Mr. Ford wishes to speak, I would yield to him.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Wayne, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I would like to support the explanation just given by the chairman of the committee, urge that you vote no on the amendment and reemphasize that it is the feeling of the committee that the legislature should move very slowly in the creation of new courts. As Bob has indicated, this in no way limits the legislature in changing the jurisdiction of existing courts but it is our view that before they take the step of creating an entirely new court as a part of the system, they ought to be absolutely sure of what they are doing over there.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett, do you still desire recognition?

MR. EVERETT: I pass.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Habermehl which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Habermehl's amendment:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Those in favor of the amendment will say aye. Opposed will say no.

The amendment does not prevail. Are there further amendments to the proposal?

SECRETARY CHASE: There are none on file, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If not, the proposal will pass. Committee Proposal 90 is passed and the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Item 2 on the calendar, from the committee on judicial branch, by Mr. Danhof, chairman, Committee Proposal 91, A proposal pertaining to the supreme court. A substitute for sections 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 of article VII.

Following is Committee Proposal 91 as read by the secretary, and the reasons submitted in support thereof:

The committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Sec. a. THE SUPREME COURT SHALL CONSIST OF 9 JUSTICES, TO BE ELECTED BY THE ELECTORS OF THE STATE. THE TERM OF OFFICE SHALL BE 8 YEARS. NOT MORE THAN 3 TERMS OF OFFICE SHALL EXPIRE AT THE SAME TIME.

Sec. b. ONE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT SHALL BE SELECTED BY THE COURT AS ITS CHIEF JUSTICE IN THE MANNER AND FOR THE TERM PROVIDED BY THE RULES OF THE COURT. HE SHALL PERFORM SUCH OTHER DUTIES AS MAY BE REQUIRED BY THE COURT. THE SUPREME COURT SHALL APPOINT AN ADMINISTRATOR OF THE COURTS AND OTHER JUDICIAL ASSISTANTS AS SHALL BE DEEMED NECESSARY TO AID IN THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE COURTS IN THE STATE. THE ADMINISTRATOR SHALL, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE SUPREME COURT, PREPARE AND SUBMIT TO THE LEGISLATURE THE BUDGET FOR THE COURT AND PERFORM ALL OTHER NECESSARY FUNCTIONS RELATING TO THE REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES OF THE COURT. HE SHALL PERFORM THE OTHER DUTIES THAT MAY BE ASSIGNED BY THE COURT.

Mr. Danhof, chairman of the committee on judicial branch, submits the following reasons in support of Committee Proposal 91:

Sec. a. This section supplants section a, article VII of the Constitution of 1908 increasing the total number of justices to 9. It eliminates a former provision concerning the chief justice, "to be chosen by the electors of the state" and, in the last section, provides for the election of the chief justice by the members of the court. This section continues the present statutory 8 year term of office. By reason of the increase in total membership of the court, the last sentence provides for not more than 3 terms of office to expire at the same time — thus replacing the present provision that "Not more than 2 justices shall go out of office at the same time."

Sec. b. This is a new section. The first sentence clearly provides for the selection of the chief justice by the members of the court. This has been the practice of the court for several decades, although section 2 of article VII of the Constitution of 1908 would appear to require that the chief justice "be chosen by the electors of the state."

The committee is of the opinion that the members of the court are better qualified than the electors to make the selection of their own chief justice. This provision will give constitutional sanction to the existing practice.

The second sentence clearly provides a method for establishing the duties of the chief justice.

The third and fourth sentences implement the language appearing in section 4 with reference to the power of "superintending control" over all courts of lesser jurisdiction. This language will give constitutional sanction to the existing office of the court administrator, and will clearly spell out the source of his authority.

Sec. c. This section is a revision of section 4 of article VII of the Constitution of 1908. It substitutes the general term, "prerogative and remedial writs" for the list of historic writs contained in the 1908 constitution. The change accomplished by the final language permits the court to control its appellate jurisdiction by rule. It is the opinion of the committee that the language proposed will shorten and clarify this section.

Sec. d. This section is a revision of section 5 of article VII of the Constitution of 1908. In addition to existing powers of the court, power is conferred to simplify both practice and procedure. The second sentence gives constitutional sanction to the judicature act of 1960, by which distinctions between law and equity have been abolished. The last sentence continues the language of the 1908 constitution without change so that the office of master in chancery is prohibited.

Sec. e. This section is a revision of section 7 of article VII of the Constitution of 1908. The reference to "prerogative writs" replaces the list of historic writs contained in the present constitution. The proposed section continues the requirement of written opinions with a statement of facts and reasons for each decision. The final sentence requires a statement of reasons for all dissents whether in whole or in part. The eliminated language of the 1908 constitution requiring signature of opinions and filing of the same is, in the opinion of the committee, unnecessary. This practice is well established and it appears unnecessary to encumber the constitution with this requirement.

Sec. f. This is a new section, replacing and simplifying section 6. It extends the appointive power of the supreme court and its supervising control to its entire staff, instead of limiting it to the officers named in section 6 of article VII of the Constitution of 1908.

It continues the existing requirement that all receipts of the court shall be credited to the general fund. It also continues the prohibition against appointments by the supreme court to public office, excepting for the appointment of the staff of that court and other appointments of retired members of the judiciary to fill vacancies in the courts of the state by appointment of retired members of the judiciary. The details of such appointment which will continue only until such vacancies are filled by election, are covered in other sections of this committee's proposals.

Other proposals of this committee, which will be separately dealt with, permit the supreme court to authorize persons who have served as judges and who have voluntarily retired, to perform judicial duties for a limited period of time until a vacancy in judicial office is filled by election. The final language of this proposal is for the purpose of permitting the supreme court to make such interim appointments, and in the opinion of the committee, is necessary to correlate these 2 sections.

Sec. g. The committee on judicial branch has had under consideration since November 7, 1961, Delegate Proposal 1218. This was revised and again submitted on December 1, 1961, as Delegate Proposal 1488. The committee has heard the testimony from scores of witnesses bearing upon the method to be used in nomination and election of the justices of the supreme court. It has been faced with a choice between:

1. Some appointive method providing either for appointment of justices of the supreme court by the governor:

(a) With the advice and consent of the senate; or

(b) From a list of qualified appointees submitted in accordance with the so called "Missouri plan", or "ABA plan".

2. The continuance of the present provisions of section 23, as implemented by statute, which results in partisan nomination of justices of the supreme court followed by "nonpartisan" statewide election.

3. A constitutional change or direction to the legislature to provide for a statewide nonpartisan primary followed by a statewide nonpartisan election or, in the alternative, a statewide partisan primary followed by a statewide partisan election.

4. A plan for election of justices of the supreme court from areas within the state so arranged as to be as nearly as possible equal in population and availability of qualified candidates.

On January 16, 1962, the committee first considered the general subject of appointment as a general principle, with a vote of 18 opposing, one in favor and 2 absent.

On the same date, the committee took a tentative vote on the Missouri and ABA plans with the result that 15 opposed this principle; 3 were in favor of it and 3 were absent.

This was followed by a tentative vote on the principle of continuing some elective system. This vote resulted in 10 in favor, 8 opposed and 3 absent.

Following these tentative votes, additional work continued by members of the committee toward further refinement and perfection of the plan for district nonpartisan nomination and election of justices of the supreme court.

Explanation—Matter within [ ] is stricken, matter in capitals is new.

This work was completed and a revised proposal was submitted on January 25, 1962.

This revised plan established 7 judicial districts and provided for the nonpartisan nomination and election of 3 members of a 9 man court from judicial district 1, comprising the county of Wayne and containing 1/3 of the state's population; one justice from Oakland county, containing slightly less than 1/9 of the state's population but having a growth potential; and one justice each from each district as follows:

JUDICIAL DISTRICT 3, COMPRISING THE COUNTIES OF MONROE, LENAWEE, WASHTENAW, LIVINGSTON, SHIAWASSEE AND GENESEE.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT 4, COMPRISING THE COUNTIES OF MACOMB, ST. CLAIR, SANILAC, HURON, LAPEER, TUSCOLA AND SAGINAW.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT 5, COMPRISING THE COUNTIES OF BERRIEN, CASS, VAN BUREN, KALAMAZOO, ST. JOSEPH, BRANCH, CALHOUN, HILLSDALE, JACKSON AND INGHAM.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT 6, COMPRISING THE COUNTIES OF MUSKEGON, KENT, OTTAWA, MONTCALM, IONIA, GRATIOT, CLINTON, ALLEGAN, BARRY AND EATON.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT 7, COMPRISING ALL OTHER COUNTIES OF THE STATE.

The relative population of the districts so established would then be as follows:

Judicial district number	Number of counties	Number of justices	Population per justice
1	1	3	888,766
3	6	1	817,341
7	48	1	890,062

A study was also made of the distribution of lawyers in the state within each judicial district. This indicated that aside from public officers, house counsel and law school professors, the lawyer population including judiciary and inactive members of the bar in the proposed districts would be approximately as follows:

Judicial districts	Lawyer population

This tabulation illustrates the fairly constant proportion of lawyers to population in each of the proposed judicial districts.

Arguments presented before the committee in support of the district election plan included the following:

1. Candidates would be better known to voters of districts in which they were candidates.

2. The compact and contiguous areas comprising the districts (except possibly district 7) would make it possible for candidates to meet and know the voters which they cannot do when elected on a statewide basis.

3. The division of the state is on a population basis as nearly as possible equal.

4. Balance would be maintained in the type of men sitting on the court between all parts of the state, thus assuring a statewide approach to cases before the court. While such balance is now maintained in part by the present nominating process in which recognition is given to residence of the candidate, among other factors, there is no assurance or legal requirement that this will always obtain.

5. It is consistent with the overwhelming sentiment for a nonpartisan judiciary.

6. It would eliminate the present inconsistency of partisan nomination followed by "nonpartisan" election.

7. It would remove the inordinate expense to be borne by each candidate of having to campaign statewide for nomination (absent nomination at party convention) followed by a second statewide campaign at the individual expense of the candidate presumably without any party backing.

8. Elimination of items mentioned in paragraphs 6 and 7 could be expected to attract as candidates men of the highest ability, regardless of party affiliation or financial status.

9. The assured geographic distribution of justices would make it possible for every lawyer in the state to strive for such excellence that his fellow lawyers and the public might think him worthy to serve on this high court even though he should not become famous as a great trial lawyer.

10. This plan could be equally applicable to the election of judges of the court of appeals and with the same advantages.

11. The districts could be integrated into a court of appeals structure, with

One court of appeals serving district 1;
One court of appeals serving districts 2, 3, 4;
One court of appeals serving districts 5, 6, 7;
and possibly sitting in divisions at:
(a) Grand Rapids;
(b) Some place in the northern portion of the lower peninsula;
(c) Some place in the upper peninsula.

12. The districts are drawn in correspondence to presently existing circuit court boundaries. Thus all cases from any given circuit would be appealed to the same court of appeals.

13. While this plan would be new in Michigan, it is not unique. Some states already have it, notably Illinois, and they thought so highly of it that they retained it in their very recent overhaul of their court system.

14. Such a structure would provide an appellate court located at no great distance from any place in the state and should result in a reduction in both time and expense for those using these courts. Thus the best interest of the public would be served.

The majority of the committee rejected the argument that the district plan would lead to "balkanization of the state and to parochialization of the state's judicial process". It was pointed out by members of the committee who had served as circuit judges in many parts of the state that justice was administered with an even hand regardless of where an individual judge might reside or the location of the court in which he might preside.

It was further pointed out that over the years the justices of the supreme court have been called to that bench from many parts of the state but that once elected they performed their duties with a view to the law in the state as a whole. There was no evidence that the district plan would in any wise change the statewide view of those elected to the supreme court.

Certain members of the committee continued to advocate some appointive system modeled on the Missouri or ABA plan. Others favored continuance of the present partisan nomination followed by nonpartisan election. Still others suggested a return to complete statewide partisan nomination and election. This division in the committee continued until January 31, 1962, at which time the committee voted in favor of the plan as submitted and revised, with 11 votes in favor, 5 opposed and 5 absent or abstaining.

The committee proposal, therefore, contemplates nonpartisan primary and election on a district basis as therein set forth.

Explanation—Matter within [ ] is stricken, matter in capitals is new.

It further provides flexibility in permitting transfer of counties from one judicial district to another following each decennial census, so that no single judicial district would have a population of less than ¼ or more than ½ of the population of judicial district 1, (Wayne county). Such transfer, however, shall not result in removal of a justice, nor shall it disqualify him for reelection.

The proposal makes existing election laws applicable to all primaries and elections for justices of the supreme court. It continues in office incumbent justices without regard to place of residence and permits their reelection. It empowers the legislature to provide for transition from present methods of election to the method provided in the proposal.

Following is minority report A to Committee Proposal 91 as offered (no reasons were submitted in support thereof):

Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister, a minority of the committee on judicial branch, submit the following minority report to Committee Proposal 91:

A minority of the committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Sec. b. ONE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT SHALL BE SELECTED BY THE COURT AS ITS CHIEF JUSTICE IN THE MANNER AND FOR THE TERM PROVIDED BY THE RULES OF THE COURT.

Sec. c. THE SUPREME COURT SHALL HAVE: A GENERAL SUPERINTENDING CONTROL OVER THE DOCKETS OF THE APPELLATE COURT AND CIRCUIT COURTS; POWER TO ISSUE, HEAR, AND DETERMINE PREROGATIVE AND REMEDIAL WRITS; APPELLATE JURISDICTION AS PROVIDED BY SUPREME COURT RULE, IT BEING PROVIDED THAT THE SUPREME COURT SHALL NOT HAVE THE POWER TO REMOVE OR SUSPEND A JUDGE.

Sec. d. THE SUPREME COURT SHALL BY GENERAL RULES ESTABLISH, MODIFY, AMEND AND SIMPLIFY THE PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE IN ALL COURTS IN THE STATE, IT BEING PROVIDED THAT WHERE THERE IS A CONFLICT BETWEEN SUPREME COURT RULE AND A STATUTE CONCERNING EVIDENCE OR SUBSTANTIVE LAW THE STATUTE SHALL PREVAIL. THE DISTINCTIONS BETWEEN LAW AND EQUITY PROCEEDING SHALL, AS FAR AS PRACTICABLE, BE ABOLISHED. THE OFFICE OF MASTER IN CHANCERY IS PROHIBITED.

Sec. e. DECISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT, INCLUDING ALL DECISIONS ON PREROGATIVE WRITS, SHALL BE IN WRITING AND SHALL CONTAIN A CONCISE STATEMENT OF THE FACTS AND REASONS FOR EACH DECISION AND DENIAL OF LEAVE FOR APPEAL. WHEN A JUDGE DISSENTS IN WHOLE OR IN PART HE SHALL GIVE IN WRITING THE REASONS FOR HIS DISSENT.

Following is minority report B to Committee Proposal 91 as offered and the reasons submitted in support thereof:

Messrs. Ford, Garvin, Bledsoe, Miss McGowan, Messrs. Ostrow, Barthwell and Krolikowski, a minority of the Committee on judicial branch, submit the following minority report to Committee Proposal 91:

A minority of the committee recommends that the following be excluded from the constitution:

Messrs. Ford, Garvin, Bledsoe, Miss McGowan, Messrs. Ostrow, Barthwell and Krolikowski, a minority of the committee on judicial branch, submit the following reasons in support of the foregoing minority report, which accompanied Committee Proposal 91:

The purpose of the minority report is to eliminate all of section g, which contains the plan for "balkanizing" the supreme court by establishing districts for the election of judges to replace the present system of election on an at large basis. It is the belief of the proponents of this minority report that the present system wherein the election of supreme court justices is on a statewide nonpartisan basis, has worked very well in our state.

The legislature has provided a system of nomination and election under the 1908 constitution which has worked very well in the state of Michigan. By removing the language contained in section g, the legislature would have the power to revise the present procedure to meet changing needs of the state and devise the best possible system: Provided however, That election of supreme court judges would be on a statewide, nonpartisan basis.

The state bar committee on court administration, consisting of 42 members headed by Judge Noel P. Fox, recommended in 1961 in its report to the state bar that "the present system of nominating and electing supreme court justices be retained, the same provisions to apply to judges of an intermediate court of appeals, if the latter court be established by the constitution".

The district plan for election of supreme court justices would result in disenfranchising a majority of the electors in the state from voting for all of the judges exercising statewide power and jurisdiction. It is difficult to conceive of any principle which would limit a supreme court justice's opinions and point of view to a particular district of the state rather than to the state as a whole. The district plan would strongly tend to inject sectionalism into the opinions and decisions of the court.

In conclusion, the proponents of this minority report believe, after listening to testimony by representatives of the bench and bar throughout the state and at all levels, as well as representatives from the bar associations of other states, that our present system for selection of supreme court justices is far superior to any alternative plan presented before our committee.

Explanation—Matter within [ ] is stricken, matter in capitals is new.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair would inquire of the chairman of the committee: is it your desire that we take this proposal up section by section?

MR. DANHOF: It is, sir.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof, with respect to section a of Committee Proposal 91.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, section a sets up a supreme court of 9 justices, one more than we have now. It provides that they shall be elected by the electors of the state, the term to be 8 years and not more than 3 terms shall expire at the same time.

I should like to point out that section a is tied inexorably to section g of Committee Proposal 91, section g being the majority report of the committee concerning the selection of the supreme court.

The majority report is that the justices shall be elected from various districts as are set forth in section g. I would point out to the committee that it will be necessarily determined that if section g is adopted by the majority of this committee, then section a should go with it in order that there be a logical number to fit the various districts that have been proposed by the majority of the committee.

I would, therefore, recommend and move that at this time the provision and the matter relating to section a be passed until we get to section g and have determined the method and the selection and that we then return, after consideration of section g, to the provisions of section a and I so move.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the motion of Mr. Danhof that further consideration of section a be postponed until following consideration of section g of the proposal. Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, I would like to support the chairman of the committee in this motion.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the motion of Mr. Danhof. Those in favor will say aye. Opposed?

The motion prevails. The secretary will read section b.

SECRETARY CHASE: Section b:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will advise the proponents of the minority report that following the regular practice, we will hear first from the chairman of the committee with respect to the section, following which we will go to consideration of the minority report. The Chair recognizes Mr. Danhof, chairman of the committee.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, you will note that in essence there are 2 matters that are put forth in this particular provision. The first 2 sentences relate to the selection of the supreme court of its chief justice and the second sentence states that the duties that he shall perform shall be as required by the court. The remaining portion of this section is that we will create a constitutionally known office of court administrator who shall be appointed by the supreme court and take care of the matters that have been set forth.

I think that it would be in order, Mr. Chairman, to consider the first 2 sentences first, inasmuch as they relate to the chief justice, his selection and his duties, and that the section be divided so that the remaining sentences beginning "The supreme court shall appoint an administrator . . ." be taken separately. Would this be agreeable?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof suggests that the first 2 sentences of section b be considered separately, and without objection, they will be so considered.

MISS DONNELLY: I object.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: There is objection. Mr. Danhof, unless you choose to make a motion, we will proceed to consider the entire section.

MR. DANHOF: I understand from Miss Donnelly the minority report starts on the second sentence. Would it be agreeable to take it sentence by sentence?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The suggestion of Mr. Danhof is then that the first sentence be considered separately and without objection the first sentence will be so considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I would at this time call upon the delegate from Grand Rapids, Mr. Tubbs, to speak upon this provision.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof yields to the delegate from Grand Rapids, Mr. Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. Chairman, the first part of this section, as Mr. Danhof has indicated, is new language but it makes only a slight change in the present constitution. Section 2 of the present article VII says "The supreme court shall consist of one chief justice and associate justices . . ." to be elected and so forth. This indicates that the chief justice of the supreme court is to be elected separately. That has not been done. The chief justice has by court rule been appointed by the other members of the supreme court and the new language which you find in the first part of this section b simply implements the practice that has been prevalent in the court for a long time.

Now, the second part and perhaps the remainder of this section b is new. The present constitution gives the supreme court general — and I will read it — "superintending control" — are we dealing just with the first sentence?

MR. DANHOF: Yes, Mr. Tubbs. I think at this time you just limit your remarks to the first sentence relative to the selection of the chief justice.

MR. TUBBS: All right. I think I have adequately explained it. That is all I have, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Is there any further discussion of the first sentence? If not, we will proceed to consideration of the remainder of the section. I will advise that because the minority report deals with the entire section, we will not pass the first sentence at this time but will simply proceed to consideration of the balance of the section. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, thank you. There being no amendments to the first sentence, I will yield then further to Mr. Tubbs for an explanation of the committee report relative to the remaining portion of the section b.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize Mr. Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: I have difficulty determining where the period is in this sentence, Mr. Chairman, but I guess I can make it out. "He shall perform such other duties as may be required by the court." That is referring, of course, to the chief justice of the court. "The supreme court shall appoint an administrator. . . ." This is new language. The supreme court has had an administrator of circuit courts for several years. He is now performing functions which are assisting the supreme court in their general supervisory control of all the other courts of the state. He is limited, however, by the terms of his appointment, to supervision of circuit courts.

They also have an assistant to the administrator who is supposed to be supervising the probate courts of the state. However, they have had some difficulty in getting an appropriation for his salary. I understand that because part of the jurisdiction of probate court is in the juvenile division and that is part of the welfare department of the state, he is being paid by the welfare department rather than by direct appropriation.

The remainder of this section is to implement the power of the court to have general superintending control over the other courts of the state. It is new language. It is not intended to enlarge the powers of the court beyond those given in the 1908 constitution.

1. Amend page 1, line 12, after "court.", by striking out the balance of the section.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, having gone into this new proposal knowing it will take quite some time, we have heard the majority report. We can commence tomorrow with the discussion of this and the minority report. I would at this time move that the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves that the committee do now rise. Those in favor will say aye. Opposed?

The motion prevails.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, Vice President Romney resumed the Chair.]

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration several matters of which the secretary will give a detailed report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 90, A proposal pertaining to the judicial branch; reports this proposal back to the convention without amendment and with the recommendation that it do pass. Mr. Prettie offers an amendment pending the reference of the proposal to the committee on style and drafting.

Mr. Prettie offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 5, after "vested" by striking out "exclusively".

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Prettie.

MR. PRETTIE: I do not wish to labor the point. It is the same point to which I addressed myself in committee of the whole. The proposal that we have before us provides, as I pointed out earlier, that the judicial power is vested exclusively in one court of justice. I do not think this is a correct constitutional statement. Our other courts have power, some of them statutorily conferred. The subsequent language "which shall be divided" refers grammatically, I believe, to the court of justice being divided, not to the power being divided, and I seriously urge, for the reasons stated in the committee of the whole, that the word "exclusively" be omitted from this committee proposal.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The question is on the amendment. Delegate Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. President, members of the convention, for the reasons stated, I would urge the defeat of the amendment.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. President, I would like to urge the defeat of the amendment. I will say, however, if Mr. Prettie has a point — and it appears to me that there may be a grammatical question — Mr. Cudlip's committee might go into that and take care of it for us.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. President, Mr. Ford has made the point I think I would like to have made and I want to remind the delegates, because there are some here now that weren't here before, that this is the language recommended by the American bar association and it is stated in the article written under the direction of the University of Michigan that this provision would avoid many questions concerning technicalities of jurisdiction of various separate courts.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. President, fellow delegates, I just want to say again that — and on the last vote we did not prevail — that this is a very, very dangerous word, and it gives absolute control over all other courts to the supreme court. I don't think the other courts should be treated in any different respect than the supreme court. And where they have absolute control and, you might say, there is no appeal from their decision, you have something here that we should think seriously about. It probably won't make any difference to me but the thing is it does make a great deal of difference to all the people of this state and particularly our judges, because the court rules formulated by the court are severe. They can remove a judge for almost anything, personal practices, anything that they feel like doing, violations of the canons of ethics, anything along that line, and it could be a very trivial matter that might cause a man to be eliminated as a judge. We have politics. We will always have politics. And there is nobody to review what they have done. So I recommend to you that you vote yes on this amendment to remove the word "exclusively." Then all doubt will be gone.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The question is on the amendment. Those in favor say aye. Opposed, no. The Chair is in doubt and understands that it is then automatically submitted as a division. Those in favor will vote aye and those opposed, no.

Delegate Stevens.

MR. STEVENS: Is this a recorded roll call vote or not?

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: It is not a recorded roll call vote. It is for the information of the Chair. Has everyone voted?

Delegate Boothby.

MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. President, I would like to ask that this be a record roll call vote.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The request has been made that this be a record roll call vote. Those in favor will please indicate. A sufficient number. It will be a record roll call vote. The secretary will lock the machine and record the vote.

Yeas — 46

Anspach	Knirk, B.	Rood
Bledsoe	Krolikowski	Rush
Bonisteel	Kuhn	Shackleton
Boothby	Leibrand	Shaffer

SECRETARY CHASE: On the amendment offered by Mr. Prettie, the yeas are 46; the nays are 70.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The amendment is defeated. Committee Proposal 90 is referred to the committee on style and drafting.

For Committee Proposal 90 as referred to the committee on style and drafting, see above, page 1240.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has also had under consideration Committee Proposal 91, A proposal pertaining to the supreme court; has considered an amendment thereto, and has come to no final resolution thereon. That completes the report of the committee of the whole.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Koeze.

MRS. KOEZE: Mr. President, I rise to a point of personal privilege. However, I am in doubt about my personal privilege, but I have a general idea that I think the convention would like. I propose that we lock up all the lawyers tonight in this convention hall until they can decide what they want here, (laughter) and if they cannot decide, I would like to see them locked out of this until the lay people can decide. (laughter and applause)

SECRETARY CHASE: The following notice of a committee meeting: the committee on style and drafting will meet in room K this evening at 8:00 o'clock. William B. Cudlip, chairman.

We have the following requests for leave of absence: Mr. Haskill requests leave from tomorrow's session to attend an important meeting in Detroit; Mr. T. S. Brown requests leave from tomorrow's session; Mr. Suzore, from the session of Monday; Delegate Dade, from the session of Monday; Mr. Marshall, from the session of tomorrow due to personal business and a speaking engagement of long standing; and Mr. Perras wishes to be excused from the sessions of Friday, Monday and Tuesday because of the death of his mother.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Without objection, the requests will be honored.

Delegate Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. President, first I would like to yield to Delegate Binkowski.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Binkowski.

MR. BINKOWSKI: Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen of the convention, I would like to have permission to have reprinted in the journal Mr. Bud Vestal's column entitled, Mr. Dooley Would Have Had a Grand Time Commenting on the Con Con. Mr. Dooley, of course, was a fictional character and it is a satire. He was a satirist of the nineteenth century and I think they made a very definite contribution to the history of American politics. It is not very long. If you haven't read it already, I think that you would truly enjoy reading it.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Without objection, it is so ordered.

MR. FAXON: I object.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Objections are heard.

Delegate Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. President, I move the convention adjourn.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Those in favor of the motion say aye. Opposed?

We are adjourned until tomorrow morning at 9:30.

[Whereupon, at 4:45 o'clock p.m., the convention adjourned until 9:30 o'clock a.m., Friday, February 23, 1962.]

EIGHTY-SIXTH DAY

Friday, February 23, 1962, 9:30 o'clock a.m.

PROCEEDINGS

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will come to order.

The invocation today will be delivered by the delegate from Wayne county, Miss Hart.

MISS HART: Lord, teach us to be generous, to serve You as You deserve, to give and not to count the cost, to fight and not to heed the wounds, to toil and not to seek for rest, to labor and not to seek reward, save that of knowing that we do Your will. We ask Your blessing, O Lord, on our service to Your people. Amen.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The roll call will be taken by the secretary. All those present will vote aye. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and record the roll.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

Prior to today's session, the secretary received the following requests for leave:

Mr. Downs wishes to be excused from today's session and Mr. Madar called to say that Mr. Buback was taken suddenly ill at breakfast and wished to be excused from today's session.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, the requests are granted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Absent with leave: Messrs. T. S. Brown, Buback, Mrs. Butler, Messrs. Dell, Downs, Haskill, Karn, Marshall, Nisbet, Norris, Pellow and Perras.

Absent without leave: Messrs. Allen, Douglas and Gover.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, the delegates are excused.

[During the proceedings the following delegates entered the chamber and took their seats: Messrs. Allen and Norris.]

Reports of standing committees.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Reports of select committees.

SECRETARY CHASE: There are none.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Communications from state officers.

SECRETARY CHASE: No communications.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Second reading of proposals.

SECRETARY CHASE: Nothing on that calendar for today.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Motions and resolutions. The gentleman from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I would like to move at this time that the order of second reading be passed for all of next week

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the motion made by the gentleman from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen, that the order of second reading be passed for all of next week. All those in favor will say aye; opposed, no.

The motion prevails and it is so ordered.

SECRETARY CHASE: There are no resolutions on file, Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Unfinished business.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Special orders of the day.

SECRETARY CHASE: No special orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: General orders of the day. The gentleman from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the purpose of considering matters on the calendar of general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is upon the motion of Mr. Van Dusen. All those in favor will say aye. Opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will convene and Mr. Van Dusen will preside.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair is tempted to suggest that the circuit court for the county of Ingham will be in session but instead will suggest that the committee will be in order and that the secretary will advise us of where we are on our calendar.

SECRETARY CHASE: Item 2 on the calendar, from the committee on judicial branch, by Mr. Danhof, chairman, Committee Proposal 91, A proposal pertaining to the supreme court.

For last previous action by the committee of the whole on Committee Proposal 91, see above, page 1256.

Section a has been postponed until we have completed consideration of section b. The first sentence of section b has been read and considered, the second sentence has been read and a minority report amendment has been offered.

Miss Donnelly and Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister have offered the following minority report amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 12, after "court.", by striking out the balance of the section.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment proposed by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. On the amendment, the Chair will recognize the delegate from Highland Park, Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: Since most of you apparently do not have our reasons, if you will bear with me, I will read to you—though I personally hate to be read to myself.

The minority concur with the majority of the committee in the first sentence but recommend deletion of the balance thereof for the following reasons:

1. To set forth in the constitution that the chief justice shall perform such other duties as may be required by the court is unnecessary. These duties, if proper, would clearly lie within the power of that court in handling its internal affairs and does not require any constitutional authority. It hardly behooves this convention to imply that the supreme court in the conduct of its internal affairs would require the chief justice to perform improperly.

Therefore, we feel that this sentence is entirely unnecessary and should be deleted.

To go further, do you want to go sentence by sentence—on my next thoughts particularly or do you want to discuss this sentence?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will advise Miss Donnelly that the question is on the entire amendment. You may proceed in that order.

MISS DONNELLY: The next sentence in there provides:

To provide in the constitution the requirement that the supreme court appoint an administrator and other assistants as shall be deemed necessary to aid in the administration of the courts of the state is believed improper and unwise. This sentence is clearly legislative in nature as was the creation of the court administrator in the first instance. The minority believe that the majority proposal under section f of Committee Proposal 91 has sufficiently delineated the internal function of this court and its supervisory powers within that court.

Therefore, to go further and spell in the constitution what is statutory is superfluous and certainly does nothing but make a longer document and adds nothing, in our opinion, to the administration of justice, although we approve of the court administrator's function and his existence. We just object to requiring it in the constitution.

The last sentence is the requirement that the administrator perform these duties; and offering the budget to the legislature we also feel is improper.

To freeze in the constitution the requirement that the administrator shall prepare and submit to the legislature the budget for the supreme court is believed to be an improper dictation to that court. The method of submission of the budget of that court should be left to the supreme court's own discretion. The minority believe that our highest court can best make its own decision in this area, as well as in all other itemized activities in section b.

To summarize our opinion, in this instance we are consistent in believing that the supreme court should handle its internal affairs and under section f we've given them enough protection which they've asked and require, in our opinion. To go further and tell this court to do what it should do in its internal affairs, we believe is improper as to require the supreme court to go further and tell the circuit courts what they should do in handling their internal affairs. Therefore, we believe that the first section is proper. Section f handles it sufficiently. The rest should be removed.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, the Chair will recognize the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, at this time I would like to yield to Delegate Garvin.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof yields to Mr. Garvin.

MR. GARVIN: Mr. Chairman and delegates, there might be some question about some of these, but I want to explain exactly what is meant as well as possible. Mr. Tubbs, if you recall, went over this yesterday to some extent about a court administrator. As I understand the amendment, in line 1 there is no objection to that. Line 2, as I understand the reading of the reasons, "He shall perform such other duties as may be required by the court." Speaking of "he", the chief justice of the supreme court, somebody must have some authority in performing duties that are required by the court and necessary for the court work to proceed. That is the reason for that sentence.

Beginning on line 13 seems to be the part where there is the most objection:

The supreme court shall appoint an administrator of the courts and other judicial assistants as shall be deemed necessary to aid in the administration of the courts in the state. The administrator shall, under the direction of the supreme court, prepare and submit to the legislature the budget for the court. . . .

I'd like to submit to you that the court itself—first, line 16—it seems that there has been an opinion on the minority report that the administrator is the one that does this work, that of preparing the budget. But if you will notice on line 16 it says "under the direction of the supreme court. . . ." It is not the administrator who decides exactly what is necessary, but he is the one that does the ministerial act of submitting the budget and presenting the budget for approval of the legislature. We can hardly expect the chief justice to go over to the legislature every time it's necessary to argue a budget or say whether there should be another clerk or not another clerk. It just isn't reasonable. You can't do that and decide supreme court cases also. That is the reason for the administrator.

Again, Delegate Tubbs explained to you yesterday—to keep from going over this matter too much—that an administrator of the court became necessary just to carry out the duties or similar thereto as presented to you in this proposed change in the constitution—this new section to the constitution. The reason it is believed that it is necessary in the constitution is that it is for the protection of the court to see that those duties are carried on and not taking away the time of the court. All through these sections it states that they are under the direction of the supreme court.

It might be interesting to know the contents of the new judicature act which has already been enacted by the legislature and which becomes effective on January 1, 1963. It is that this administrator will have superintending control over the other courts of the state of Michigan. The qualifications that it sets up are that he must be an attorney, take oath required by the constitution, perform as provided by law or as provided by the supreme court in carrying out his duties to execute the duties of the supreme court, the individuals themselves, or the chief justice; and he may, with the approval of the supreme court, appoint a deputy or clerical personnel as necessary. All of this is with the approval of the supreme court. It is not a matter of the administrator taking over any duties of the supreme court. There is not one sentence in this, as far as I can see at this time, in this Committee Proposal 91, section b, that would require the administrator or give him the leeway to take over anything unless it is under the direction of the supreme court and the supreme court is liable thereto.

Now, about the administrator's obligations. To whom is he obligated? For his position and for his job he is obligated to the supreme court itself. It is not a civil service job. He is supposed to carry out the orders of the supreme court and the directions of the supreme court. It is strictly a ministerial office, and they would have the right to remove him and therefore shoulder any responsibility that might be wrong.

I say I support the committee proposal with the further statement that it is a necessary adjunct to the duties of the supreme court in order to see that they carry it out, in order that this constitution may be properly executed as far as the judicial branch is concerned. I therefore support the committee proposal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Bay, one of the movers of the amendment, Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman and delegates, you know from our experience in this convention every public employee, from the top to the bottom, wants constitutional status right down to the drain commissioner. Now we have another instance of an officer, a state officer, state employee, who wants constitutional status. The gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Garvin, states that the court administrator is simply a ministerial officer; that is, he's sort of, I assume, a glorifed office boy for the supreme court. Now, it is certain that if that is all he is, if that is as far as his powers go, he certainly doesn't need constitutional status. But we of the minority feel that perhaps, under this proposal and under the statute that Mr. Garvin mentioned, his powers are really designed to go further than that.

Yesterday we had an issue here about the advisability of giving the supreme court absolute supervisory power over the circuit courts. Now, we thought that tended to destroy the independence of the locally elected judiciary. Now it seems to me that this goes even farther. The other at least was a direct duty of the supreme court itself. This constitutional provision combined with the statutory provision now in effect seems to give an appointive officer of the supreme court the general superintending power over the lower courts. As I stated yesterday, when we were discussing Committee Proposal 90, Committee Proposal 90 and Committee Proposal 91 are tied in together, and the effect of the 2 of them, it seems, is to greatly, greatly increase the superintending power not only by the court itself, but by a hired officer, a hired employee.

There is another reason why we feel that these lines should be deleted, and that is as has been indicated, the legislature has taken care of the situation and taken care of the situation so far as I know to the satisfaction of the supreme court. The present statute is act 269 of 1952. I don't think this has been greatly changed by the judicial code if it has been changed at all. And that creates the office of court administrator, provides as to his salary, sets forth his duties, authorizes the judges of the supreme court to direct the judge of the court to serve in another and gives other detailed instruction as to the operation of the court administrator's office. Now, undoubtedly the court administrator's act was passed by the legislature after long conferences with the supreme court and insofar as I know, the supreme court is satisfied with it. If we put this thing into the constitution, it may be that a year from now or 5 years from now, the supreme court will want to in some way set up a different structure and alter the position of the court administrator, perhaps add additional duties or take some duties away. We don't think the supreme court should be put in a straitjacket; we don't think we should permit a constitutional possibility of it being the court administrator rather than the court itself that exercises the actual superintending power over the lower courts of the state of Michigan.

I don't think as presented here this is a world shaking issue. But we are drawing a constitution and I think we should be very careful what is put in it. Time after time we've been told about the difference between constitutional language and statutory language. If ever there was statutory language in a constitutional provision, I feel we find it here. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Huron, Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, Mr. Leibrand has pretty well covered the subject. The only thing if there is to be any change, if this is made part of the constitution, it will have to be by constitutional amendment. Here is a ministerial officer, a man who can really do nothing except under the authority of the supreme court and under their direction. This is strictly statutory. It is already covered by statute. We spent hours in this convention explaining that we should not put statutory provisions in the constitution and this is entirely statutory. So if we're going to put a ministerial officer in here as a constitutional officer, in this constitution, if we follow this pattern, we'll have every clerk in the capitol and every clerk in the state in the constitution, and the supreme court itself will have no right insofar as this individual is concerned. To me it seems to be a rather ridiculous part of this article.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, were you seeking recognition at this time?

MR. DANHOF: No.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Bloomfield Hills, Mr. Woolfenden.

MR. WOOLFENDEN: I rise to support the committee proposal and to oppose the amendment. This matter including the arguments just submitted to the floor were fully explored by the judicial branch committee. It was the considered judgment of the committee that the language as submitted in the committee proposal was constructive in the best interests of the administration of justice in Michigan and in the best interests of the entire state. I think that the spelling out in the constitution of the administrative authority and responsibilities of the supreme court is eminently proper and I strongly support the committee proposal and oppose this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the idea of court administration, an efficient court administration, is something which in this country has moved at a rapid rate within the last few years. Now, it wasn't too long ago that we approved 3 branches of government and all of the most recent state constitutions which have been drafted or which have been amended or which have been recommended set forth the office of the court administrator. If we are to change and we expect an efficient system, right here and now we should not let our prejudice or what we think of the men who may occupy the office interfere with setting up a good system. There is a difference. We must set up a good system and then pick the best means of selecting the men to run the system.

The states of Hawaii and Alaska, New Jersey, New York and Maryland have given constitutional status to the court administrator. If the courts are to adequately perform their function and the supreme court of court administration, then we must give them the tools and these should not—in a document where we will recognize the separation of powers—he should not be subject to the will or the whim of any other branch of the government. We have proposed in a later section, which is unanimously agreed to by the committee— there are at least no minority reports—that the supreme court be given the right to have them set and run their own budget. This is but a necessary correlation of this entire process of efficient judicial administration. This state will grow in population; it will grow in lawsuits; it will grow in courts; it will grow in the number of judges. The court which we charge with the administration of justice must be given the tools with which to carry out its purposes. We must not—and I think we should not—allow one vote over half in the legislature to remove what would be an important adjunct of the supreme court, the same as we have provided that we hope that the court will be given the responsibility to run its own shop. The model state constitution, the American bar association, the model judicial articles have recommended the court administrator be made and included as a constitutional officer.

Therefore, I urge, and the majority of the committee is likewise of the opinion, that we must write a document which is forward looking as the people were in 1908 when they put in general superintending control and other matters which at that time were undoubtedly not needed or even thought of. If we are going to have the tools and make them available so we will not have justice delayed, being justice denied, I urge that the court administrator be put in here so that he is solely and completely responsible to those who are charged with the efficient administration of justice. This is the majority report of the committee and I urge the rejection of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Taylor, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the committee report. However, I have a great deal of respect for the contribution that has been made by the 3 people and a lot of sympathy for the members of the present minority. I'd like to ask a question of Mr. McAllister through the Chair, if I might, to see if we couldn't arrive at part of what he is trying to do. Tom, as I understood what you said on the floor as contrasted to the total effect of your proposed amendment, you are not nearly as much concerned about that fact that we constitutionally recognize the position of court administrator as you are about the fact that we seem to spell out some duties that could never be taken away from him. Isn't that correct?

MR. McALLISTER: No, I feel that the court administrator was created by a statute that the legislature found a need for and he is a ministerial officer. He can't do anything without direction from the supreme court. It is similar to me to putting all the clerks in the state capitol in the constitution. In other words, this man has no authority at all except what is given to him by the supreme court. We spoke hours and hours here about putting statutory language in this constitution. The other thing is when you have to have a constitutional amendment to change the situation, it seems to me as I said, ridiculous because here is a ministerial officer; in order to make any change in this setup, we have to have a constitutional amendment adopted by the people. That is the reason that I say it should not be a part of the constitution.

MR. FORD: Now that I understand his position, I do have to oppose the amendment. One of the things that you have to keep clearly in mind here is that the committee, in giving recognition to the position of court administrator, goes a step further and says to itself, and is now asking you this question, "Given the position of a court administrator, who is actually going to be the ministerial officer carrying out the will of the supreme court and the enforcement of the court rules, would you rather that the legislature prescribe his specific duties or the court through rules and by direction prescribe them?"

Now, this is a question that is being answered by the committee in this way. The committee says that since this person is a ministerial officer charged with carrying out the wishes of the court and since the court should be, insofar as possible independent of either the legislative or executive branches of the government, then the court should be the one to set and establish the duties for the administrator. The committee majority report would place the court administrator squarely under the control of the court, with one exception, and the one exception being that the constitutional provision here would direct that the court administrator would be the budgetary officer of the court. And as I read it, this could be an influential or an insignificant function, depending on how much authority the court wanted to grant, and really, we're not, as Tom might indicate—Delegate McAllister, rather—we're not freezing into the constitution a framework of duties or restrictions that would prevent the court from having a free hand in directing the activities of its administrator.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister—

MR. McALLISTER: Do you wish me to reply to that, Mr. Ford? I will anyhow. (laughter) I say that the supreme court under the existing statute, has full authority over the court administrator. In fact, if he makes an investigation at the present time, before he can even file a petition, he's got to confer with the court and when he prepares that petition, it must be authorized by the chief justice or it can't go out. Actually, he's just really a glorified office boy. And here we're putting him in the constitution and the supreme court, as I understand it, can require him to perform any duties and undoubtedly he prepared all statistics that have been furnished to us here, to our committee. He prepares the budget at the present time as far as I know and as far as I know, there is no demand on the part of the supreme court for this constitutional provision. If there is, I never heard any supreme court justice before our committee ever ask for it.

In other words, we're putting something in here that is strictly statutory, is already covered, and it is just adding to the constitution and making it necessary as I have said before to have a constitutional amendment to change it. They don't need any more authority. The supreme court has all the authority to make this man do whatever they want him to. And he is actually an employee under the sole direction and control of the supreme court at the present time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly, did you desire recognition at this time?

MISS DONNELLY: No.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Following along with what Mr. McAllister has said, I refer again to act 269 of 1952, the statute which created the office of court administrator. The position of the minority here is not that we are against or that we are opposed to the continued existence of that statutory act. We are not against the court administrator. This act 269 has been in effect for 10 years. The court administrator has been operating for 10 years. We want him to continue to operate. But there has been no effort, so far as I know, to repeal that act and eliminate the court administrator. But under the statute itself, let me read you a few things, powers that are vested in the court administrator, and there are mighty few. As someone has said, everything must be done under the direction of the supreme court itself:

> 1. There is hereby created the office of court administrator, the functions and duties of which shall be performed by the clerk of the supreme court, whom the supreme court may appoint and remove, or if the supreme court shall so direct, by a deputy hereby authorized to be appointed for that purpose by said clerk, with the approval of the supreme court to serve at the pleasure of the supreme court.

Now, that certainly gives the supreme court and the court administrator—that sets their status; there is no control; there is no civil service; there is no nothing. The supreme court appoints; the supreme court removes; the supreme court directs. And then we come down here to the duties of the court administrator:

> a. He shall supervise and examine the administrative methods and systems employed in the office of the courts. He shall examine the state of the dockets of the courts and determine the need for assistance by any court and report the same to the supreme court.

Then we go on with the wide, wide, list of duties but everything under the direction and control of the supreme court.

As I say, so far as I know, there has been no action for the repeal of that statute. The legislature created the office of court administrator 10 years ago without any prodding from the constitutional convention. We recognize the conditions in the courts may change from time to time and additional powers may be desired from the legislature. We feel this is simply one ministerial office that does not need constitutional status. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Plank, were you seeking recognition or were you sending your cordial greetings to the Chair? (laughter) Mr. Leppien? The Chair would guess it has simply been favored with cheery waves. (laughter) Mr. Nord.

MR. NORD: Mr. Chairman, I believe the question has been raised here, while it is not of great substantive importance, is of very deep procedural importance to the convention and that is the reason that I undertake to speak to you on this subject even though I am not a member of this committee. The basic question that is raised is: what belongs in the constitution and what does not? And that is a very, very important question, regardless of the substantive merits of this particular issue. And actually nobody is really excited about whether this language really is in or out but they are concerned about the basic principle. And I think we ought to spend a few minutes on the principle to see how it applies in this case and maybe it will help us to find out how it applies in other cases.

It seems to be the impression of the minority members of this committee that anything that the legislature could do should be left to the legislature—anything they could do—in fact, anything that they have done in the past prima facie is a matter for the legislature. It seems to me that that is a fallacy.

The mere fact that if the constitution is silent, the legislature can handle the problem, does not necessarily mean that the constitution ought to be silent. Some matters inherently ought to be left to the legislature. By far the great bulk of the matters that we have discussed in this convention should have been left to the legislature. I wouldn't be surprised if we could say at least 3/4 of the things that we've discussed or adopted so far never should have been adopted and should have been left to the legislature.

Very few people have been excited about that up to this point. I think we will be excited about it eventually. But the mere fact that many of the things that we have been putting into the constitution and many of the things that we will be attempting to put in should not be put in, should be legislative, does not necessarily mean that everything that the legislature could do should be left to the legislature.

For example, if its a matter of adopting a law which will govern the conduct of the people, that ought to be left to the legislature. That is making a law. That is what we expect of them. We shouldn't make that law here; and we will have that situation come up over and over again. When it comes to questions directly involving people and not just involving representatives of the government but ordinary people and how they shall behave and what shall be done to them, those are normally matters for the legislature. Those should be removed from the constitution.

But now let's take a look at the subject before us in this particular case. Is the matter we are concerned with something which affects directly what people should do or what should be done to people, or has it got something to do only with what shall be done by government personnel and what shall be done to them? It is clear that when we are talking about an officer of the court, we are not talking about making a law which will govern the conduct of the people; we are talking about the administration of government. And, when we are talking about the administration of government, normally that is the exact type of thing which we expect to find in the constitution. I realize that many aspects of governmental control are handled by legislation simply because they have not been put in the constitution and because the legislature has the power to do so.

But let's look at this particular situation in this case. Here we have to do with the administration of the court system, the administration of the supreme court, and through the supreme court, and through the administrator, the administration of the entire judiciary. The question in my mind—and I believe this is a question that should be in all of our minds—is this: do we want the administration of the entire judiciary to be a legislative matter? Is that in keeping with the theory that we should keep things out of the constitution because they are inherently legislative? It seems to me that Mr. Danhof has made the point, and I wish to emphasize as clearly as I can, that this is a matter relating to the judiciary; it has nothing to do with the legislature as such. It is better that the legislature have nothing to do with it. It relates solely to the judiciary and how the judiciary should be organized and controlled and supervised. This is the kind of thing that we should have in the constitution if it is to be anywhere. Let's not get mixed up on the theory that just because the legislature did it in the past that therefore that is the best way to do it. That is not the best way to do it. The best way to do it, because it relates to the judiciary, is to keep it away from the legislature.

I therefore assert—and I hope that we will keep this in mind in other instances too—that you cannot jump to the conclusion that just because something looks like statutory language or even because it is a statute at the present time, that that is the way to determine whether it should be in or out of the constitution. In this particular problem we have to look at the problem and we must see that what is at stake is the independence of one branch of the government from another. If we decide we want to have an administrator, as seems to be agreed by everyone, it ought to be in the constitution.

I therefore support the committee proposal and oppose the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: I'd like to suggest that somewhere along the line this argument has gotten off the issue. We are now talking about—

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly, that had occurred to the Chair, but it has been lenient.

MISS DONNELLY: Well, I thought it was only good manners to wait and let him finish his sentence. But we are now talking about section b. Section b in the majority report, if people will pay attention to section b alone—and that's what we're talking about in this instance—spells out that the chief justice shall perform other duties as may be required by the court. Now, that sentence again doesn't do much. It's ridiculous in the minority's opinion. This is what it says:

> The supreme court shall appoint an administrator of the courts—

which we are not objecting to at all, except that it shouldn't be in the constitution > —and other judicial assistants as shall be deemed necessary to aid in the administration of the courts in the state. The administrator shall, under the direction of the supreme court, prepare and submit to the legislature the budget for the court and perform all other necessary functions relating to the revenues and expenditures of the court. He shall perform the other duties that may be assigned by the court.

We've got 2 things here: one, I think, legislative detail, and 2, we're telling the supreme court how their budget is going to be submitted to the legislature and how it is going to be handled. This isn't just legislative detail, aspects of what we are going to do to the legislature; we're also telling the supreme court what to do. Now, if the highest court doesn't know how to handle this, then we've really got problems. And the issue isn't how we are going to have the growth of the people in this state or what should or shouldn't be in the constitution alone in legislative detail versus the other. We are also putting in here language that is binding the supreme court on how it is going to handle its internal affairs on its budget and what have you. Certainly, they should be allowed to do it but they shouldn't be told how it's going to be submitted to the legislature. This is not just one point. I mean there is more than one issue and I think we are way off of it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, I desire to attract some attention, if possible, to not the court administrator himself, but to this phrase about "other judicial assistants as shall be deemed necessary to aid in the administration of the courts in the state."

Now, I think that this reaches to the entire court system, not just to the supreme court. Now, we are talking about the power of the supreme court to appoint judicial assistants to aid in the administration of the courts. Does this mean that hereafter the supreme court will appoint court reporters? Does it mean that the supreme court will appoint friends of the court? Does it mean that the supreme court will appoint probate registers? These officers, I think, are judicial assistants aiding in the administration of the courts. Is that what the committee intended by this very broad grant of power?

At the present time, under the present constitution, the supreme court has very extremely limited appointing power. I think that the present constitution says that the supreme court may appoint a clerk and a crier and that's about all.

The way that the court administrator act was written in 1952 was very carefully worked out in order to accomplish the purpose without violating that very restrictive power of the constitution. You notice Judge Leibrand read the act in which it says clearly that the powers of the court administrator shall be performed by the clerk of the court but that the clerk of the court may appoint a deputy simply because the supreme court doesn't have any constitutional power to do that. So the way they accomplished this was that the clerk of the supreme court appointed this deputy, who is the court administrator.

Well, that was a very restrictive appointive power. I think it only reasonable that the supreme court should have a broader appointing power than it presently has. But I am a little bit alarmed at the breadth of the language which I refer to; that the supreme court shall have power to appoint judicial assistants to aid in the administration of the court. Just how far does that go? Does it go so far as to vest in the supreme court; and of course, if it is constitutionally vested there, this power to appoint say a probate register, why, the legislature couldn't change it. If the power is constitutionally vested in the supreme court to appoint friends of the court, the legislature couldn't change it.

At the present time I think that the governor appoints court reporters upon the recommendation of the several judges. Does this mean that the supreme court hereafter will appoint court reporters? Does it go this far? I believe it does by a fair reading, a fair interpretation of the words that you've got in this proposal here.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hutchinson, is your question rhetorical or do you desire to yield to a member of the committee for a response?

MR. HUTCHINSON: I will yield to Mr. Danhof, if he cares to respond.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Thank you, sir. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hutchinson, as Mr. Hutchinson is aware, there is at the present time a gentleman employed who is known as a deputy court administrator. Now, the method by which he was hired and the means from which he is paid, I don't know the details but I know it took federal funds and the fact that he was appointed by some agency and then assigned over.

Now, the deputy court administrator is charged and is working with the probate courts to this date in an effort to perhaps make rules which would be similar, standardize the practice between the various probate courts in this state, assist those members of the probate bench who at the present time are not members of the bar, in an effort to coordinate, in an effort to ascertain where areas of improvement could be used in the probate courts.

It is anticipated that we have created and we are recommending that the legislature create and they have created a system of municipal courts. We think that in the future there should be some administration of these particular courts—an effort to standardize the practice and procedure so that people—or attorneys—when they move from place to place in this state can be assured of finding standardized procedure within the courts of limited jurisdiction, or the inferior courts, as they are now known.

The problem as you have so adequately stated has been the very restrictive power in the supreme court to hire anyone outside of a clerk and a crier as far as I can figure out. The supreme court justices don't even have the authority to hire their own secretaries or to hire a law clerk to assist in research, such as is needed by justices of the supreme court.

It was the intent—and I think I speak for the committee—that the gentlemen and the officers of which you speak were not necessarily connected with the supreme court but that it was in the administration in the standardizing of procedure and not in the everyday operational aspects of the court or in the employees which are used in the circuit courts or the probate courts, or even the court of appeals or the municipal court, such as their clerk or their reporter.

This is a grant to the supreme court to hire and to obtain—and when we referred to judicial assistants, we meant like the court administrator and perhaps assistants, whatever name you want to call them. We did not intend—at least I personally did not, and I do not think the majority of the committee did—that it reached down to the fact where friends of the court were actually court officers or employees of the probate or the circuit court and would be directed by the supreme court. But that fact that is needed is a wider branch, a wider grant to the supreme court in an effort to garner together and to make more efficient court administration, court rules, court procedure, and these efforts are being done—it isn't done overnight—but already the deputy court administrator has made great strides in getting the probate courts in the various sections of this state to get together, even voluntarily, to standardize rules. And various counties have gotten together; I think in southwestern Michigan they have a union of the probate judges who have, under the direction of the deputy court administrator, prepared a standardized set of rules which they are urging be adopted by the probate courts as it relates to the practice. Those attorneys who have practiced in a number of counties will know that the practice in that particular court will vary tremendously. This was—at least as far as I am concerned personally—the intent of the committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Bay City, Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I think Mr. Danhof has adequately covered the fact that the intent of the committee—and I might say that that is my understanding also—that the intent of the committee was not to include judicial assistants below the level of the supreme court but merely assistants to the supreme court or the court administrator. I think I appreciate the concern of Delegate Hutchinson since we are both serving together on the style and drafting committee and I am sure that we can take care of that problem, if it is a problem.

Now, with regard in particular to the comments of Delegate Donnelly in the first sentence, "He shall perform the other duties that may be required by the court." When she said that this seemed silly, that it really doesn't add much, I would merely like to point out that I think that's the heart of what is involved. This is the issue. Shall duties be assigned to the administrator by the court or by the legislature? Will the supreme court be independent of the legislative branch of government? Or will they be subject to administration, administrative duties assigned to this officer by the legislature? I think we have a separation of powers factor involved here.

Now, I don't know—in sitting on the committee and listening to the testimony of judges and other witnesses that appeared before us, or anybody else, or in consulting with my own circuit judges—that the power involved here has ever been abused. I just haven't heard anything along that line at all. But I suggest to you very strongly that we should not leave this to the legislature to determine its duties.

This provision does not, I believe, put the supreme court in a straitjacket of any kind. In fact, it gives them the freedom and the power to exercise the administration that they need.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes that our debate has gone on but is going to ask that the committee maintain a little better order. Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: At the risk of being repetitious, I am going to speak once more and then be quiet. The objection to this language pointed out by Delegate Hutchinson, I think, has a real foundation. Bearing in mind what we did yesterday with Committee Proposal 90, by Committee Proposal 90 we said "The judicial power of the state is vested exclusively in one court of justice which shall be divided into," and so forth.

Now, section b here says, "The supreme court shall appoint an administrator of the courts and other judicial assistants as shall be deemed necessary to aid in the administration of the courts in the state." I feel there is a real danger that that might be extended to granting to the supreme court the appointive power of court clerks, registers and so forth. I wish to support what Mr. Hutchinson has stated.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I hadn't intended to participate in this particular discussion until I was aroused from my reveries by a few words I thought I heard Mr. Danhof say to the effect that the supreme court had not been able to appoint a deputy court administrator except with the aid of federal funds. We have been complaining about centralization of power in parts of our state government and there have been complaints that our supreme court was getting into that stream. Supervision is one thing; straitjacketing of the lower courts is something else. And if it is true that our supreme court has gotten to the point where federal funds are considered acceptable in controlling the courts of this state, then I think it is indeed time that we sat up and took notice.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Gadola.

MR. GADOLA: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, there is being overlooked to some degree another statute. They've been commenting so much upon the statute of 1952 that made the court administrator act. Remember this, yesterday something was said about it being new. It's not new. It is only carrying out a previous act where there was a state judge, presiding judge, who was appointed by statute years ago, and that state presiding judge had the work that was taken over by the court administrator. So you go a little further than 1952, if you please, and let's go to act 236 of 1961, which is not really effective as of yet, and that is the revised judicature act of Michigan. That act is only 273 pages long, so I don't intend to talk about the whole act, or expect you to. But I do want to call attention to some of the provisions in that act. That act specifies all about a court administrator and what he shall do and so forth, or his appointment. But that act says this: whenever the presiding circuit judge of the state of Michigan appears in any statute of this state, the same is deemed to mean and refer to supreme court administrator, who shall take only such action in each instance as the supreme court shall direct. So in each instance, he can't go ahead on any occasion but one at a time, and he's got to be directed by the supreme court in each instance. That's the act that's going into effect. So let's not go back on these acts of the past that are on the books. Let's take the ones that are going to be in effect in the future and see how this constitutional amendment affects that act of the future. That's the new judicature act that the courts are going to act under very speedily in a very short time, January first—that's right.

Of course, there are 5 of us members of this convention who have operated under the old act of the presiding circuit judge and we had no difficulty at all in that. Then we always acted under the administrator act and we had no difficulty under that.

I am not opposing the constitutional part here at all. I believe perhaps that it is legislative to some degree. If it was to be spelled out, it may be all right. There are some things that are very questionable in there. I would say that in my opinion. However, I do hope that you will look to the future, at the act that the courts are going to operate under in the future, and not dwell only in the past. Let's live in the present a little while and look to the future and let the dead past bury the past.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Martin.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Chairman, I only want to make one short comment and that is: the significant thing about the committee proposal is that it deals with an independent branch of government. Judge Leibrand relies upon the court administrator act. But the fact of the matter is that tomorrow the legislature can repeal the court administrator act and thereby prevent the operation of another independent branch of government from being conducted in the way that it properly ought to be conducted. This is simply a statute subject to repeal at any time and the efforts of the committee, I am sure—and I have not discussed this with them in detail—but I am sure that the proposal of the committee is simply and solely directed at giving the supreme court the minimum of authority necessary to conduct its affairs in an orderly and proper manner, not subject to complete disintegration upon the whim of the legislature. The legislature, of course, has general control over the situation because it has control over the budget or the appropriations for the court and it always had authority to limit those. Certainly, this is the minimum that ought to be provided to the court to enable it to carry out its affairs in an orderly and sensible manner.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment. Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Another thing, fellow delegates and—in reverse now—Mr. Chairman, I think that we should consider the fact that the supreme court has the right to interpret this constitution the way they see fit. Mr. Hutchinson really brought up a point. They can interpret it that they have the right to appoint circuit court reporters, friends of the court, registers of probate and almost any other court officer. In other words, their construction of this constitution is not subject to appeal and they can make any determination they want to and we have nothing to say about it. I think that Mr. Hutchinson raised a very, very important point in this matter. And I again urge the adoption of our amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the minority report amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is as follows:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I would urge the defeat of the amendment as now pending. The committee has not met, but personally, a limitation or an amendment after the words "judicial assistants" to limit it to the supreme court, I would personally have no objection to, if such an amendment were offered. I do feel, however, that the importance of retaining the court administrator is something which we should not delete from the constitution.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, the court administrator will be retained with or without this language. I would like to ask for a division on this matter.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister asks for a division on this question. Is the demand supported? It is supported. The question is on the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. Those in favor of the amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote. Mr. Gadola.

MR. GADOLA: Mr. Chairman, please, may I explain my vote? I am voting no only because there are other amendments coming up.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Yeager.

MR. YEAGER: Mr. Chairman, how does the Chair vote?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair does not vote in the committee of the whole, Mr. Yeager.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the minority report amendment, the yeas are 44; the nays are 62.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is not adopted. Are there further amendments to the section?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hutchinson offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 14, after "assistants" by inserting "of the supreme court"; so that the language will read:

> The supreme court shall appoint an administrator of the courts and other judicial assistants of the supreme court as shall be deemed necessary to aid in the administration of the courts in the state.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Hutchinson, the Chair will recognize the vice president of the convention, Mr. Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, I am informed by the sense of the statement made by Mr. Danhof earlier that this amendment would be personally acceptable to him and in my opinion would solve the question that I raised relative to how deep down the powers of the supreme court would reach in the appointment of assistants. Now, if we limit this to their appointing judicial assistants of the supreme court, this will mean that of course in the exercise of its superintending control the supreme court might be able to establish whatever staff is necessary in order to exercise the superintending control but would not be susceptible of interpretation such as I suggested which would reach way down to the point of, for instance, having the supreme court name the probate register in every county in the state.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I will favor the amendment. I cannot speak officially for the committee, but I believe that the committee would be in favor thereof.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Hutchinson, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hutchinson's amendment:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Hutchinson. Those in favor will say aye. Opposed, no.

The amendment is adopted. Are there further amendments?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hutchinson offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 16, after "shall" by striking out the balance of the section and inserting "perform such duties as may be assigned by the court."; so the language will then read, "The administrator shall perform such duties as may be assigned by the court."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, Mr. Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment not at all with any attempt to hurt or hinder the effect of this provision but, in my opinion, to strengthen it. The point is that once you constitutionally vest a power in an officer like a court administrator, there it is. And there is the power that he has, if you please, independent of the will of the court. Now, it seems to me as though the powers of the court administrator, what he shall do, what his duties are, should be prescribed by the court and I don't think that the constitution should undertake to do it. So that this language that says that "The administrator shall, under the direction of the supreme court, prepare and submit to the legislature the budget for the court and perform all other necessary functions relating to the revenues and expenditures of the court." Well, probably in the ordinary course of events those duties would be assigned to the administrator, but we are writing something for a long time into the future. It might be that under certain circumstances the court would want to relieve the administrator of parts of those duties, at least for a particular year or something. They might feel that maybe he doesn't quite see eye to eye with them and at the same time they don't want to fire him and they'd rather do a little bit of budgetary work themselves.

I think it would be much better constitutional practice not to define in the constitution the duties of officers at this level. I think you will find it better constitutional practice and you will find it will be better in the long run if you let the supreme court—which is supposed to have the control here—have the whole control and let them delegate to the court administrator such functions as they see fit over their budgetary expenditures.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Hutchinson, Mr. Hatch.

MR. HATCH: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to direct a question to Mr. Hutchinson. Would it be your intent under the amendment that the court administrator perform any function other than an administrative function?

MR. HUTCHINSON: In answer to Mr. Hatch, I would say no. I would say, though, that the point that you raise is susceptible to the language as the matter now stands. I would have no objection to your inserting the word "administrative" ahead of "duties" and will accept the amendment.

MR. HATCH: That was precisely the point I intended to raise.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hutchinson revises his amendment by adding the word "administrative" before the word "duties"; so the amendment would read as follows:

1. Amend page 1, line 16, after "shall" by striking out the balance of the section and inserting "perform such administrative duties as may be assigned by the court.".

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, in further support of the amendment I now offer, I would remind the committee again that the revised judicature act says in so many words that the court administrator shall take only such action in each instance as the supreme court shall direct. There is grave doubt, if the present proposed language goes into the constitution, it would appear as though the supreme court administrator might have some power independent of the supreme court because we wrote it into the constitution.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize Mr. Cudlip.

MR. CUDLIP: Mr. Chairman and members, I am a member of the committee and that's the only reason I rise, because the previous speakers are not, but I agree emphatically with Delegate Hutchinson and I'm sure that this is a very satisfactory amendment and, moreover, we save 30 words. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I have made a fast check with I think almost a majority of the committee and we would accept the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the revised amendment offered by Mr. Hutchinson, the question now occurs. Those in favor of the amendment will say aye. Opposed, no.

The amendment is adopted. Are there further amendments to section b?

SECRETARY CHASE: None on file, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Will the secretary please read the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment that has just been adopted is as follows:

1. Amend page 1, line 16, after "shall" by striking out the balance of the section and inserting "perform such administrative duties as may be assigned by the court."; so that the language will read, "The administrator shall perform such administrative duties as may be assigned by the court."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: There being no further amendments, it will pass.

Section b, as amended, is passed.

The secretary has had word about the condition of our fellow delegate, Mr. Buback. The Chair will ask him to make a brief announcement.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Madar reports that the seizure that Mr. Buback had this morning at the breakfast table was apparently due to some medication. A physician was called. He has been taken to St. Lawrence hospital, where he is resting much more comfortably and it is hopefully expected that he will be back before we adjourn today.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will add we are all pleased to have that word about Mr. Buback.

The matter now before the committee is section c, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Section c:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: With respect to this section, the Chair will recognize the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, on this section I would again yield to the delegate from Grand Rapids, Mr. Tubbs.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Tubbs is recognized.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen, this proposed section is simply a restatement of the present section 4 of article VII. If you will turn to your constitution, you will find that everything in that section is in the new one, except the names of the writs. Now, those who are not lawyers might wonder at the names of some of those writs. They're old Latin names. They are still in use in some areas and they are still in use in Michigan. But if we are going to modernize our practice, we feel that we ought to just call them general administrative or remedial writs and leave out the names. We may have some different names for them in the next 50 years. There ought not to be any controversy over this section if you agree that the 1908 provisions were satisfactory.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, have you further explanation?

MR. DANHOF: About what?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Are there questions with respect to this section?

MR. DANHOF: I would further yield at this time perhaps to the gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Cudlip, if he has some words on this particular section.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize Mr. Cudlip.

MR. CUDLIP: Mr. Chairman and members, just to supplement briefly what my committee member, Mr. Tubbs, has said, I am sure that we all want to understand what we are putting in this constitution. This is a very desirable addition and succinct and it saves words again.

But I went down to the library to see what some of these words meant. So with your indulgence for a few minutes, we are striking them and including the words "prerogative writs" as the tools of this court. The "writ of error" simply relates to a writ involving review; you've heard a lot about "habeas corpus", you may have the body; "mandamus", a writ when the court is asked to order somebody to perform a ministerial act; "quo warranto", a writ by what warrant. Some corporations, for example, exceed authority and the procedure would be, by what warrant do you do that? "Procedendo", that's the one that really called me to the library. That is a writ used by the court when a lower court sends something to it on appeal or gets to the supreme court from an inferior court on appeal, the high court thinks it shouldn't be there, wants to send it back, so it uses a writ of procedendo—proceed again, proceed anew. It's a good section; it's a good change.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: There is a minority report filed by Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister, pursuant to which they have offered an amendment. Does one of the movers of the amendment wish to be recognized?

The Chair recognizes Judge Leibrand, one of the movers of the amendment. The Chair would suggest that we have the secretary read the amendment first and then you proceed.

SECRETARY CHASE: The minority amendment is as follows:

1. Amend page 2, line 3, at the end of section c by changing the period to a comma, and inserting "it being provided that the supreme court shall not have the power to remove or suspend a judge.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the minority report amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister. The Chair will recognize Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: I will first, with the indulgence of the committee, Mr. Chairman, read the reasons for the minority report on section c, particularly so because the first paragraph of these reasons is in error.

> Section c. The only change made by the Donnelly-Leibrand-McAllister minority report on section c is the addition of the phrase, "it being provided that the supreme court shall not have the power to remove or suspend a judge."

That is not correct; there is another phrase inserted. Starting at the very first of the minority report and reading therefrom:

> "The supreme court shall have: a general superintending control over the dockets of the appellate court and circuit courts;" limiting to dockets. The majority report doesn't have the docket limitation but gives the superintending control over courts, rather than dockets. Now, with reference to this matter we desire to add a provision, "it being provided that the supreme court shall not have the power to remove or suspend a judge".
> In suggesting the addition of this, we do not feel that we are tilting at windmills. There is, we assure you, a definite movement in this convention to empower the supreme court to remove elected judges from office on its own motion. We believe this is an unnecessary delegation of power. We also believe it is dangerous delegation of power.
> The supreme court has ample power, under the framework of its own rules, to enforce its general superintending control over the lower courts. If a lower court refuses to abide by the lawful judgments, decrees and rules of the supreme court, the supreme court may use writs of mandamus and prohibition. To enforce these writs the supreme court may commit an offending judge to jail for contempt until the judge does comply.
> If the judge of the lower court grossly violates his oath of office, the supreme court may report the situation to the governor, who, with the concurrence of 2/3 of the legislature, may declare the judicial office vacant. In addition, impeachment lies under the provisions of article IX of the present constitution, the substance of which, we understand, will be carried over into the new constitution. That article amply protects the public, during the time impeachment is pending, by providing that no judicial officer shall exercise his office after an impeachment is directed until he is acquitted.
> Any other public official removed in Michigan for wrongdoing by the governor or the legislature—and they are the sole bodies now permitted to impeach or remove officials > —has an appeal to and the protection of the supreme court. Designating the supreme court as the removing body deprives judges of that protection. The supreme court becomes judge, jury and prosecutor. There appears to be no reason for this discriminatory action. The adoption of the minority report will assure that such discrimination against judges shall not occur.

Now, I have said that we do not feel that we are tilting at windmills. The majority of this convention is or are—whatever the case may be—not lawyers. We know, and you have heard here that the supreme court by the Constitution of 1908 was granted broad rulemaking and disciplinary powers. They have exercised these powers from time to time, and back on June 5, 1959 the Supreme Court of the state of Michigan adopted a set of rules concerning their procedures in the exercise of disciplinary powers against local judicial officials. I will read to you the following. The heading on this sheet I hold is, "On Friday, January 5, 1959, the attached rules 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9, concerning superintendence of the judiciary of Michigan, were adopted by the affirmative vote of a majority of the justices." This is the first time that we have had from the supreme court a set of codified rules on this subject.

Now right here I am reminded of a little story about a plaintiff and a defendant and their attorneys who were trying a case before a justice of the peace, and after the testimony was over, the justice asked for arguments or any applicable law. The attorney for the plaintiff got out, I think it was 33 Michigan, a volume published about 1850, and brought forth a case that seemed to be right on the point to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff. The attorney for the defendant brought out a Michigan advance sheet dated about 30 days earlier. For you who are not lawyers, advance sheets are bindings of supreme court opinions immediately after they are published and come in a magazine form with a paper cover, while the permanent volumes are regular bound books. And so the justice duly and gravely considered the law produced by the attorney for the plaintiff from the old bound volume and the law produced by the defendant's attorney in the new advance sheet, and promptly, as befits a proper justice of the peace, gave verdict for the plaintiff. Someone asked the justice afterwards how he happened to arrive at such a conclusion in the face of the applicable law. And the judge said, "That's easy." He said, "The attorney for the plaintiff got his law from a book while the attorney for the defendant got his law from an almanac." (laughter)

Now, I might say that these rules that I am going to read to you in brief, in short part—not completely—are actually found in a book, if you want to consult it, volume 356, Michigan, right at the opening of the volume, the rules as promulgated by the supreme court as to the discipline of the judiciary. And as I say, I will not read them in full; I will read excerpts here and there. You can consult the bound book if you want to. Rule 1 opens by saying, "These rules"—and my purpose for this is to indicate to you how the supreme court itself interprets its disciplinary powers—

> These rules are adopted pursuant to powers of the supreme court over the judiciary of this state, and also to enable the circuit courts to exercise their powers of supervisory control of all inferior courts and tribunals, subject to superintendence and review by the supreme court.

The next section I have marked:

> No investigation or proceedings under these rules shall be held invalid by reason of any nonprejudicial irregularity, nor for any error not resulting in a substantial miscarriage of justice.

Three:

> The enumeration of or reference to particular powers in these rules shall not be construed to exclude or limit others possessed by the supreme court.

In other words, the supreme court obviously takes the position that it can even go further with its disciplinary proceedings than provided by this rule.

> The enumeration of or reference to particular duties or standards of conduct herein shall not be construed to exclude or limit any other duties or standards of conduct to which any judicial officer and any inferior court or tribunal is subject.

Five, and here comes the prosecuting attorney aspect of this thing:

> The chief justice of the supreme court may, with or without a request, cause an investigation to be made by the court administrator of the affairs of any court or tribunal in the judicial department of this state, or the personal practices of any judicial officer thereof.

". . . or the personal practices of any judicial officer thereof." That's an important phrase.

And then they go on to say that on the other hand, the court may request an investigation by the court administrator and the chief justice may authorize a petition in the matter of the accused judicial officer. Now here is a definition of misconduct:

> Misconduct to be dealt with under these rules includes misconduct in office, misfeasance, malfeasance, neglect of duty, personal practices contrary to any of the canons of judicial ethics that have been or may from time to time hereafter be adopted by the supreme court, and any other practices that are likely to expose any court or tribunal in this state, or any judicial officer thereof, to public censure or reproach, or that are in any manner prejudicial to the proper administration of justice.

I submit to you, fellow delegates, that that definition is wide enough to penalize a judge for telling an off color story at a meeting of the Elks.

Rule 4 provides for the transfer of jurisdiction for the actual trial of the judicial officer, or hearing, to the county where the officer of the court is located.

Here is rule 7—remember you are trying a judicial officer—

> All proceedings under these rules, including the trial of the issues of fact and law, shall be conducted in open court without a jury, and shall otherwise conform as nearly as may be to the established civil practice and procedure in the circuit courts, and the rules of evidence in civil causes shall apply.

Now, the rules of evidence in civil causes are much more liberal than the rules of evidence in criminal causes. And what we are doing here, in effect—it seems to me what these rules are doing—is in many cases trying subjects that are inherently criminal in nature. But nevertheless, the respondent and judge only get the benefit of civil rules.

Then we go to rule 9 and I'm almost done:

> If the court finds that the charges are meritorious, the court shall make its written findings of fact and law, and shall determine such corrective and disciplinary measures as in the judgment of the court are warranted by such findings, and may issue such orders, directives, mandates, writs or process as in the judgment of the court are necessary or expedient to carry the court's determination into effect.

In other words, there is absolutely unlimited right claimed by the supreme court to impose penalties in such a case.

Now I grant you that whenever a court or any other body is given an investigative power and a power to determine facts concerning wrongdoing, there has to be a penalty in order to make those orders or determinations enforceable, but here we have, neither in the statutes nor the constitution as it exists now nor in the rules themselves, no limit as to what the court may do.

Furthermore—and this is the final rule I am going to read to you—and it is short; only 2 lines. The supreme court says in so many words that the legislature of the state of Michigan is forbidden to interfere with these proceedings, and here are the words, "Any statutory provision that is inconsistent with any provision in these rules shall be considered as superseded by these rules." Now, there we have it. That's the interpretation of the supreme court of its own powers under the present constitution. Under this interpretation, I submit there is no limit on the penalty that the supreme court might impose.

There is no reason at all why the supreme court in one of these proceedings could not remove or suspend a judge. We feel that that is a dangerous power. It's a power that should be exercised—the removal or suspension of an elective officer should be exercised as are these powers with other public officials, by the governor, by the legislature or by impeachment.

We're not interfering with the rules by the minority amendment. We are permitting the supreme court to impose any penalty that it sees fit for a determination that some judicial officer has violated the rules except 2 things: the supreme court shall not suspend or remove a judge.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand, did the Chair understand that the secretary had not correctly read the amendment which you, Miss Donnelly and Mr. McAllister offered?

MR. LEIBRAND: No, Mr. Chairman. We had made a misstatement in our reasons which were distributed to the delegates. We said the only thing in our amendment was the matter of removal and suspension of judges when, as a matter of fact, there was another aspect there, another phrase upon which I will not dwell at this time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will ask the secretary to read the amendment as it has been offered.

SECRETARY CHASE: May the secretary ask the pardon of the minority in the preparation of this amendment in that we overlooked one part of the amendment.

The minority report amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Mr. Leibrand and Mr. McAllister is as follows:

1. Amend page 2, line 1, after "over" by striking out "all" and inserting "the dockets of the appellate court and circuit"; and in line 3, after "rule" by changing the period to a comma and inserting "it being provided that the supreme court shall not have the power to remove or suspend a judge."; so that the language will then read:

> The supreme court shall have: a general superintending control over the dockets of the appellate court and circuit courts; power to issue, hear, and determine prerogative and remedial writs; appellate jurisdiction as provided by supreme court rule, it being provided that the supreme court shall not have the power to remove or suspend a judge.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Just to keep the committee advised, the Chair's most recent census of nonlawyer delegates in attendance was 28. Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates and also delegates who are nonlawyers, I only have this to offer: on February 7, 1961, an attorney for the court administrator interpreted the rule of superintending control. Until 1959 the court had followed the writs which have been referred to by both Mr. Leibrand and Mr. Cudlip and never attempted to exercise greater power until the Huff case came along. But the attorney for the court administrator cites on February 7, the following—and I want you to listen closely:

> If cause exists for exercise of general superintending control, the practical application is nearly without limit, reprimand, fine, suspension, recommendation to the legislature or imposition of new and additional means, writs and processes.

I assume that this statement was made with the approval of the supreme court so that if this statement is correct and it was made by the attorney for the court administrator, the supreme court has unlimited power to do anything they see fit when anyone is before them. In other words, if they have this power, they have the power of the ancient king. The man is brought before the tribunal, the sentence is made and he has no appeal; and conceivably the decision could be made on any type of facts, as Mr. Leibrand has indicated in reading the court rules to you here today.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: In accordance with the Chair's suggestion, I may only be talking to brother lawyers but I still think it needs to be said that what the minority is trying to do is to move the clock back beyond 1850. The language which they object to, "the general superintending control over the other courts" has been in our constitution since 1850. Now, they can cite one case in 112 years in which they say the court has made a mistake. I don't know if the court did make a mistake or not. But if they made one mistake in 112 years, I submit their record is better than most of ours.

I think that we have got to determine for ourselves whether we do want to permit a general control or whether we don't. Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister have suggested the terrible consequences of this. In the 112 years which they claim the court has had this power, no judge has ever been suspended or removed—to my knowledge, at least—by the court. One, I guess was impeached someplace back in history by the legislature and this, of course, doesn't affect the right of impeachment. The legislature still has the power of impeachment.

What they are suggesting to us is—and I frankly can't follow their logic—is that the supreme court should not have this power because in all other instances the supreme court has the final say. Now, if you are arguing that they should not have the final say here because they do have the final say elsewhere, I don't understand why you worry about them. It is not a power which should ever be likely exercised.

We have heard a great deal of comment in these halls about having trust or mistrust of the legislature and I guess this simply boils down to whether you trust or distrust the supreme court. This is not a matter of personalities, who happens to sit on the court at this moment or some other moment in history. It is a question of whether the court administration is going to be continued and maintained or whether it is going to be thrown out the window.

As many of us suggested yesterday—maybe too many—lawyers throughout this country look upon Michigan as having had a tremendous degree of good court administration for the simple reason that we have had controls which they wished to have and are now acquiring.

And I submit that we would be making a terrible mistake if we turn the clock back not even 100 years, but back past 1850.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I would merely like to emphasize what Mr. Everett has said. We have recommended the reenactment here of the present constitutional language of 1908. If there was one thing that was presented to our committee, it was this particular language.

The gentleman who came from the state of New York where they passed that long judicial article that Delegate Ostrow showed you the other day, stated that as he was flying over here to Michigan, he read our judicial article and he said, "What we achieved in 1960 you have had since 1908." Now, the state of New York is not necessarily known as a backward or a nonprogressive state. Many of our laws, a great deal of our legal history comes from the state of New York. And if there was one thing that was impressed upon us by other speakers, especially from New Jersey where they probably had before 1947 the worst possible court system, was that the language that we had in our 1908 constitution should be retained.

Since 1908 the state of Michigan has been pointed to as a leader in this field. Every single authorization in the field of sound judicial administration comes from this particular act. All of the new constitutions have copied almost verbatim the words that we have had in Michigan for 52 or 53 years. The limitation which the minority report would make on this constitution would place us, as Mr. Everett has said, not just 50, but 100 to 150 years back. If there is one matter or one idea which must be preserved, it is on this particular provision.

We realize that certain people have a fear—and maybe it is justified and maybe it is not; maybe it is because they're a little too close to the trees and can't see the forest—but if there is one thing that we need, it is a sound judicial integrated system and to place upon this the limitations that the minority would, would severely hamper everything that you have voted for heretofore.

This is the crux that they admitted they were leading up to and this is the one thing, this is the thing that will provide a sound judicial administration. No judge, if he adequately performs his judicial duties, regardless of the strata that he may be in, will find himself before the supreme court or cited for any violation or dereliction of duty.

The majority of the committee urges that this convention not take a step backward but that they at least remain where they are and keep Michigan in the leadership in this particular field.

I strongly urge that the amendment be defeated.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair doesn't know quite what it was that you did that affected the delegates, Mr. Danhof, but 5 of them sought recognition during your remarks. The Chair will recognize Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: I rise to support the proposed amendment here. Among other reasons, I would like to call the committee's attention to Committee Proposal 42, where we have already passed authority or a proposed article in the new constitution regarding impeachments. Now, in section d of this proposed article, we make judicial officers subject to impeachment for cause; then in section e of the new proposed article, we have written or suggested the following language:

> Any officer elected by a county, city, village, township or school district may be removed from office in such manner and for such cause as shall be prescribed by law.

Now, what we are suggesting is that judicial officers may be impeached under the strict impeachment provisions, or they may be removed from office by a simple statute that the legislature puts through. Now we want to go a little further and say that the supreme court themselves may also remove these judges.

The main objection I have here is the same objection that I have to the administrative tribunals. We have a body that writes the rules, that enforces the rules, makes the hearings under their own rules that they have written and they penalize under these rules. Now, I don't think that we are going to want to go this far with our judges.

So far we have not determined how we were going to select the supreme court. We may well wind up here with an appointed supreme court with the power to remove elected officers. This I would object to from the very inception of this. We also may wind up here by selecting our supreme court bench on a regional basis.

Now, any judge in any area of the state knows that there is no possibility that a majority of that bench would be people from his own geographical area. Now, this is 2 strikes against him before he even gets involved with them.

Frankly, I think that there are enough safeguards in the impeachment article and in general practice and under the rules written by the supreme court to take care of any judges that start to divert from their duties. I think that putting a strict prohibition on the supreme court from removing elected judges, or even appointed judges, is a good move in this direction. For that reason, I would support this.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lawrence. Excuse me, Mr. Mahinske, had you concluded?

MR. MAHINSKE: I was just asked to comment on the docket procedure here. I think that this is also desirable as far as I am concerned. I think that they should have control over the dockets.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, there are 2 or 3 things that have occurred to me as being rather serious in the effort to limit the superintending control of the supreme court by the proposed amendment and why I feel that the provision in the majority report should be approved. In the first place, to put it simply, the majority report—which as I believe has been pointed out, is taken not only from the 1908 constitution, but the 1850 constitution and has been in force all that time—merely says that the supreme court shall have superintending control over the courts with the power to issue certain writs: remedial writs and prerogative writs.

Now, let's take a couple or 3 examples. One, you've heard the Huff case referred to. I would like to know if there is any proponent of the amendment or any delegate who is prepared to stand here and say that the supreme court exceeded any reasonable superintending power that it should have in that case. If anybody cares to say so, I would like to hear it. And I would have that person point out, by being familiar with the facts of that case, wherein the supreme court exceeded any reasonable, proper superintending control. And unless that is done, let's forget about the Huff case even being one case in 112 years in which the supreme court has improperly assumed control or authority over our court system. That's the first thing.

Now the second thing. I think that our purpose here is to try to improve our court system. If it is, let's see if it is improper to have the supreme court or to lodge in the supreme court the superintending control over all the courts. We have several hundred, I imagine, judges in this state. If each one is to be a little law unto himself and be able to determine how he shall conduct himself, do we have the efficient use of our court system? Shouldn't we have authority somewhere?

Now, the amendment says, "the supreme court shall not have the power to remove or suspend a judge." Let's think about that for a minute. Suppose some judge starts acting queerly. Suppose, to use an example, that he started issuing divorce decrees willy nilly, without proper proofs. Suppose that he stated he would not follow a certain rule of law and consistently refused to do so. In other words, that for reasons of nervousness or mentality or something, he was no longer fit to act as judge, whether temporarily or otherwise; is there anybody here who would say that the supreme court, protecting the people of this state, should not have authority to issue a writ restraining that judge from acting until such time as it could be determined what was wrong? It seems to me so plain that that would be to the interests of the people in the state, of all of us.

Also, I think this, I think that the holding of judicial office is a very high honor. It is one of the highest honors that we can give. The right to determine the rights—personal and property—that our people have—I think that such a man, when he takes that office, should be willing to say: I am to be judged on a higher standard than the average man in the street who has litigation in front of him. And if he conducts himself personally outside the court in such a way as to bring discredit on the judicial system, certainly there must be some means within the court structure of issuing some sort of writ to suspend or remove such a judge from acting until any other method they want to have, such as impeachment, can be invoked. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Bay, Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, with regard to the minority report, the aspect of this that should not be lost and should attract your attention is that the power of the court would be limited to superintending control over the dockets.

Now, I don't think it's true that prior to 1959 the circuit courts in this state were above reproach. Prior to that time I recall complaints, and it is my understanding that there were courts in this state that declined to render decisions for a matter of years.

Put yourself in the place of a plaintiff or a defendant in a court of law and unable to get a decision from the judge for a matter of years. Sure, you have one remedy. You can go to the supreme court and get a writ of mandamus to force him to make a decision, but how effective is that? What kind of a decision are you likely to get?

Now, the case in 1959 did not directly involve such a problem of a failure to make decisions. But since that time I have heard a lot fewer complaints. A particular problem involved removing a judge from that circuit. Sure, he had plenty of work to do there, and they brought in another judge to do it, to solve a problem in Detroit, according to the court. Now, I'd also like to say that this amendment, if it would succeed, would cut the heart right out of a pending case in the supreme court.

Now, if this were to go through and the power of the supreme court in disciplinary matters were simply over the dockets of the court, you would have no power of discipline over let's say a nonlawyer judge in a probate court with regard to any other matter except the docket. I would say that it is not so that there is no limit on the power of what the court may do. Certainly the court would have to follow some due process requirements of notice. This is all provided for and I don't think there is any question but what the federal court could step in if there was an arbitrary exercise of power by the Supreme Court of Michigan.

It was not very long ago that the district federal judge did overturn a judgment of the Supreme Court of Michigan. I think that, as Chairman Danhof has said, I voted against the provision in committee that the supreme court not have the power to remove the judge from office, but I think there are cases where they must have the power to suspend or they must have a power beyond the control over dockets.

A judge is not an ordinary citizen. He is a man in an extreme position of power over the people that appear in his court. It would merely transfer this power that the proponents of the minority report are talking about from the supreme court to every individual judge of a court of record in this state or courts not of record.

In the course of our committee hearings and in hearing the testimony of witnesses from other states, this is the one thing, the superintending and supervisory control, that they felt that Michigan had that they needed.

I urge you to support the committe proposal and to defeat the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes Mr. Woolfenden.

MR. WOOLFENDEN: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I rise in opposition to this amendment. I think in fact the amendment is in 2 parts and when we come to vote on it, I will ask that it be voted on separately. Addressing the first part of the amendment, inserting the words, "the dockets of the appellate court and circuit", I wish to submit that the existing language of the Michigan constitution, as has been stated, has been unchanged since the Constitution of 1850. It is generally recognized throughout the United States as being one of the most important and most constructive provisions in the Michigan constitution.

I would like to read to you a brief comment from the citizens research council analysis of this article, which I can state from my own experience and discussing this matter with attorneys from states throughout the United States is a valid and accurate commentary. The citizens research council states:

> The superintending control power over all inferior courts given the supreme court by this section is one of the most significant powers given to the court in the constitution. This same power exists in a number of other states and is the envy of other states not having it.

There is no question but what the good administration of justice in Michigan—and I am speaking of the administrative phase of the courts of justice—is, we are one of the leaders of the United States and it is because of this language which has been demonstrably effective and in the best interests of the state now for 112 years. I think to pull the teeth of this section of the constitution would be a tragic step backward from the position of leadership in the administration of justice that we have enjoyed in Michigan.

Now, as respects the second clause, it being provided that the supreme court shall not have the power to remove or to suspend a judge, I think that this amendment reads into the general superintending control language something that isn't there. In the same 112 years since 1850 the superme court has had this general superintending control and to the best of my knowledge it has never once undertaken to remove a judge.

The impeachment provision of the existing constitution—and I am sure the constitution we ultimately come up with will provide for impeachment—and I think that makes entirely unnecessary this clause which is strictly surplusage in my judgment and reads into the article as proposed by the committee, something that isn't there.

Therefore, I oppose both sections of this amendment, but I ask that it be submitted as 2 parts for vote when the time comes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: In accordance with Mr. Woolfenden's request, the question will be divided when it is put. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that debate will go on for some time and I therefore do now move that the committee rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves the committee do now rise. The question is on the motion. Those in favor will say aye. Opposed?

Motion carries. The committee will rise.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The delegate from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the purpose of considering matters on the general orders calendar.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oakland. All those in favor will say aye. All those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will convene and Mr. Van Dusen will preside.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will come to order. As we proceed further with the consideration of the rather technical matters in the judicial article of the constitution, the Chair would suggest to this attorney the fact that this morning we experienced a high degree of absenteeism and an equally high degree of private conversation on the floor during debate and that a counteractive measure designed to retain your audience might be to make your remarks as brief and as simple as possible. With that admonition, we will continue with the consideration of section c of Committee Proposal 91, and specifically, the first part of the minority report amendment offered by Delegates Donnelly, Leibrand and McAllister. The Chair has 5 speakers seeking recognition, the first of which is Mr. McAllister and the Chair recognizes Mr. McAllister at this time to speak on the amendment.

MR. McALLISTER: In view of the fact that it has already been quite amply discussed, I believe I'll waive my right to the floor at this time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister passes. Judge Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I have understood that there are some negotiations in the wind which may make it unnecessary for me to make the remarks that I had in mind. But in the meantime, I thought some of the lawyer delegates as well as the laymen might be interested in hearing what one prominent writer had to say about judges and how easy their task and how light the yoke rests upon their shoulders. This was a writer by the name of Elbert Hubbard, commonly know as Fra Albertus, who had these observations to make on judges about 50 years ago. He said:

> A frivolous man has said that a judgeship is a booby prize given to a lawyer for mediocrity. This is an overstatement of the literal truth, which is that a commonplace man will often make a very good judge.

I pause to give you a chance to say to yourselves, "Thank heaven for that." The quotation continues:

> There is something about the position that lifts a man morally and mentally, and brings out the best there is in him.
> The first requisite in a judge is disinterestedness. It is moral qualities that make the good judge, rather than eminent mental attainments.
> Very, very seldom in practice is a judge required to make an epoch making decision. The routine of office is a track well trodden. All along, the road is blazed.
> A businessman can go wrong easily, because he is often sailing an unchartered sea. But with a judge, the foghorns are within hearing distance, and the bells of the lifebuoys sound their continual alarm.
> A judge is very fortunate in having counsel on both sides explain the case to him at great length. Considering the constant tutorship and the plenitude of advice that he enjoys, there is really no excuse for the ignorance or the mistakes of a judge.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Thank you, Judge Dehnke. The Chair will recognize the vice chairman of the committee, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the majority report in the committee proposal. I'd like to call the delegates' attention to the fact that it has been pointed out here, perhaps by accident, that by implication the committee intends to confer upon the supreme court a power to suspend or remove judges inferior to the supreme court that it does not now have.

It is not my understanding as a supporter of the committee's position, that the committee intends to enlarge at all upon the powers that the supreme court has had in this case for many years, and it should be stated clearly on the record, at least to satisfy me as a supporter of this position, that we do not intend to confer upon the supreme court the powers to remove judges from office.

We have provided in Committee Proposal 96, at page 3, section h, the manner in which a judge can be removed or suspended from his office. We already adopted in the committee of the whole, I believe, a general provision having to do with impeachment procedure that would provide for the impeachment of judges. It should be kept clearly in mind that there are 3 ways that a judge might be taken out of his office either temporarily or permanently.

The first, of course, and the most serious, would be by impeaching him from office, and he would be impeached in the same manner as any public official at least above the county level and we have already provided for this in a provision in the existing constitution and in the proposed constitution. Now, impeachment arises out of misconduct affecting the office of misfeasance, malfeasance and nonfeasance. However, there might be causes for removal of a judge or for the suspension of his powers that fall short of official misconduct on his part. And for that reason, the judiciary committee has provided in section h of Committee Proposal 96 that a judge may be removed or suspended by joint action of the governor and 2/3 of both houses of the legislature. In other words, to suspend the powers of a member of the judiciary, a clear and distinct part of the 3 major portions of our government, you have to have the joint action of both other parts of the government, the legislative and the executive.

Now, within the contemplation of that section are removals for such things as physical incapacity that the judge might not be in a position to appreciate himself. Certainly you wouldn't impeach a judge because he had a nervous breakdown or a mental breakdown that made him incapable of carrying on, but also made him incapable of making a decision to resign from his office, but you wouldn't want to be in a position where you would have to continue him in office to the detriment of the public. So the governor, with the joint action of 2/3 of both houses, can remove him from office without attaching to him the stigma of an impeachment proceeding. This removal could, on its face, say that there is nothing wrong in the sense that the judge has performed any dishonest act but that he is just no longer able to perform his functions. By the same token, there might be an occasion—and I can't think of an example offhand—where a judge might be suspended for a period of time, and again it would take this same sort of formal action. So it is the view of the committee in recognition of coverage in the constitution of the 3 types of removal or suspension, that it is not necessary to consider that as a part of this particular section.

What we have to realize here is that we are arguing the same principle that we argued with respect to section a and section b. We are arguing here really about what the power of the supreme court is going to be to superintend the activities of these courts inferior to the court.

I should hope that the proponents of this amendment did not intend by this language to say that the supreme court could not, when it was called to their attention that something was wrong in the judiciary system, institute an investigation and on the basis of that investigation recommend either the impeachment, removal or suspension of a judge. To make it very clear, I would like to ask a question, Mr. Chairman, and yield for an answer to Mr. McAllister in this regard and perhaps we might reach a meeting of the minds with respect to the language involved here.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford yields to Mr. McAllister for a response to a question.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Ford, there is no intent on the part of the minority group to prevent the disciplining of judges. The only thing we feel that the supreme court should not have is the right to remove a judge. And from your reasoning and your conversation here in talking to the delegates, it would appear that you say that you don't object to a provision in the constitution against the removal or suspension of judges. And if that is what you have said, as I understood it—was that this section does not contemplate the removal or suspension of judges—and if it doesn't contemplate that, I can see no reason why the committee, the majority of the committee, or yourself, would object to these 2 items being in the section of the proposal before us. If my understanding is right and you are willing that it specifically set forth that the court will not have the right to remove or suspend a judge, we are willing to, with that exception, let the proposal as you have it, stand.

MR. FORD: Could I ask Delegate McAllister if he feels there is any danger that including the language, "it being provided that the supreme court shall not have the power to remove or to suspend a judge" might have read into it this kind of a connotation: that since we have taken it upon ourselves to specify that they do not have this power, that this might imply that they do not have the power to investigate, initiate or otherwise inquire into matters necessary for the removal or suspension of a judge?

MR. McALLISTER: No. I say they have that right. I have no objection to that and I don't think the other members of the minority do. In other words, what we object to is a man being accused, complained against and tried by the court without having any opportunity to appeal. In other words, that doesn't sound like America to me. If you are willing to have added to the body of this section that the court shall not remove or suspend a judge, or words to that effect, that's all we want. And we certainly say that they have a right to investigate, discipline and complain to the proper authorities, asking for the removal of the judge.

At the present time if a man is impeached, he has a right to appeal to the court. That's my understanding at least. In other words, he has a second chance. But under the setup, if the supreme court, as they have indicated through their attorney, has unlimited power, then a man is brought in and tells his story, and whatever they do is final. And I don't think that is an American right or an American way of life.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. McAllister, don't you believe that the fact that we have provided in 2 other places in the constitution for the method of removal or suspension of judges is sufficient to afford the kind of protection that you want?

MR. McALLISTER: No, I don't; because, on February 7, through their attorney they claim they have unlimited power. That's the attorney's statement, the attorney for the court administrator who is under the direction and control of the supreme court. And if you mean what you say, you should have no objection to providing in this article that the supreme court shall not have the right to suspend or remove a judge. And if you can tell me in what way that is inconsistent with any other provision in the constitution, then I will be willing to listen.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I want to accede to the fact that I do think that Mr. McAllister and I are coming to a meeting of the minds on what we intend to accomplish. But to further question Mr. McAllister, would in your opinion the inclusion of the language at this particular place—and by that I mean in juxtaposition with the general grant of superintending power to the supreme court—would this language have any danger of being used to prevent the supreme court from instituting proceedings such as in the Huff case,—

MR. McALLISTER: No, because—

MR. FORD: Let me finish.

MR. McALLISTER: Pardon me.

MR. FORD: —which might have, if the circumstances were more severe, ultimately ended up with a recommendation from them to the governor and the legislature that the judge be removed from office?

MR. McALLISTER: No. I would say the supreme court has that right. I think anybody has the right to recommend and I certainly don't feel by adding these 2 words to the section in any way prevents the supreme court—and I make that as a positive statement. The only thing is we don't want hazy language here that doesn't define things because in view of the supreme court's own statement—or at least the attorney for them—that they have unlimited power, it should be restricted so they can't invade the impeachment proceedings area except by making a complaint to the governor or to the legislature. They certainly would have that right. We don't contend that they don't have that right.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Would you have any objection to modifying this language to make it equally as clear that the supreme court would in no way be restricted from taking any proceeding short of the actual removal itself in furtherance of removal or suspension?

MR. McALLISTER: I would say this, that the supreme court would have the right to recommend to either the governor or the legislature that any judge should be removed from office.

MR. FORD: But could the supreme court hold a hearing and go into the facts?

MR. McALLISTER: I would say they should not go into the facts, in other words, have a hearing on it, because then they've made a determination.

MR. FORD: Now aren't we down to the nub of this? Isn't this really it, Mr. McAllister, that you believe that this language would prevent the supreme court from holding a hearing on the question of the fitness of a judge to continue in his office?

MR. McALLISTER: I would go this far, that if the legislature requested them to hold a hearing, then I'd say they have a right. In other words, the thing is here, if the supreme court prejudges a matter of this kind—they should certainly have the right to report the facts that come to them to the legislature and let the legislature or the governor act on those facts. But if they have a hearing and determine in advance that the man is guilty of the charges, then isn't the legislature mandated to impeach that individual? In other words, the man is entitled to a fair hearing and if guilt is predetermined by the supreme court, then of course he can't have a fair hearing. It's plastered all over the papers that the man is guilty and the supreme court has so determined. So I would say they would have the right to complain and present the facts that they find, with no recommendation.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair would advise the gentleman from Taylor and the gentleman from Bad Axe that their colloquy has apparently attracted amendments. We now have a proposed substitute for the second half of the Donnelly-Leibrand-McAllister amendment and we also have an amendment to it. Might the Chair suggest that the secretary read the amendments which have been filed in the hope that it might expedite proceedings.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. G. E. Brown has offered the following substitute amendment for the second part of the amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 3, after "rule" by changing the period to a colon and inserting "Provided however, No judge shall be removed from office or suspended except as provided by this constitution.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford, I believe that you had the floor. Would you like to yield to Mr. Brown for a discussion of his amendment or do you prefer to retain it?

MR. FORD: I'd like to yield to Mr. Brown if I could then yield to the chairman of the committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: We will follow that order. Mr. Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I shall be very brief. It seems that the amendment that I have proposed places the removal and suspension provisions together where they belong, that is, as Mr. Ford has mentioned, in section h of Committee Proposal 96. The language, however, here would seem to modify the language of the committee proposal insofar as it relates to the superintending power of the supreme court. This should cast away the windmills and let the removal and suspension power be set forth in the constitution where it should, that is, in section h of Committee Proposal 96.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford now yields to the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, might I inquire of the secretary whether or not the question has been divided?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question has been divided and will be presented separately when we get to it. At the moment the matter before the body is the Brown substitute for the second half of the Donnelly-Leibrand-McAllister amendment.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: My amendment, of course, also struck the first language, the language in the first clause. But since it is going to be divided and voted upon separately, upon consultation with the secretary, that part of my amendment was not read. My amendment totally would do away with the first clause about the dockets, et cetera and then change the language in the last. So if it is going to be divided, we could just as well vote upon it. It isn't necessary to do it twice by considering that first part of my amendment.

MR. WOOLFENDEN: A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Woolfenden.

MR. WOOLFENDEN: If I understood Mr. McAllister correctly a few moments ago and if he were speaking for his associates with this amendment, he withdrew the first part. Did I understand you correctly, Mr. McAllister?

MR. McALLISTER: That was my intention. I want to speak to my associates.

MR. WOOLFENDEN: Can I get that cleared up, Mr. Chairman? Mr. McAllister says it was his intention to withdraw the first part of the proposed amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair may have missed it in the course of the colloquy, Mr. Woolfenden. May the Chair ask Judge Leibrand to comment?

MR. LEIBRAND: I concede to concur in the withdrawal of the first part.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly, your cosponsors of the amendment have suggested the withdrawal of the first portion of the amendment. What is your pleasure?

MISS DONNELLY: I'm sorry. I was trying to get Mr. Brown's language. My pleasure as to the word "dockets", you mean, in the appellate court? I have no objection to that being removed.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The sponsors of the amendment withdraw the first portion of their amendment and the secretary will read the balance of the minority report amendment proposed by Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister.

SECRETARY CHASE: The second part of the amendment as proposed by Miss Donnelly and Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister is as follows:

1. Amend page 2, line 3, after "rule" by changing the period to a comma and inserting "it being provided that the supreme court shall not have the power to remove or suspend a judge.".

For this amendment Mr. Garry Brown offers the following substitute amendment:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the substitute amendment offered by Mr. Garry Brown.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Excuse me just a moment, Mr. Hutchinson. The Chair would advise Mr. Mahinske who has also filed an amendment that Mr. Brown's substitute was on the desk first and that it is therefore the matter currently before the house.

Mr. Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to ask Mr. Brown of Kalamazoo a question with regard to his amendment. Keeping in mind the saying, which I think is true, that the constitution is what the supreme court says it is, when you would say that they can't remove a judge except as provided in this constitution, this seems to get so we're going around in a circle here right back to the problem that we have immediately before us. They apparently think they've got constitutional power to do that now. They might think they had constitutional power in the future if your amendment were adopted. Is that not true?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hutchinson. I think not, Mr. Hutchinson. The purpose in putting the language in at this point is to in effect limit the general language of the superintendency of the court, or the superintending powers of the supreme court over the courts.

The rule of constitutional interpretation, as I recall it, is that where there is an express provision relative to such things as removal or suspension—these are the provisions relative to removal or suspension which will be spelled out in section h of Committee Proposal 96—there is no power to imply a greater power from the general wording of "superintendency of the courts." Does Mr. Hutchinson disagree with this constitutional interpretation?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown yields to Senator Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman, I would say that I would recognize the merit of his argument, that when we spell something out in particular, that it would take precedence over the general. But I am not at all certain that the Supreme Court of Michigan would interpret it the way you and I do, Mr. Brown, and I'd rather be specific.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will advise the several gentlemen who have sought recognition that while there were some 7 speakers waiting recognition on the main question, the Chair started a new list when Mr. Brown's substitute amendment was proposed and now 5 speakers are seeking recognition on the substitute, the first of whom is the gentleman from Bay City, Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: May I make an inquiry of Mr. Brown?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Yes, Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Is it the intent of your amendment to prevent the Michigan supreme court under any circumstances from removing a judge or suspending a judge?

MR. G. E. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Leibrand, the intent of my amendment is to put the removal and suspension provisions in the place where they belong, that is in section h of Committee Proposal 96, which will be the section of the constitution dealing with removal and suspension. The only reason the language is put in this section at this time is to clearly set forth that this language later on relative to removal and suspension is the language relative to removal and suspension; that the superintending power of the courts in the supreme court does not in any way limit, extend or affect the removal and suspension provisions of the constitution as they will appear in the constitution.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a yes or no answer to my question? Is it the intent of the gentleman's amendment to prevent or prohibit the supreme court from removing a judge or suspending him?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. LEIBRAND: Will you answer yes or no, please.

MR. G. E. BROWN: I don't think a responsive answer would be a yes or no answer, Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: In other words, you don't know whether that's your intent or not. Is that what the gentleman is telling us? (laughter)

MR. G. E. BROWN: I am well aware of what my intent is, Judge Leibrand, and I think when we get to section h, you'll find out.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Might the Chair request, Your Honor, that you conduct your cross examination through the Chair? (laughter)

MR. LEIBRAND: I think I have sufficient answer. I don't think I know what the amendment means, and I really feel in my heart the sponsor doesn't, and I yield.

MR. G. E. BROWN: I would like to answer Judge Leibrand, however, Mr. Chairman, if I may. And that is that—

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman will yield for that purpose. The floor was Judge Leibrand's. (laughter)

MR. LEIBRAND: I will yield.

MR. G. E. BROWN: If Judge Leibrand wishes to tie it down even further, there is a very simple way he can do so, by merely adding the word "express" or "expressly provided".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: May I inquire, through the Chair, if Mr. Brown desires to prevent the supreme court from suspending or removing judges, what is the objection to saying so specifically?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Does the gentleman care to answer, Mr. Brown? The gentleman does not care to answer. (laughter) The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Calhoun, Mr. Everett. Mr. Everett passes. Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: I would be opposed to this amendment simply because by the language we are going beyond the constitution where we state "as provided by this constitution" because we provide in Committee Proposal 42, section e, that any officer may be removed as prescribed by law. This thing is still wide open. And actually what I am opposed to is the supreme court being in a position to remove a judge. This language does not cure my objection. I would be opposed to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Bad Axe, Mr. McAllister. The Chair in doing so will express his gratitude to Mr. McAllister for the gift of a splendid cigar which the Chair expects to enjoy hereafter. (laughter)

MR. McALLISTER: I hope you enjoy it while you're here, Mr. Chairman. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair trusts that the sense of Mr. McAllister's remarks is that "I can't take it with me." (laughter)

MR. McALLISTER: Right. Mr. Brown, what is wrong with the language at the bottom of line 11 in regard to the removal or suspension of a judge?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Does the gentleman care to answer?

MR. G. E. BROWN: I would be happy to answer, Mr. Chairman, if I knew of what he was speaking.

MR. McALLISTER: Doesn't that clearly express what is intended?

MR. G. E. BROWN: What language are you referring to, Mr. McAllister?

MR. McALLISTER: Starting on line 10, "The supreme court. . . ."

MR. G. E. BROWN: The minority report, the committee report, or what?

MR. McALLISTER: The minority report.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The secretary will read the Donnelly-Leibrand-McAllister minority report amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment offered by the minority is:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Your question, again, Mr. McAllister?

MR. McALLISTER: Is there any misunderstanding as to what that means?

MR. G. E. BROWN: No. I think it's clear enough.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Muskegon, Mr. Hanna.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Mr. Chairman, the only comment I had was that Mr. Brown referred to another proposal and that proposal deals with only removal. In the present language Mr. Brown does not refer to suspension. Therefore, I don't think we should rely on that section. If it develops that this section, whether amended or not, and the future proposal as we ultimately adopt it is in conflict, after this extended debate, I suspect that with Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Higgs and a couple other lawyers, including Judge Dehnke, on style and drafting we will prevent the conflict. But I do think that the minority report amendment and the Brown amendment ought to be defeated. It seems to me that there is a different problem in the question of removal and the question of suspension.

If the supreme court finds that a man has for some reason not acted in accordance with good judicial practice, the supreme court, under investigation, decides he ought to be suspended, then he ought to be suspended pending impeachment. I can see the objection to a single body being prosecutor, investigator, juror and dispenser of the penalty. But certainly if they found a judge who was pocketing all the money turned in to him or doing something which was wrong, impeachment proceedings cannot take place—the trial on impeachment cannot take place—until after the legislature is out of session. Certainly there ought to be power in the supreme court to so supervise their courts as to suspend that judge and then refer it to the governor for removal or refer it to the legislature for impeachment under the other article dealing with removal from office. I think that the sponsors of this amendment ought to give due consideration to dividing this question because I certainly could vote that the supreme court could suspend and I could vote against giving the supreme court power to remove; but there are 2 different problems here.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Stevens.

MR. STEVENS: I have a question, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Brown, would you answer this question, please? Does not your statement which says "except as provided by law" clearly imply that under some circumstances the supreme court would have that power?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Stevens, are you referring to removal or suspension?

MR. STEVENS: Both.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Well, I can't believe that any lawyer here feels that the supreme court shouldn't have the power of suspension under certain circumstances. The only point that I am making is that the removal and suspension powers should be combined together and that should be in the section dealing with that subject matter. The whole question that has arisen here today has been over the language which is as follows, "The supreme court shall have: a general superintending control over all courts. . . ." You are not worried, I am sure, about the "power to issue, hear, and determine prerogative and remedial writs; appellate jurisdiction as provided by supreme court rule."

The reason that the amendment has been filed is because of this first wording, the "general superintending control over all courts. . . ." The fear is that this will give it the removal and suspension powers. All my amendment would do is say that removal and suspension powers will be taken care of in another section of the constitution, which will be done; and that the general superintending power of the court—that language shall not be directory or give any greater authority to the court or do anything that is not otherwise permitted in the constitution as relates to the removal and suspension powers.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Brown, I heard your explanation before. Would you care to answer yes or no, that the provision "except as provided by law" clearly implies that under certain circumstances the court would have the power either to remove or to suspend a judge?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: I am inclined in a bit of haste to say that in view of the conduct and the arguments that some of the lawyers have made that the supreme court should have the power to both remove and suspend.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize Mr. Bonisteel at this time, Judge Leibrand. Mr. Bonisteel.

MR. BONISTEEL: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, this probably could be considered historically but since the language which is being discussed here relates to section 4 of article VII of the constitution, in using the language, "The supreme court shall have: a general superintending control over all inferior courts, . . ." and the rest of that paragraph, I might state to you that several years ago the supreme court of this state, because of what they believed was misconduct of certain judges here in Michigan, wanted to know whether they had the power to remove under this provision or whether they had the inherent powers to remove judges as a court, and a brief was requested upon the question of their right and inherent power to remove judges, and a long brief was filed and there was a meeting in chambers with the court at that time. And the court at that time agreed that it did not have inherent powers of removal and did not believe it had the powers of removal under this particular section of this constitution. This is historic, at least as far as upon the question before us, and this is from my own observation, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Bay, Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I'd like to concur with Delegate Hanna in that I think that this question should be divided, the question of removal or suspension, and I'm not sure it should be divided on this substitute amendment. I would recommend opposing this particular amendment and passing on to the original minority amendment and dividing that.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Bay, Mr. Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Might I address a question to Delegate Bonisteel?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: You may, Judge Leibrand, if the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. LEIBRAND: How long ago, Mr. Bonisteel, did this historic conference as to the power of the supreme court occur?

MR. BONISTEEL: I think it was over 12 years ago.

MR. LEIBRAND: Thank you. And the composition of the court has changed considerably since then?

MR. BONISTEEL: Well, there are some new faces on the court now, that's correct.

MR. LEIBRAND: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the substitute amendment for the Donnelly-Leibrand-McAllister minority report amendment offered by Mr. G. E. Brown. The Chair recognizes Dr. Nord.

MR. NORD: Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise a question and hope that the committee chairman can answer it to my satisfaction. It has occurred to me after hearing the debate that any language that we insert at this point could do harm—I don't see that it could do any good—because there is language elsewhere stating what the general power of removal shall be; but it seems to me it could do harm and I ask this question: suppose the supreme court issues a prerogative writ. We know they have the power to do so. It says so elsewhere and everyone is willing to let them have that power. They issue a prerogative writ to a judge of a lower court, ordering him to do a certain thing or produce certain records and so on—a judicial act—and he absolutely refuses to do it. He just won't do it. He keeps the papers that he should forward to the supreme court or refuses to make a decision and he stands there as a stumbling block and nothing can be done. Now at that point it occurs to me there must be some power to punish any person, whether he is a judge or whatever, if he refuses to obey a supreme court order. I wonder if as a matter of straightforward common law, at that point, whether the supreme court wouldn't have the power and whether they don't need the power to take whatever remedial action shall be needed and if that should include suspension or even removal, if that should be the necessary remedy, shouldn't they have the power?

Therefore, the precise question I have in mind is this: aren't there some cases, some situations in connection with the prerogative writ wherein the supreme court should have a power to discipline, which might include suspension, or it might even include removal? Would the chairman care to answer?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I can state that insofar as the committee was concerned, we discussed all of this matter very fully. I suppose one thing that could happen, he would stand in contempt and they might be able to incarcerate him until he complied with the order of the court. He might stay there from a day to a year. I can't think of any case offhand where this has happened. The Huff case has been mentioned. This was a case testing the right of the court to assign a judge to another circuit and it involved a possibility of contempt. I would agree that a prerogative writ or a remedial writ—if a prerogative writ were issued to require this—that certainly, I personally would agree that the court should have this power.

MR. NORD: Mr. Chairman, may I then try to get the issue a little straighter? Suppose they should decide that the lower court judge is in contempt and they decide to incarcerate him, everything else having failed. Now the judge is no longer able to act as a judge. He certainly has been suspended in a practical sense. But unless another judge can be substituted for him, there can't be any way to conduct the court's business. Therefore, shouldn't they have the power to remove him at that point? In other words, isn't there some possibility that there would be a need to remove or suspend and that we should be very careful about putting language such as we see it there that the supreme court shall not have the power to do a certain thing when we can't be certain they might not need it at certain times?

MR. DANHOF: I will agree. I might state, Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of those members who are not lawyers, we on the committee have gone through this, and over and over—you see what happens when you try to add language or you try to accept what is provided in the constitution—and we finally came right back to the language which has stood since approximately 1850. We have said if it has lasted this long, it will certainly serve us in the future. I would recommend the defeat of both of the amendments and would hope we could vote with part of it having been removed.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: May I address a question to Mr. Danhof?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. LEIBRAND: Did I understand the chairman to say that it was the opinion of the committee that under the language used in the committee report, the supreme court did have the power to remove or suspend a judge?

MR. DANHOF: I don't think the committee ever reached that particular decision, Judge.

MR. LEIBRAND: I thought I gathered that in your reply to Dr. Nord.

MR. DANHOF: Dr. Nord said he thought that they should have this. I merely gave my personal assent to what he thought.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Just a few words and I'm done for the day. There has been a great deal of discussion about the safety in which we have lived for the last 112 years, the fact that the supreme court had not removed or suspended a judge under this provision in the constitution. Now, to begin with, that doesn't mean very much. The provision lay there unused, I think they said 112 years. The provision lay there unused for 102 years. Then suddenly out of the void came the Huff case, which I think was very properly brought and I think the supreme court had the absolute right to discipline as it did discipline. But that brought the question out into the open. Nobody had ever really thought about the possibility of the extent of the powers of the supreme court along this line until the Huff case arose. Then after the Huff case in 1952 we went along for another 7 years with our questions about the extent of the disciplinary power of the supreme court unanswered. Then along came these rules which I have read to you, in part, adopted on June 5, 1959, which deal, as I pointed out this morning, not only with the official conduct of a judge, but the right of the supreme court to discipline a judge because of his personal habits, his personal conduct, his violation of the canon of ethics of the American bar association, and that canon of ethics may not be in accord with the views of the state of Michigan at all. As a matter of fact, I know many of the canons of judicial and legal ethics with which the people do not agree even by a majority.

So now we are faced with the situation as it really exists. The first 102 years it wasn't called to their attention. The next 7 years we had no practical experience with it; but when these rules come out and say they can discipline an elected judge, and as has been expressed here by several of the speakers, they believe that under these disciplinary powers the supreme court now can remove or suspend an elected judge, it seems to me that it is time to give some attention to this matter.

This is one thing we can't leave to the legislature. We can't leave it to the legislature because as I read you this morning, the supreme court has announced that they don't have to recognize the legislature. They say any statutory provision that is inconsistent with any provision in these rules shall be considered as superseded by these rules. If the legislature should pass a statute governing the discipline of a judge, the supreme court under its declaration here, would have the right and undoubtedly would absolutely ignore that statute. And I say that we are confronted with a problem that is not only emerging; it has with the introduction of these rules actually emerged.

Since the legislature can't do anything with the problem, there is only one body in all the state of Michigan that can do something with it and that is this convention, and I believe this convention should do something about it. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the substitute amendment offered by Mr. Garry Brown for the minority report amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. The secretary will read the substitute amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Brown's substitute is:

[The substitute amendment was again read by the secretary. For text, see above, page 1276.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Those in favor of the substitute will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The substitute amendment is not adopted. I believe, Mr. Secretary, there are further amendments to the minority report amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Everett offers the following amendment to the amendment:

1. Amend the amendment, after the last word "judge" by inserting a comma and "except after appropriate notice and hearing"; so that the amendment proposed by the minority would be to insert a proviso, "it being provided that the supreme court shall not have the power to remove or suspend a judge, except after appropriate notice and hearing."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Everett, the Chair will recognize the mover, Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, I don't doubt but what just about everything has been said on the subject and I shall certainly try to confine my remarks to the few words of this amendment. I think Mr. Nord has suggested that there probably should be the power within the supreme court in extreme cases to remove a judge. Mr. Hanna has pointed out that the other amendment does not permit suspension but only permits removal for cause.

Now, frankly, I don't think this amendment is needed because I can't conceive that the supreme court would fail to give a proper hearing to a man and I can't conceive that he would not have a proper review if they did fail to give it to him. But in support of their provision, Mr. McAllister and Judge Leibrand have suggested that the court might be arbitrary. So if there is any doubt about it, let's remove the doubt and say, "You may not be arbitrary. You must be fair. If you're not, the federal courts will protect the right of the individual."

Mr. McAllister, incidentally, has said that the real meaning of their amendment is to go much further than removal and to deny the court the right to even have a hearing and inquire into the facts. I, for one, cannot conceive that the supreme court should be so limited. I think if they sincerely believe that the man is entitled to a fair day in court and a fair review of that decision by other courts, this will give it to them and it should solve their problem.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Everett, the Chair recognizes Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: The minority opposes the Everett amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am now compelled to say something which I had hoped I might avoid saying. Of course, nobody would expect that the supreme court would cite a judge without going through the formality of a notice and a trial. Let me come back to the Huff case—and it's true, as Judge Leibrand has pointed out—the necessity for this amendment has risen only in the last 2 or 3 years because of the increasing indications that the supreme court, with the support of a certain portion of the organized bar, was getting around to the point of believing that it had unlimited power.

It had been recognized for generations that every circuit judge, when he could spare the time from the work in his own circuit, was duty bound to accept assignments to other circuits where help was needed. But the Huff case did raise one brand new question. That was whether the supreme court had the authority to take a judge elected in a certain circuit primarily for the purpose of serving the people of that circuit and acting as a trial judge in cases in that circuit where there was plenty of work to keep him busy, had the authority to send him out to some other circuit and send other judges in to do the work in his own circuit. That was a new question.

I can't see for the life of me why anyone should have questioned Judge Huff's right to raise the issue. His position was in substance, "I decline to recognize this order until the supreme court has, in an orderly fashion, considered the question of its authority in that respect. If it decides that it has that authority, then I will obey the order." In spite of that attitude, he was painted as a recalcitrant and rebellious judge. He was hailed before the court and the whole proceeding indicated that the entire approach had been one of arbitrariness. Instead of recognizing that he had the right to raise that point and to have it passed on in an orderly fashion, he was found guilty of wilful disobedience, and he was talked to when the penalty was imposed in a manner that I think has seldom been equalled in what was said to a criminal of the worst kind when he stood before the court for sentence.

That, as I viewed it, demonstrated to me that the whole proceeding had been carried on in an arbitrary spirit. It was a hearing in form only and, I think, emphasizes the necessity of putting something of this kind in now that we are clearly put on notice that the court claims that power or is likely to claim it.

I'd like to add this admonition, fellow delegates, we cannot afford to have the word go out or the impression go out to the people of the state of Michigan that this constitution which we are attempting to hammer out, especially this judicial article, is being written by and for lawyers and judges.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Everett to the Donnelly-Leibrand-McAllister amendment. On that amendment Mr. Martin seeks recognition.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Chairman, I didn't expect to speak on this subject either but apparently the question is fairly squarely before us as to what the powers of the supreme court ought to be in matters of a kind where a judge does not or will not do what he is expected to do. I don't like to talk on the other side of the question from Judge Leibrand and Judge Dehnke but I think it is necessary and desirable that the delegates, particularly those who are not lawyers, understand what the real problem was, particularly in the Huff case. As I understand the facts, it was an aggravated case. Surely no court is going to act on matters of this kind unless the case is extremely aggravated. It is my understanding that the problem was that decisions were not being made in that court and that they hadn't been made in that court on certain questions for a number of years and the complaints were so numerous and so strenuous from the bar and others and litigants who were entitled to have decisions made, that finally the supreme court acted to exercise its disciplinary powers. The question then is, what disciplinary powers should the court have? It is my understanding of the amendment here proposed that in effect it would strike out from the powers of the court any real power to exercise discipline within the court system.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Martin, the question is the Everett amendment to the Donnelly-Leibrand-McAllister amendment.

MR. MARTIN: I appreciate that. The Everett amendment is a clarifying amendment, I think, in that it makes it clear that the court would not exercise this power without proper due process, that is, without notice and hearing. I think it presents this problem clearly to the delegates. So the question then becomes this, can the court remove or suspend? And they are really 2 different questions. Perhaps the amendment should be divided and the delegates should vote on them separately. But the question is, should the court have the power to remove or suspend in a case where a judge simply will not do or is incapable of doing what he is supposed to do?

We had another case over in Mr. McAllister's district where, I understand, the judge was totally—and I mean totally—mentally incompetent for a period of 4 years and there was absolutely nothing apparently that could be done or that the court felt it wanted to exercise its authority to do to replace this judge. It was necessary to get other judges to come in and carry his load and nothing apparently was done or could be done.

This is the basic problem before the delegates and it is one on which there are clearly differing views and views of distinguished attorneys on both sides. But the amendment would strike out—Mr. Everett's amendment would clarify this question and the amendment if ultimately voted down would clearly say that the court had no ultimate authority to even investigate these matters and certainly not to either suspend or remove.

It seems to me that Mr. Everett's amendment should be approved and then that the question should be divided on the matter of suspension or removal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Everett to the minority report amendment. The Chair recognizes that there are other speakers, but wants you all to understand what is before us. To add the words "except after appropriate notice and hearing" and on that amendment the Chair recognizes Judge Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: I wanted to merely emphasize what has been discussed by other speakers, the right of anyone against whom a judgment of any kind is entered to an appeal. If a circuit judge acts in an arbitrary manner, the person injured by it has an appeal to the supreme court but, in such case as Judge Huff's, there was no appeal, nothing he might say about the manner in which the investigation had been instituted and a hearing conducted that would give him any relief.

Throughout this discussion there have been indications and suggestions that the real reason for what happened in that case was something else, failure to make decisions. Oh, how much simpler it would have been for the court administrator to have filed a motion in the supreme court, reciting that there was neglect of duty in this respect and asking the court to make an appropriate order.

I think the basic question here is whether or not the court shall have that power under any circumstances or at all, power of removal, at least.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize Mr. Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, without getting into the question as to whether or not the superintending power includes the power of suspension or removal or ought to include the power of suspension or removal, it seems to me what we have here is a matter of whether or not civil rights are to be accorded to judges. And I would concur with the Everett amendment, that certainly before the supreme court proceeds with regard to a judge there ought to be fair notice and fair hearing, and that is what I understand to be the thrust of the amendment now before us, and I would concur in that. Certainly, the court ought to set an example for obedience to due process for following by all the rest of the citizens.

With regard to the main question as to whether or not the superintending power does include removal or suspension, that can then be decided when that comes. But I certainly would concur with the Everett amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the Everett amendment, the Chair recognizes Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Everett, do I understand the meaning of your amendment to be that before removal or suspension, that the court should give the defendant a notice and an opportunity to be heard?

MR. EVERETT: Yes.

MR. McALLISTER: Isn't that inconsistent with your position this morning that the rule had no intention of removing or suspending a judge?

MR. EVERETT: I didn't take any such position this morning, Mr. McAllister. I'll tell you very frankly, I did not conceive that the language did what you said it should not do. When you brought it to our attention that it possibly had said that and you now wish to take the power away, I felt if the power was there it ought to remain there.

MR. McALLISTER: Your position is now then that the supreme court has the right to remove or suspend a judge? Is that right?

MR. EVERETT: I don't know whether they do or not, Mr. McAllister. But if they do — I don't honestly know whether they do or not.

MR. McALLISTER: Now, as a lawyer, do you feel that a man who is charged — let's say a judge is charged with some matter of personal practices or improper conduct of some kind, that the supreme court should have a right to remove or suspend that individual without a right to appeal from the supreme court's decision?

MR. EVERETT: As I said when I offered the amendment, I cannot conceive that the supreme court would deny him fair opportunity to be heard. If you think they might, this would prevent them from doing it. And I am certain, as an attorney, that they could not deny him a fair hearing and remove him from office and thus by-pass an appeal to the federal courts. If you think it takes this language to assure an appeal to the federal courts, then I say put it in, because he absolutely should have a right to know that his rights as an individual are fully protected. That's why I offered the amendment. I don't share your suspicions or fears, but let's remove them.

MR. McALLISTER: Let me ask this. Are you familiar with the fact that in the state of Michigan that a judicial office is not property and you cannot appeal, under the existing decisions, to a federal court?

MR. EVERETT: The provisions of due process which would be set forth here are provisions guaranteed to the citizens by the federal constitution. If they denied him those rights, if they didn't give him proper hearing, if they didn't give him proper notice, if they didn't conduct a fair hearing and properly so, he certainly would have a right of review in the federal courts.

MR. McALLISTER: What is your objection, Mr. Everett, to putting in these provisions so we will be sure that no man may be removed or suspended by the supreme court?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Gentlemen, the Chair thinks the colloquy is wandering somewhat from the point and trusts you can bring yourselves back to it. On the Everett amendment the Chair recognizes Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment more strongly now since Mr. Everett just spoke, than I did 10 minutes ago, when I asked to be recognized. Mr. Everett says that under the present language, absent all the amendments proposed here, he does not know whether the supreme court has the power to remove a judge. Now, just by virtue of his amendment here, if it is adopted, we are clearly giving the supreme court the power to remove a judge. That is what I am definitely opposed to.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair finds we now have 2 laymen seeking the opportunity to clarify this matter, (laughter) the first of whom is Mr. Arthur Elliott, whom the Chair will now recognize.

MR. A. G. ELLIOTT: Ladies and gentlemen, lawyers, judges — help! (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize Mr. Garry Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, when you said you saw there were 2 laymen waiting to be recognized if you were referring to me also, but I'd like to make it clear that the delegates will not be supporting a lay position; that I am also licensed to practice law in this state. I would like to only answer Mr. McAllister's remarks. First of all, I preface my remarks by saying, the very thing that my amendment was attempting to do is to not have this matter argued twice, which I am sure you can see is going to be done. We are now on the merits of whether or not the supreme court should have the right to remove, which I am sure will once again be raised in section h of Committee Proposal 96. But if we are going to argue anything twice, I guess we might as well argue this twice.

With respect to Mr. McAllister's remarks about the supreme court being prosecutor, judge, sentencing officer and everything else, I would like to point out to Mr. McAllister that the judges of the courts of record, of course, are the only elective officers in the state of Michigan that are not subject to recall. Now, whether or not this is a procedure which is more drastic than a recall action, which requires no misconduct whatsoever but can be merely done by the electorate, I can't believe that it is. If that is your argument — as I say, to get back to the basic question, however, I feel that we should be doing this in section h of Committee Proposal 96 rather than here in the first sentence of this section. I would suggest to the delegates that rather than debate it now and debate it again then, that we move on, that we vote on this amendment and vote on the minority amendment and move on with the work of the judicial article.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown, the Chair did not doubt your professional status. The other layman appears farther down on the list. The Chair will next recognize Judge Mosier speaking on the Everett amendment.

MR. MOSIER: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, ordinarily in human life, when we make up our minds to go somewhere and do something for a purpose, we want to know what the purpose is and what we are going to accomplish by it. It therefore becomes necessary for us in the determination of this question to find out what we already have and whether what we already have is sufficient and if it is, let it alone. If it isn't sufficient, we can amend it.

There seems to be some doubt about the question of the authority of somebody to remove a judge. Now just look at what our constitution today says — and I am referring to article IX, sections 1, 2, 4, 5 and 6, which provide for impeachment:

> The house of representatives shall have the . . . power of impeaching civil officers for corrupt conduct in office, or for crimes or misdemeanors; but a majority of the members elected shall be necessary to direct an impeachment.

Then the next section says that

> When an impeachment is directed, the house of representatives shall elect from its own body 3 members, whose duty it shall be to prosecute such impeachment. No impeachment shall be tried until the final adjournment of the legislature, when the senate shall proceed to try the same.

Now, section 4 says:

> No judicial officer shall exercise his office after an impeachment is directed until he is acquitted.

Then the next section says that — and this is important:

> The governor may make a provisional appointment to fill a vacancy occasioned by the suspension of an officer, until he shall be acquitted or until after the election and qualification of a successor.

Then the next section:

> For reasonable cause, which shall not be sufficient grounds for impeachment, the governor shall remove any judge on a concurrent resolution of 2/3 of the members elected to each house . . . ; and the cause for which such removal is required shall be stated at length in such resolution.

Now, it is clear — it must be clear — that the legislature has the power to impeach a judge. The governor has the power to remove a judge for causes less than impeachment.

Now let's take the case of a judge, and we'll assume one who is real bad, who might be embezzling moneys while he is acting in a judicial way, and the supreme court, through its officer, the court administrator, should find out that he was doing these things, the court would refer that matter to either the legislature or to the governor. But it would seem to me that while these proceedings are going on, that certainly the supreme court should have the right to suspend that judge from operating as a judge and it seems to me that under all these amendments that we've got here, that that is the goal that this convention should arrive at.

It is my opinion that the supreme court should not have the ultimate power of removing a judge. I think that that removal should have the right of an appeal and that the court should be in a position to act as an appellate court and give that judge his right of appeal from the governor or from the legislature. But in the interim, during the time that the proceedings are going, it seems to me the supreme court should have the power to suspend. That means that he doesn't lose his office; he doesn't lose his status; only he is prevented from operating as a judge.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ludington, Mr. Plank.

MR. PLANK: I rise to a layman's privilege, I think. I feel that we laymen are being discriminated against. It seems like at least we should have a layman presiding over this session. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Plank, there are times when the Chair agrees with you; (laughter) but it would be cruel and unusual punishment. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pontiac, Mr. King for what is hoped might be the last word on this subject. (laughter)

MR. KING: I make no such guarantee, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: You just happen to be the last one on the list at this point.

MR. KING: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, that the problem here is really whether or not we want an integrated court system. Yesterday it was decided by this body that the language, "The judicial power of the state is vested exclusively in one court of justice, . . . " was what we wanted to say. Now, this question of removal really should come up in Committee Proposal 96, but I guess there are some of us who can't wait. This is a lawyer's device, I might point out to the laymen. There are many lawyer's devices being used here. On this amendment, first of all it was stated that there wasn't notice of hearing. Well, this was kind of an emotional argument but it opened the door to let someone come in and tack on an amendment which obviously vitiates what was already said. You have to get used to these devices. And I am not saying that in a derogatory manner. I know you've all heard the story about the fellow who went by the tombstone and it said, "Here lies a lawyer and an honest man." And the fellow commented, "How could they get 2 into such a small plot?" (laughter)

Obviously, these kind of remarks are to be expected. This is not an exact science. It never was meant to be, I am sure. The real problem in the world is whether we live by the force of law or by the law of force. It is my opinion that it is the legal profession that holds back that thin line which keeps civilization from being overrun by something far worse.

I would be hopeful that we could pass by this thing at the present time and discuss it where we ought to discuss it, in Committee Proposal 96. I personally think that that's the place where we really will have the argument and that's the place where we ought to have the argument. I urge that we let the committee language stand until we reach that point.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair begs the pardon of the lady from Highland Park for not having realized she was seeking recognition when he made the comment about Mr. King being the last speaker. The Chair will at this time recognize the lady from Highland Park, Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: I requested it prior to that, Mr. Van Dusen, but I do forgive you. We lawyers are all naughty apparently here. I think, briefly, that some statements have been made which may confuse certain individuals. Mr. Martin said "clarify". If he meant by "clarify" not to improve what we mean here but to absolutely kill what we meant, that is true. As to vitiate, this is absolutely right, what Mr. King suggested, that it would kill it.

There is no question, in my opinion, but that Mr. Everett's amendment is to absolutely kill the meaning of the preceding section in our amendment. The meaning of the preceding section was very simple on its face. It means exactly what it says. This is the language that all, I think, can understand. And when we say we think the supreme court should not have the power to remove or suspend a judge, that is what it means. The supreme court is the highest court we have. This is the last spot than anybody can go to for relief. If you start at the supreme court, where do you go from there for relief?

I think an individual judge is entitled to be protected as he was originally in the 1908 constitution. Recent activities of the supreme court are beginning to chip away at what the 1908 constitution had. I think that we should preserve what protection the judges had under that constitution and not allow it to be removed and treated in the supreme court, and with less protection than the lowest criminal in this state has. We have provided an absolute right of appeal for a criminal, not leave or anything, to protect him. And now we are absolutely taking judges and giving them one hearing, and only one, if you would support Mr. Everett's amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Would Miss Donnelly yield to Mr. Mahinske?

MISS DONNELLY: Yes.

MR. MAHINSKE: I direct a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair here. I wonder if this is a proper amendment. It is completely in opposition to the intended thought of the amendment that it is amending.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will rule that it is in order, Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: Even though the adoption of this amendment would kill the amendment that it intends amending?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will rule that the extinction of the amendment is performed so subtly that the amendment is in order. It isn't the precise reverse. And the Chair will recognize Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: I certainly don't like to take this time but I deem it is absolutely necessary. The supreme court can only be removed by impeachment proceedings. I don't think the circuit court should be a second class citizen.

Mr. King talked here about that this wasn't the proper place for the amendment. We are talking about superintending control and 16 days ago the attorney for the court administrator said that the supreme court had unlimited control under that superintending control power. So this is definitely the proper place for this amendment.

Judge Mosier has raised a question as to how the court would be taken care of under circumstances that he presented. In the first place, if a man was guilty of embezzlement, he would be in jail. In the second place, under the powers the supreme court now has, they could assign another judge to his circuit and that judge would take care of the matter until the judge's problem was disposed of. So that the people are fully protected from any angle in event they cannot suspend the judge immediately.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the Everett amendment, the Chair will recognize Mr. Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman and members of this delegation, I don't know what your count of laymen here is right now, but I hope there are a few left because I would like to talk to them briefly. Being one myself, I hesitated to come up at this moment to get into this discussion. I'd like to point out on Mr. Leibrand's yellow sheet here defending his position, the use of the phrase "tilting with windmills"; I may be in that position of tilting with windmills.

I would like to say, however, that the expression of a unified court system has led me to be concerned, particularly when it says in the opening section of the judiciary article that the judicial power is vested in the supreme court. It seems to me that now they would like to also have the police power and I don't think that the police power rightfully belongs to them. I might be slightly in error but I don't think that is correct.

Judge Mosier's remarks have particularly impressed me with a solution to this problem. I think that as a layman I will support the Leibrand-Donnelly amendment and that I will vote against Mr. Everett's amendment because as we all know, it completely eliminates the effectiveness of the Leibrand-Donnelly amendment. I would support the Leibrand-Donnelly amendment and suggest that all of the processes that Judge Mosier outlined in the constitution are sufficient to take care of the judges who do not do their duty in the way that they should do it, and that the supreme court should not have the authority to arbitrarily remove a judge. And I hope that there are enough lay people here that they will now look at it in this way and maybe we can get moving. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the Everett amendment, the Chair will recognize Mr. Habermehl.

MR. HABERMEHL: Mr. Chairman, I've been waiting for some of the distinguished speakers to respond to Mr. Elliott's appeal for help. I think probably there are many laymen in that position. We lawyers unfortunately spend half of our time talking to each other. The question, it seems to me, is an extremely simple one. On line 22, page 1, the statement starts, "The supreme court shall have: a general superintending control over all courts. . . ." That's all that is involved. The problem, of course, is complicated by the fact that what the language means depends upon the supreme court, who finally determines what the constitutional language means. In other words, left as it is, it means whatever the supreme court says it means. And what has complicated this matter is that in recent years, the supreme court has interpreted that language to mean that they have complete control over the actions or failure to act of all judges, not only the Huff case, but recently a few probate judges. And of course, the Donnelly-Leibrand amendment would say that they have such superintending control except that they might not suspend or dismiss — in other words, get rid of — a circuit judge that was elected by the people of his circuit. That in essence, I believe, is the argument that we are faced with.

The pending matter is that the supreme court might suspend this judge only after a hearing. Of course, again, whether or not this was an adequate hearing would depend upon the supreme court itself and that we have at least one instance where I think most of us feel the hearing was far from adequate. I hope that tends to clarify the issue to some extent.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the Everett amendment the Chair will recognize Judge Gadola.

MR. GADOLA: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, there, of course, has been too much said already. However, I believe that some of us should come to the defense of one man who has been maligned here continuously. No evidence here has been introduced as to any nefarious activities of that circuit judge that was before the supreme court. There are 6 judges sitting here that operated under the system that we had when we had a Michigan presiding circuit judge. We operated very, very well under that procedure. I have sat in court in pretty near every circuit in this state and so have the rest of these judges here. Month after month I've sat in court in Detroit, in traffic court, and in the circuit court there, and all the rest of these judges have. We never had any difficulty. If we didn't want to go when the presiding judge called us up and asked us if we could accept the job of going to some other circuit, we said no, we don't feel we want to go now. There wasn't any question about citing us anywhere. They merely called another judge and he came in, and then they got this administrator job here.

And the thing that I deplore today, the attack upon one circuit judge, an outstanding and a fine individual, that's been done here. And I hope that the people here are not really amenable to the law of slander. For the simple reason that if the supreme court believes in using a subterfuge to punish a man, then they are violating every right of every individual in this country.

When a man is charged with a crime, the law provides that he must be told minutely of what the charge is. When you go into civil court, you must file your pleadings to absolutely state your cause of action. This man here wasn't charged with the things that they are telling about him here. He was charged with refusing to obey the order of the supreme court to go to another circuit. That's all. And no one, in all the years that we have had this process of serving in the other circuits was anyone ever even reprimanded when he didn't accept the assignment that was given to him.

As I say, I served in Ontonagon; I served in Monroe; and that's just as far as I can go either north or south, I think, and I had no difficulty.

Something has been said about one judge that for 4 years was unable to sit. I sat in his court in Sandusky for months at a time to clear up the docket for him because of the fact that we knew that he needed the compensation that was paid to him and we substituted for him and took care of his court. Many judges refused to go there. When I went there, they asked me if I would only stay to clear up the entire docket, and I did for months, driving back and forth 100 miles a day from Flint, to take care of his court. So let's don't malign an individual. Let's not let the record show here that matter and don't let anyone say that the court hasn't changed because we operated under the old supreme court.

And you know, a peculiar thing occurred in a case of mine that went to the supreme court a short time ago and the opinion was written by one Justice Edwards, who has now left the court, and in reversing my decision — because I found the prior decision of the supreme court — he said the thinking of the court hasn't changed; it's the personnel. Remember that, all of you. (applause)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: We have one more speaker seeking recognition on the Everett amendment, Mrs. Conklin.

MRS. CONKLIN: I'm not going to speak. I want to ask a question. I'd like to ask a question of 2 people. I think Mr. Habermehl first touched on it lightly so I'd like to ask Mr. Habermehl if he'd answer me, who determines what is an appropriate notice and hearing?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Habermehl, does the gentleman care to answer?

MR. HABERMEHL: Of course, Mr. Chairman. Mrs. Conklin, the supreme court is the final court of last resort in the state. They will make the determination of whether or not the hearing was adequate. But the fact that they conduct the hearing also may slightly prejudice their judgment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mrs. Conklin, have you a further question?

MRS. CONKLIN: I got the answer I wanted.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the Everett amendment to the minority report amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. The secretary will read the Everett amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The Everett amendment is:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Do you have a bell?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The secretary will ring the bell. No division has been requested, Judge Leibrand. Did you request a division? There has been none requested so far.

MR. LEIBRAND: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand requests a division. Is the demand supported? It is supported. The secretary will ring the bell. Those in favor of the Everett amendment to the minority report amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the amendment offered by Mr. Everett, the yeas are 17; the nays are 79.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment to the amendment is not adopted. The secretary, I believe, has a further amendment to the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Mahinske offers the following amendment to the amendment:

1. Amend the amendment by adding a new paragraph at the end thereof to read as follows:

"This section shall in no way be construed as to prohibit the said court from investigating complaints against judges and making recommendations thereon to the proper authorities.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Mahinske, the Chair will recognize Mr. Mahinske and the Chair will respectfully request all speakers to confine themselves very closely to the subject at hand. Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: This amendment simply goes back an hour and a half and puts in writing what Judge Leibrand and Judge McAllister maintained that their thoughts were here, that they were not depriving the court of its power to investigate and make recommendations. So we are simply spelling out the fact that the court cannot remove or suspend judges but at the same time they do have the power to investigate complaints pertaining to judges.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, Judge Leibrand, do you seek recognition?

JUDGE LEIBRAND: Not at this time, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: No.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mrs. Conklin.

MRS. CONKLIN: I'm sorry but I don't now understand who are the proper authorities, Mr. Mahinske.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Does the gentleman care to answer, Mr. Mahinske?

MR. MAHINSKE: In the impeachment article we have set up various forms of impeachments and so forth, plus section e that says, "Any officer elected by a county, city, township or school district may be removed from office in such manner and for such cause as shall be prescribed by law, . . . " now, whichever authority as shall be prescribed by law or back to the house or senate or to the governor, as under Committee Proposal 96, section h.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I would respectfully oppose the amendment to the amendment, and the amendment. Again, we are trying to write the language. If we will go back — as the committee did, when it went over this and over this, we will leave it alone. If you want to take up the power of removal when we get to section h of Committee Proposal 96, that's the time to write it in. I respectfully urge that the amendment to the amendment be defeated and that we defeat the amendment so that we can pass this section. We've had all the debate and we can get the committee up to where we can get through this.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Mahinske, do you desire recognition further on your amendment?

MR. MAHINSKE: No. I'll yield to any other —

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister, do you desire to be recognized at this time?

MR. McALLISTER: No.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Mahinske, which the secretary will read. Excuse me, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I wish to support the amendment, but with the express understanding that I will then vote no against the amendment as amended. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Do you seek recognition at this time, Mr. Mahinske?

MR. MAHINSKE: No, sir.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Mahinske, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Mahinske's amendment is:

[The amendment to the amendment was again read by the secretary. For text, see above, page 1284.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Those in favor of the Mahinske amendment will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment to the amendment is not adopted. Mr. Secretary, have you another amendment?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Bonisteel offers the following amendment:

1. Amend the amendment after "to remove" by striking out "or suspend"; so that the proviso would read, "it being provided that the supreme court shall not have the power to remove a judge."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Bonisteel to the Donnelly-Leibrand-McAllister amendment, the Chair will recognize Mr. Bonisteel if you seek recognition on the amendment. Mr. Bonisteel does not seek recognition. Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: I would suggest that in the present form the minority would oppose the amendment. The word "suspension" has no definite term. There is nothing there to prevent the supreme court, if it desires to suspend for a year, 2 years, or for the rest of the term of the judge involved, and I don't think we want to muddy the waters any more. So I would object to the amendment in the present form.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Bonisteel, the Chair recognizes Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, if we've got to have an amendment at all, I think we should support the amendment which strikes the words "or suspend".

I really support the committee proposal, but if you feel that you have got to support the amendment to delete the power to remove, then I urge that you support this amendment in the event the original amendment is carried because regardless of what all of the judges here have said, we have rights involved not only of judges sitting in court, but there are rights of people who come before those judges. And in the event that you have a situation develop where the supreme court does not have this power to suspend, there may be an interval or a period of time in which the rights of children coming before a probate court or the rights of people and property may come before a court, cases in which the fact that mental competency may not be so extreme that the man is flat on his back in bed. There are many other situations which may not involve impeachment — and by the way, I would like to state that the power of the governor to remove for cause for less than impeachment is subject to 2/3 resolution of the legislature; it is not a simple thing—while I basically support the committee, if we've got to have this amendment at all and raise this problem, then I urge that you strike the words "or suspend".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Bonisteel to strike the words "or suspend" so that the language of the minority amendment proviso would then read, "provided the supreme court shall not have the power to remove a judge." On this question, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I think we are back around to the explanation that Bill Hanna gave so well a little while ago. This would result in impeachment in one fashion, removal by concurrence of the governor and the legislature and possible suspension by the court.

There are circumstances, Mr. Higgs has indicated, where it might be in the best interests of the public to temporarily suspend the powers of the judge to continue acting on the bench. There is some fear that the amendment presented by the minority with the word "suspend" in it might prevent the court from even issuing an order, restraining the lower court from continuing to act in a manner that is inimical to the best interests of the public. This would leave in the protection which I think Mr. McAllister wanted. It makes it clear that the supreme court can't on its own remove a judge from office, but wouldn't impair the ability of the supreme court to temporarily suspend his powers.

I think Mr. Bonisteel has finally come up with an answer that should satisfy everybody in this matter.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the Bonisteel amendment, the Chair will recognize Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ford, I think what I said previously that if a judge is incompetent, another judge can be assigned to his circuit until the regular process of the law is followed. If he violates the supreme court's order he can be cited for contempt. So we have nothing to worry about insofar as the short delay between the time he becomes incompetent and impeachment proceedings or removal proceedings can be commenced. As soon as they are commenced he is automatically suspended and I think when you leave out the word "suspend" it is just almost as detrimental to the judge as to remove him.

I would also like a division on this matter.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister requests a division. Is the request for a division supported? It is supported. The Chair recognizes Mr. King.

MR. KING: Would Mr. McAllister yield to a question?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair thinks Mr. McAllister yielded the floor.

MR. KING: I would direct a question to him if he would care to answer it. I am a little bit confused about the statement that you just made. Are you indicating that if a judge is incompetent but physically capable of arriving at the courthouse at 9:00 in the morning, that someone else can be assigned to take his place?

MR. McALLISTER: Judge Huff, whom we were talking about, was capable, had business to do, was ordered assigned. There was nothing wrong with him either mentally or physically. He was ordered assigned to Detroit. He didn't go. He was fined for contempt of court. There would be no difficulty insofar as assigning a judge there to take the place of the judge who was in trouble until the matter was resolved.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, Mr. McAllister, I think you misunderstood my question or I misunderstood the answer as suggested by the distinguished Mr. Boothby. My question relates to the incapacity of the man whom the supreme court does not want to sit. Now, if he is able — although perhaps mentally incapacitated — if he is able to show up at the courthouse, how does the supreme court come by its authority to send somebody else in there and sit on his lap or sit beside him?

MR. McALLISTER: I say that Judge Huff was mentally and physically competent. He was ordered to Detroit. They sent another judge in to take his place and he wouldn't give up. So then the supreme court cited him for contempt and took care of him.

MR. KING: And this language would not in any way affect that procedure?

MR. McALLISTER: No. It doesn't affect that right in any particular.

MR. KING: I won't comment on the answer. I yield.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, personally I find myself in the middle, as Mr. Higgs pointed out. If we have to have it, certainly I would support the amendment to strike the words, "or suspend." Therefore, I still am of the position that the amendment in toto should be defeated, but on this item, this language should certainly be deleted.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Bonisteel to strike the words "or suspend" from the minority amendment. Is there any request for further reading? If not, those in favor of the amendment to the amendment will say aye. Those opposed will say no. Excuse me, a division had been requested several speakers back. The Chair apologizes for forgetting. Those in favor of the amendment to the amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the amendment offered by Mr. Bonisteel, the yeas are 56; the nays are 38.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment to the amendment is adopted and the question is now upon the minority report amendment, as amended, offered by Miss Donnelly, Judge Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. When last we were on the main question, the Chair had listed the following speakers seeking recognition: Mr. Bledsoe, Mr. Brake, Mr. McAllister, Mr. Rajkovich, Mr. Bonisteel, Mr. Tubbs and Mr. Mahinske. I will ask at this point if any of those gentlemen still desires recognition on the question. Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: I would like to ask the proponents of this amendment, as amended, if it is still their intention that the supreme court have the power to investigate complaints in other areas of justice.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand.

MR. MAHINSKE: I am talking about your amendment as amended now, if this has changed your intent any.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman, in answer to Delegate Mahinske, it hasn't changed our intent in the slightest. We still believe that the supreme court has and should have the power to make investigations and recommendations.

MR. MAHINSKE: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I would simply urge that again the committee went over this. I still believe the language as we had it in 1908 is correct. I would urge the defeat of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to direct a question to Delegate McAllister, if he cares to answer.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer. You may proceed, Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: To follow the question put to Delegate Leibrand, I'd like to ask that assuming the supreme court made an investigation, held a hearing and made a recommendation to the legislature requesting an impeachment, is it your opinion that the supreme court would then be in a position to review an impeachment which was determined by the legislature?

MR. McALLISTER: No, it would not be my position that if they made a recommendation and had a hearing and made a determination, they are predetermining the man's guilt.

MR. HIGGS: In other words, if the supreme court in any way participated in bringing about the impeachment, it would be your opinion that they would not be impartial and that they could not properly review that determination; is that right?

MR. McALLISTER: No, that isn't my answer. My answer is that it would certainly be their duty to report anything that came to their attention to the proper authorities, the legislaure or the governor. No, I don't think that they should predetermine the man's guilt.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I think this brings us back again to some of the problems that bothered the committee. Now I feel compelled to vote against the amendment, although if we have to have it, it is in better form than it was. In the committee many problems arose. I had really hoped that Mr. McAllister and Mr. Leibrand before second reading would have come up with a better solution to this problem than they have. It seems to me there may be a positive way to do this; but I don't think this is it. There are just too many questions that arise with regard to the rights of the court and the legislature in this particular situation.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Boothby.

MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. Chairman, I urge a yes vote and request a division.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Boothby requests a division. Is the demand supported? It is supported. The Chair recognizes Mr. Hodges.

MR. HODGES: I would like at this time to address a question to Mr. McAllister. I don't want to be redundant, but in the colloquy between Mr. Ford and Mr. McAllister it was pointed out that Mr. McAllister did not feel that if the court didn't have the power to investigate and have hearings, that they should not have the power to make recommendations. I think on this, this is the whole heart of the question and would determine in many of our minds how we would vote on this. Personally, I am in favor of the amendment if the court would have that power. I would just ask Mr. McAllister if his answer is the same, that the supreme court would not have the power to make recommendations.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Hodges, I don't believe that I ever said at any time that I thought the supreme court had a right to have a hearing on the matter. My thought was, and I think any court — if something comes to their attention or anyone came to their attention and indicated some improper conduct on the part of the court — that it should be reported to the governor or legislature. But I don't think that the supreme court should have a right to have a hearing on it and make a recommendation because under the procedure, ordinarily the legislature handles this and the supreme court could determine whether the legislature had made an error.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes Mr. Krolikowski.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to Delegate Donnelly.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the lady cares to answer.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Miss Donnelly, in order to understand the procedure at this junction, in view of the adoption of the Bonisteel amendment, is it correct that the supreme court could proceed to suspend a justice and that unless your amendment is adopted, the supreme court can proceed to suspend a justice?

MISS DONNELLY: In my opinion, the answer would be yes.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Now, is there any time limitation with respect to the suspension?

MISS DONNELLY: In my opinion, no.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: In other words, the suspension could be tantamount to a removal?

MISS DONNELLY: In my opinion, yes.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: In other words, it is necessary that your amendment be adopted?

MISS DONNELLY: Yes.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hodges, do you seek recognition at this time?

MR. HODGES: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment on the secretary's desk. I request it be read.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The secretary will read the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Messrs. Hodges and Mahinske offer the following amendment to the amendment:

1. Amend the amendment by adding a new paragraph at the end thereof to read as follows:

"This section shall in no way be construed as to prohibit the said court from investigating complaints against judges and making recommendations thereon to the proper authorities.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will rule that that is the identical amendment previously offered by Mr. Mahinske and is therefore out of order.

MR. HODGES: Mr. Chairman, point of information. This was the amendment offered to the amendment before it was amended. At this time I think it would change the minds of many of us on how we vote on this. I, for one, was against the Mahinske amendment before because I too thought that the court should have the power to suspend but not the power to remove. But I did feel that the court should have the power to investigate and make recommendations to the proper body. For that reason, I would believe the amendment would be in order at this time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hodges, the Chair will still rule that the amendment is not in order at this time. Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: But this is an amendment to a different proposition than it was submitted to previously.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Mahinske, the Chair will rule that the amendment adopted by the committee of the whole, proposed by Mr. Bonisteel, does not sufficiently change the basic amendment to make your amendment any different than it was at the time it was previously offered. It was offered and defeated. The Chair will rule it is out of order.

MR. MAHINSKE: Is the Chair ruling then there is no difference between removal and suspension?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair is not so ruling.

MR. MAHINSKE: Mr. Chairman, I appeal the decision of the Chair.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on sustaining the ruling of the Chair. Those who wish to sustain the ruling of the Chair that the amendment is out of order will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The ruling of the Chair is sustained. The question now is on the Donnelly-Leibrand-McAllister amendment, as amended. Mr. Barthwell.

MR. BARTHWELL: I just merely want to find out the difference between a hearing and an investigation because I'm a little bit confused now. I think Mr. McAllister said he would be willing for the court to investigate, but if they had a hearing and made recommendations, he couldn't agree that they would have this right. I think that's what he said.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Barthwell directs a question to Mr. McAllister, if the gentleman cares to answer it.

MR. McALLISTER: My interpretation of that is to investigate the charges and report what they find to the proper authorities. A hearing would contemplate witnesses and cross examination of the witnesses and a determination of the man's innocence or guilt.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is now upon the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly and others. Mr. Young.

MR. YOUNG: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to state that the Chair just made up my mind. By being the judge on his own decision he convinced me the supreme court should not have that right.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is upon the amendment, as amended, offered by Miss Donnelly and Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister. A division has been requested and the demand was supported. Those in favor of the amendment, as amended, will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no.

In response to a question from Mr. Bonisteel, the question is on the main amendment, as amended. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment, as amended, the yeas are 54; the nays are 47.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment, as amended, is adopted. Are there any further amendments to section c, Mr. Secretary?

SECRETARY CHASE: There are no other amendments offered to this section.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: There being no further amendments, the section will pass.

Section c, as amended, is passed.

Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves the committee do now rise. Those in favor will say aye. Opposed, no.

The motion prevails and the committee will rise.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, Vice President Hutchinson resumed the Chair.]

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will be in order. The Chair recognizes the delegate from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration one proposal on which the secretary will give a detailed report.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Thank you.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 91, A proposal pertaining to the supreme court; it has considered several amendments thereto; has come to no final resolution thereon.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Announcements.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, we will return to the order of motions and resolutions.

SECRETARY CHASE: Messrs. Tubbs and Romney offer Resolution 79, A resolution to provide for a recess during the week of April 16.

Following is Resolution 79 as offered:

Whereas, Members of this convention have for many weeks, planned activities outside the city of Lansing during the week of April 16, including trips abroad, honeymoons, etc.; now therefore be it

Resolved, That this convention take a recess from all activities from April 16 to 21, or, in the alternative, that the signers of this resolution be granted leaves of absence.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Referred to the committee on rules and resolutions.

SECRETARY CHASE: I have the following requests for leave of absence: Mr. Seyferth requests permission to be absent from the afternoon session of next Monday. Mr. Hutchinson requests to be excused from the session of Monday. Mr. Lawrence requests leave from Monday's session; and Mr. Heideman and Mr. Spitler make like requests.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, the several requests will be granted. The Chair hears no objection. It is so ordered.

SECRETARY CHASE: Those are all of the announcements, Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: What is the pleasure of the convention? The Chair recognizes the gentleman from the twenty-fourth district, Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: I move, after a hard and strenuous day, we adjourn.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is on the motion of Judge Leibrand to adjourn. All those in favor will say aye. Opposed, no.

The motion prevails. The convention is adjourned until 4:00 o'clock p.m. Monday.

[Whereupon, at 4:00 o'clock p.m., the convention adjourned until 4:00 o'clock p.m., Monday, February 26, 1962.]

EIGHTY-SEVENTH DAY

Monday, February 26, 1962, 4:00 o'clock p.m.

PROCEEDINGS

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The convention will please come to order.

Our invocation tonight will be offered by Delegate Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Let us pray. Our Father who art in heaven, help us, as delegates to this convention and as citizens of this state, to know and to do Thy will. Help us, in our relationships with one another, to remember Thy commandment that we love our neighbors as ourselves. This we ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: The roll call will be taken by the secretary. Has everyone present registered on the board by voting aye?

SECRETARY CHASE: The machine is locked and the attendance will be recorded.

Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

Prior to today's session, the secretary received the following requests for leave:

Messrs. Baginski, Stamm and Wilkowski, from today's session. Mr. Yeager, from today's session and tomorrow morning's session. Mr. Radka reports he will be late for this session and asks to be temporarily excused. Messrs. Boothby and Rood request indefinite leave due to illness.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Without objection, the requests are granted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Absent with leave: Messrs. Baginski, Boothby, Dade, Heideman, Hutchinson, Karn, Lawrence, Nisbet, Perras, Radka, Rood, Seyferth, Spitler, Stamm, Suzore, Wilkowski and Yeager.

Absent without leave: Mr. Bledsoe, Mrs. Cushman, Messrs. Krolikowski, Leibrand and Mosier.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Without objection, those not present will be excused.

[During the proceedings the following delegates entered the chamber and took their seats: Mrs. Cushman, Messrs. Bledsoe, Hutchinson, Krolikowski, Lawrence, Leibrand, Radka, Seyferth, Spitler and Stamm.]

Delegate Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Mr. President, a matter of personal privilege. Ladies and gentlemen of the convention, over the weekend there appeared on the editorial page of one of the Detroit papers a story in which the writer prophesied that the justices of the peace would outlive the onslaught of this convention. They used very dignified and artistic language. One of the most inspirational paragraphs reads this way:

> Had the convention had the moxie to tell the traffickers in petty politics, lumped under the unlovely name of courthouse gang, to go soak their selfish heads this one would have been all solved.

I do not rise to protest, Mr. President, but to compliment these writers. When they write pure fiction they do so much better than when they try to handle matters with which they are not familiar; such as facts and logic. (laughter)

On a previous occasion they did us the courtesy to mention 3 of us by name, and I am chagrined in not having that personal recognition this time, but I assume I didn't merit it because I haven't done one single thing about the justices of the peace in this whole session except, when Mr. Lawrence's sudden death amendment came up the other day, I voted against it knowing that the matter came up again in Committee Proposal 96 under the judicial article and I thought that if there was to be homicide we should have 2 or 3 days delay in which to prepare to spring the trap or throw the switch or turn on the gas or whatever has to be done.

I have no personal problem. I think that if this convention decides that the county court should displace the justices of the peace, that in each of my 4 counties a competent member of the bar can be found who would be willing to be judge of that court; and I think that each of my 4 counties can finance such a court. So I have no personal problem at all.

I haven't observed anybody doing anything about the justices of the peace in this convention except the 20 lawyers and one druggist who make up Mr. Danhof's committee on judicial branch and I don't know whether any of those people claim to be members of the courthouse gang or not.

We are a little bit exclusive, although strictly bipartisan. (laughter) Pete and Martin and myself have appointed ourselves — we are charter members — as the membership committee, and we won't admit anybody unless he has qualifications, and those qualifications are 3 in number. In the first place, the applicant must know a courthouse when he sees it, and secondly, he must know that the county seat is not an armchair. I would have said rocking chair, except that that has partisan connotation, (laughter) and, in the third place, he must know that a justice of the peace is not a county officer.

It is very apparent, Mr. President, that some of these editorial writers in Detroit would be unable to qualify as to any one of those qualifications. We think, however, that the reporters who cover this convention could qualify as to all 3, and we are very happy to welcome them to honorary membership in the courthouse gang of the 1962 constitutional convention. (laughter)

Mr. President, I am fully aware that what I have said could have been said in fewer words, and more expressive words, but I was not at liberty to use those words. Two words would have been enough but I couldn't use them because there are ladies present. (applause)

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Reports of standing committees.

SECRETARY CHASE: No committee reports, Mr. President.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Reports of select committees.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Communications from state officers.

SECRETARY CHASE: No communications.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Second reading of proposals.

SECRETARY CHASE: Nothing on that calendar for this week.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Third reading of proposals.

SECRETARY CHASE: Nothing on that calendar.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Motions and resolutions.

SECRETARY CHASE: There are no resolutions on file.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Unfinished business.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Special orders of the day.

SECRETARY CHASE: None.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: General orders of the day. Delegate Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the purpose of considering matters on the general orders calendar.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Those in favor of the motion say aye. Opposed, no.

The motion prevails. Delegate Van Dusen will preside.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will come to order. The secretary will read.

I believe when last we met we had just completed our consideration of section c of Committee Proposal 91, and therefore the business before the committee is section d, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: From the committee on judicial branch, by Mr. Danhof, chairman, Committee Proposal 91, A proposal pertaining to the supreme court; section d.

For last previous action by the committee of the whole on Committee Proposal 91, see above, page 1275.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, we are again concerned with the provisions relating to the supreme court, the duties and the responsibilities thereof. As previously, I should like at this time, for an explanation of this section and of the majority report of the committee, to yield to the gentleman from Grand Rapids, Mr. Tubbs.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof yields to Mr. Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I tremble a little bit when I bring up another noncontroversial section. This is a rewrite of section 5 of article VII of the present constitution. You will find the explanation on page 466 of the journal. Actually the language is not much changed except that we here are writing into the constitution the abolition of the distinction between law and equity that was done by the legislature in the recently enacted judicature act.

Some of you who have been in the practice of law for 35 or 40 years, as I have, may wonder why we are continuing to prohibit the office of master in chancery. I think it has not been a part of the court system of this state for many years. We did not want some sophist to claim that if we left that language out we were lefthandedly putting it back into circulation, because the language of the 1908 constitution is identical with the last sentence of this section d.

We hope, Mr. Chairman, that this will not merit too much adverse discussion and that perhaps we can get on with our business. I return the mike to you, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, have you further explanation on section d?

MR. DANHOF: Not at this time. Mr. Woolfenden is prepared but I think we can hold that.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: There is, I believe, an amendment to the section, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Pursuant to their minority report, Miss Donnelly and Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 5, after "state" by changing the period to a comma and inserting "it being provided that where there is a conflict between supreme court rule and a statute concerning evidence or substantive law the statute shall prevail."; so that the first sentence in section d will read:

> The supreme court shall by general rules establish, modify, amend and simplify the practice and procedure in all courts in the state, it being provided that where there is a conflict between supreme court rule and a statute concerning evidence or substantive law the statute shall prevail.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister. The Chair recognizes Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I don't see either one of the other 2 delegates who sponsored this amendment or this minority report, but under the present court rules, which we discussed here the other day, the supreme court has in the rules that where any statute conflicts with the rules, that it is of no force or effect.

We don't intend by this minority report amendment to prevent rulemaking power as far as procedure is concerned, but we do — where the legislature has passed a statute or does pass a statute, we feel that in that instance where it relates to evidence or substantive law, that the legislative act should prevail over the court rules of the supreme court. We feel this is only protection for the public, and that the legislative and legal and judicial departments are separate, so that where there is a conflict, that the legislative act should prevail.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, the paragraph that we have here is a grant of power to establish and modify and amend the practice and procedure in all courts of this state. Not only has it been in our constitution since 1908, but the most sincere form of flattery that can be offered is that it has been practically adopted verbatim by the last 3 states having the opportunity to write new constitutions. The provision limiting the power of the supreme court as it pertains to substantive law is, in fact, no limitation at all. The grant of the power deals with practice and procedure, and this is different than the substantive law.

This amendment goes further than this. Rules of evidence have historically been made by the courts over the years. They have developed through usage, through practice, through various cases, and with but very few exceptions, except as relates to presumptions and privileges, the rules of evidence as to what may be introduced are and should continue to be a court function. The legislature may write statutes as they relate to the substantive law, but the rulemaking power of the court as it relates to the admission of evidence should not be limited, as this would do.

Again we have here something which shows a consistent pattern to endeavor to restrict and tie in knots the administration of justice in the operation of our supreme court. I think too often we tend to let the personalities of the court personnel interfere with our consideration of the system. If there is one thing this committee should do, it is to try to set up a good system, and then find ways by which we can staff the system by the fairest means. Every single authority in the field of administration of court decisions has held that the power of rulemaking over evidence, and so on, and practice and procedure should not be tampered with.

At the present time the Supreme Court of the United States will soon prepare uniform rules of evidence. This particular section that we endeavor to solidify here, and actually cut down the wording, is one which has been in for a great number of years, and again I would urge you to defeat the amendment, to keep the section exactly as it is. We have not made too many changes. We have abolished the distinction between law and equity as they have been done by the judicature act, and we now make this a constitutional provision. This will be a tremendous advancement in the practice of law. It would eliminate many hardships which arose because of the failure to enter one side of the court or the other. We suggest that section d is a good section. Don't put a stranglehold upon it. I would therefore urge the defeat of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, the Chair recognizes Mr. Woolfenden.

MR. WOOLFENDEN: I rise in opposition to the amendment. The amendment is based upon reading into the language of the committee proposal something that is not there. As the chairman has stated, and I will not reiterate his argument, this section has been, for all practical purposes — the language is changed slightly but only in the interest of clarity — in the constitution since 1908, and it has never been interpreted by the courts to include anything that would be the basis for the amendment proposed. I think this amendment, if adopted, would merely confuse the administration of the supreme court in the exercise of its proper rulemaking authority, and I urge a no vote on the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Wanger.

MR. WANGER: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Danhof, I would like to ask a question. Mr. Danhof, did I understand you correctly to say that under the present language of the committee proposal the supreme court, with respect to any rule of evidence whatsoever, could by rule override any statute? That is the way I understood you. I was quite surprised to hear that. Is that what you intend?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I said that basically the provisions relating to the introduction of evidence are things that have grown from judicial decisions. I think it was Mr. McAllister who made the reference to the particular rule as voiding the statute. My thought was that the rules, as they have been developed over the years, have been made by the courts in judicial decisions as to what would and what would not be admitted.

Now, it is true that when we adopt a provision like we did in the civil rights section it tells the court in effect what will and will not be admitted but that, by and large, this has become a court function. The substantive part, of course, is either developed by the common law or the statute.

MR. WANGER: That doesn't answer my question. My question is, do you want the supreme court of the state, by court rule, to be able to override any statute which sets up a rule of evidence? As you know, we have many statutes which clearly say what is admissible in evidence and what is not, and this determines the outcome of many, many cases. I just want to know, do you desire that the supreme court, under this section of the committee proposal, shall, by a court rule, be able to override any statute regarding a rule of evidence? I thought you said yes, but I was quite surprised, and I just wanted to have it be clear.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I will be quite frank with you, I don't quite follow your particular reasoning from the words that we have here. Actually, in 1908 we had identically the same words, except for "the legislature shall abolish." Now the practice within the court may involve some of the rules of evidence. There may be statutes that will intervene in there, but the question becomes one of the practices in the court, and the procedures within the court should and must continue to be the province of the court.

MR. WANGER: Well, that still doesn't answer the question. The question is very simple. We have many statutes in this state, as we have many statutes in other states and the federal system, which set forth the rule of evidence under certain subjects; saying this particular type of evidence will or will not be admissible in the court under certain circumstances. All I want to know is, if the legislature passes a statute setting up such a rule of evidence in the statute, can the supreme court, under the committee proposal, pass a court rule which supersedes that statute?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: My only answer, Mr. Wanger, is that if it relates to substantive law, naturally the statute — and I am sure the court has in the past ruled — that would prevail. This in no way would change the present practice.

MR. WANGER: I am not talking about substantive law; just rules of evidence, sir.

MR. DANHOF: To my knowledge the present practice will not change. Now, I can't answer your question, I am sorry, any further than that.

MR. WANGER: Well, should the supreme court, then, be able to pass a rule of evidence which would supersede a rule of evidence set forth in the statute? I am not changing my question. My question first was what does this proposal do, and you said it does not change the present practice. I think the present practice sometimes has been subjected to a little controversy and I just want to ask you, which should it be?

MR. DANHOF: Well, if it relates to practice or procedure, then this in the court rule would override it.

MR. WANGER: Well, if it relates to evidence — certainly practice and procedure is a very broad term. We all agree that most aspects of that should be governed by rules, but when it comes down to evidence — what is admissible in evidence and what is not — my question is, should the supreme court be able to pass a court rule which would supersede a statute that the legislature would pass on the very same subject?

MR. DANHOF: If you ask me my personal opinion, I will grant you that. As to the opinion of the committee, this was not necessarily considered. I can't answer any further than that. Maybe some of the other members of the committee can, I don't know. Maybe Mr. Woolfenden or Mr. Ford can give you an answer. That is about the best I can tell you. The present practice would continue. The rules that have dealt with the presumptions, and the rule that deals with privilege, and not involving policies of judicial administration and procedure, those particular statutes are on the books and have been honored by the court, and as far as I can see this practice would continue. Now, if that is what you mean by rules of evidence, I think it would continue, yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Taylor, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Well, a quick comparison will show that the language has not changed since 1850. It was there in 1850; it was repeated in 1908, and we are repeating it again. There are a long line of cases that show what kind of powers — certainly there has been some conflict, but most generally the conflict has been where there is a local court rule or where the legislature starts to get involved in procedure, and the court makes a rule involving procedure.

Mr. Wanger, I think, is confusing us a little bit by talking about rules of evidence, because most generally when we are talking about rules of evidence we are talking about substantive matters in the trial of a lawsuit; and particularly where that would be determinative of the outcome of the lawsuit rather than the procedure involved in how you go forward with the evidence or at what point something happens in the actual procedure, particularly with respect to trials, but not necessarily limited to trials.

I note in the footnotes, for example, this says court rules cover such things as who shall be a surety on a bond, and things of this kind. Where the court makes a rule that is contrary to or in apparent conflict with the legislative act, in that case the court rule prevails. And this has been the law in Michigan since 1850.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The lady from Highland Park, Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: I must say that the longer I listen to Mr. Ford and Mr. Danhof, I think they have no objections to our minority report. I think if they mean what they say they should be supporting us instead of objecting to it. Our minority report very clearly says where there is a conflict between the supreme court rule and a statute concerning evidence of substantive law, the statute shall prevail. This is an addition. It is the only addition we have made here. We make this addition because we feel that, one, the legislature theoretically represents a cross section of the people on what should be in evidence, and a law representing admissibility of evidence.

To go into a long dissertation on the various statutes regarding evidence, the dead man's statute, for instance, one of the most complicated we have, is not, I don't think, too beneficial to most of the lay people here. However, I think it is very simple to decide this issue, whether the supreme court rule may, instead of striking down the statute and holding it unconstitutional — which we maintain they may still do — they can just override it by their court rule alone, without a case testing the statute, without determining it in any way; they can write the statute out and make it unconstitutional by their court rule.

We maintain this is improper. It should be tested in court, go through the regular procedure, and be determined unconstitutional; not merely in conflict with the rule. We are not talking about sureties on bonds. We are talking about a statute concerning, as it is said in our language, substantive law and evidence. The reason this is in is because of a new court rule which has been adopted, which says that this can be done. We maintain in the court rule this cannot be done.

What we are trying to do is make the court rule unconstitutional because it doesn't go with the present constitution in our opinion. We are trying to strike back down at their power; making it go back the other way. If they want a statute — if they don't approve a statute, they can find that statute unconstitutional, if in fact it is. But not just write it out by a court rule — which very few people know what is happening until it is a little late. It doesn't have the aspect of publicity. It doesn't have a trial to go through. In many ways we feel that for the supreme court to automatically write off what the legislature has done in their own private rules is improper, and it should be tested like any other statutory enactment, as well as the law of evidence.

It is very simple, I think, on its face, what we mean. What I think the people arguing for the majority report say we mean is not quite true. If they mean what the say, they should be supporting us instead of opposing us.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Bad Axe, Mr. McAllister. There are several seeking recognition ahead of you, Mr. Tubbs. The Chair will get to you in due course.

MR. McALLISTER: I have a little difficulty answering Mr. Wanger's statement. The supreme court rule was put into force June 5, 1959. It is true that the constitution hasn't been changed, but in the supreme court rule of June 5, 1959, there was nothing said about substantive law and nothing said about evidence. It just said that wherever a statute was in conflict with the rule of the supreme court it was gone; it had no force or effect.

So if this constitution doesn't protect the many pages of evidence that are set forth in the statutes, the supreme court, after this constitution is passed, in view of their present court rules, can make new rules of evidence for everything that is in the statutes, and there isn't a thing we can do about it.

I say to you folks, this is a very, very serious matter, and we have traveled along since 1850 on this constitution, and the supreme court has never attempted to exercise this power before, and now in June, 1959, they pass these rules and say where the statute conflicts with their rules, their rules shall prevail.

Again I say that, if Mr. Ford and Mr. Danhof mean what they say, they should be supporting this amendment, and also Mr. Woolfenden, instead of opposing it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Garry Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: I will pass.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown passes. Mr. Martin.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Chairman, the amendment that is proposed here raises some questions about which not even the lawyers, I am sure, are certain; that is, what the long range effect of this kind of a change may be.

We have operated under the present provisions of the constitution which the committee has proposed for over 100 years. The mere fact that the supreme court has promulgated a rule saying that if a rule conflicts with the statute the rule shall prevail means nothing more than if the statute is in violation of the powers of the judiciary, of the established powers of the judiciary, that it will prevail. It doesn't set forth anything new.

The question I would ask Miss Donnelly, or Mr. McAllister, or anyone else, is whether there has been any attempt at any time to assert the proposition that a rule of the supreme court on matters of this kind does contravene a law or statute which was passed by the legislature, and does destroy that statute? If there is any evidence of that kind, then we might have something to go on. But just to, out of the blue, include a provision of this sort may well alter the whole conduct of court trials and have a long range effect, deleterious or bad effect which none of us can foresee at the present time. It seems to me we are just shooting in the dark here.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Martin, do you desire to yield to Mr. McAllister for reply?

MR. MARTIN: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Martin yields to Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: This will be very brief. Who determines what shall prevail? The supreme court. In other words, if they determine the statute conflicts with the rules, that is all there is to it. And, the thing is that these statutes, many, many statutes under which we have been guided for nearly a century, over a century, have established certain rules of evidence. They can change those tomorrow by making a rule.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the vice chairman of the committee, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I think Mr. Martin said what we had determined on back here with our little caucus. I think Tom is doing a pretty good job repeating what he did last Friday. He is putting something in here that isn't here. It is like a ghost on your television screen, and we shouldn't pay too much attention to the ghost and run the danger of losing sight of what we are actually doing.

When we are talking about the lines between substantive law and procedural law, not all of us are as positive as Miss Donnelly that we know when we cross over this line from one to the other. All of the lawyers in this room, I am sure, appreciate one experience or another where it is very difficult to tell at what point you cross the line.

For example, it wasn't too long ago — there are 2 places where I might give an example of very important rules of the court that aren't really substantive, but they have a tremendous effect. One, for example, is the manner in which you plead alibis in this state. The statute doesn't say that you plead alibis in a certain way, or that you have to follow a certain procedure if you intend to rely on it. The court rules do. Another one is in the manner of the admission of certain evidence, and in the matter of suppression of evidence, the motion to quash. You can't simply wait until the prosecutor presents the evidence and then start to scream about it. You've got to put him on notice in advance of your intentions to object. This is all done by court rules. This sets the stage. Now, it could, in effect, have the effect of keeping out or letting in evidence that might by statute be admissable or inadmissible; the effect of not following the rules, but these are intertwined in such a manner so as to make them almost impossible to separate.

And the danger we see in trying to create this distinction as if it were a clear cut line between the 2 is that we are opening the door for all sorts of litigation to start confusing the future rulemaking power of the court, where, over a long period of time, we have got a pretty well settled situation. I might say that our court rules in Michigan are looked at as something of a model by a great many states, and where the legislature was so very reluctant to finally do what they did last year with the judicature act in abolishing once and for all the distinction between law and equity or law and chancery, rather, our court rules have come up with a rather simple system, and it is a very direct system considering all of the difficulties that are built into it by statute.

I rise this last time to support the committee's majority report, and urge you to vote against the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Grand Rapids, Mr. Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: I pass.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Tubbs passes. Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: Mr. Ford seems to feel that I feel that I am endowed with unusual ability to tell the difference between substantive and procedural law. But I will recall to him that if there is one place that it will be very obviously determined, that will be in the supreme court, and it will then say whether it crosses this imaginary line or not.

We have very simply stated, I believe, that the supreme court shall not strike down legislative enactment by court rule; that when they start to strike down the legislative acts they will do it the way they used to do it, by having them be appealed and determined either constitutional or unconstitutional. I think that if Mr. Martin or anybody else was sitting in the legislature that is how they would think it should be done; not by merely amending a court rule.

So again I say the determination of the effect of this language will be in the supreme court, and they will know, very nicely, for their own benefit, as well as for everybody else's in the state, whether it is a substantive statute regarding evidence of substantive law, or merely procedural.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Dr. Nord.

MR. NORD: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak in opposition to the amendment and in support of the committee proposal. The information that we have been given might lead one to think that we have here some sort of a tremendous innovation, that is, some sort of a radical change. It has been pointed out over and over again there is no change whatsoever in the constitution of any significance at this point. Further, the change that has been suggested is also extremely exaggerated.

It has been suggested that the supreme court has adopted rules which say that any statute which is inconsistent with their rules, the statute can go jump in the lake. That is a lot of boloney. It says no such thing. It merely says that if there is a conflict between the rules and a statute, the rule prevails, but the rules are limited to procedure. If the supreme court should adopt a rule that is a matter of substantive law, then we would have the problem that has been placed before us. But that is not the problem. Nobody has ever suggested, that I have ever heard of, that a court has the power to write off a substantive statute just because it feels like it.

The supreme court of this state has never said so. The rules do not say so. No other court has said so. But what the court has said in its rules is exactly the same as many other courts, most modern courts say now, including the United States supreme court, that when it comes to a conflict between how the procedure of the court shall be carried out, and there is a statute and there is a court rule, and one or the other must prevail, the court rule shall prevail. And the reason for that is very simple. The reason for that is that the judicial power is exclusively vested in the court and the legislative power is exclusively vested in the legislature. There is a separation of powers.

Now, what we have here is one attempt out of many — we have had a number of attempts in this particular proposal, one after the other, to do the same — and that is to put the court below the legislature. There is no reason to do that. The court must be able to control its own procedure.

Now, the question I was asked by Mr. Wanger is a very tough question, that is to say, should evidence be counted as procedure or not. Normally it is. Possibly there are some rules that should not be. We know that it is a difficult line between procedure and substantive in some cases. And, as a matter of fact, the same subject matter will sometimes be called substantive and sometimes procedural depending on the context. As far as I am concerned, if it is a rule of evidence of the ordinary type, let's say it is something about the hearsay rule, as to whether hearsay evidence should be admitted under some exceptions, there is no objection that I know of to the court determining whether it should be admitted or not, because that has to do with the way the case will be conducted in the court.

In other words, what I say is that the alarms that have been raised here are absolutely unwarranted. No change has been made either in the supreme court or in the constitution as now proposed. The practice that is suggested is in line with all modern thinking on the subject, and the real issue is, do you really mean it when you say that the judicial power is exclusively vested in the court? You said that a few days ago and if you mean it you should quit attacking the court. I suggest you vote down the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Dr. Nord, Mr. Wanger requested you yield to him for the purpose of commentary. Will you so yield?

MR. NORD: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Wanger.

MR. WANGER: I would like to ask a question. Do I understand, then, Dr. Nord, that you believe that — should, shall we say, the rule of the court establishing a provision regarding the admissibility of certain evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule under one of the traditional exceptions, do you believe, then, that if that should be put into the supreme court rule, mind you, that the legislature should not then be able to change it by statute?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Dr. Nord.

MR. NORD: If you are asking my opinion, the answer is yes, the legislature should not be allowed to change it, for the reason that one or the other must control. And the question is who shall control if it is a matter of evidence; not a matter of who wins the case, but how the case is to be handled in the court. One or the other must control, and I say it must be the court. That is my opinion.

MR. WANGER: Well, it seems to me it should be clear to everybody and not just attorneys that you win or you lose your case on the basis of the evidence, and the rules of evidence determines whether or not you can get that particular point or material into court. And if the rules of evidence keeps it out of court, it may be procedural, it may be just a matter of form, but the direct and absolute result of it is that you lose your case. And that is the reason why it seems to me that if there is a conflict on the admissibility of a certain matter of evidence, then the legislature should have the power, by a statute, to determine the matter, any rule of the supreme court notwithstanding.

It had been my thought that that has been the law of this state, and that was the reason why I thought originally that the amendment offered was, perhaps, a little bit redundant. But in the light of what was said by the people here on the floor, I am very much concerned that that may not be the law of the state. And since matters regarding the admissibility of evidence are so important to all of the people here in Michigan, I think the legislature ought to have the controlling voice when it chooses to exercise that voice by statute.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Dr. Nord.

MR. NORD: I would like to respond to Mr. Wanger, if I may, since he responded to me. As to what the law is in Michigan, Mr. Wanger asked Mr. Danhof, and he answered correctly that he did not know, because on that subject it is my opinion that the answer is "not know." It isn't clear in Michigan. It has been made clear in some states, but in Michigan the general understanding, as far as I am aware, is this: that the statute supersedes the court rule if it is later and the court rule supersedes the statute if it is later. That has not been an absolute determination — that has been the understanding, and that is the way it is stated in the books. It doesn't have to be that way, and it has never been really decided, but on the basis of that rule in the past, and it was certainly understood, that if it is a procedural matter the supreme court rule would override a statute.

The question that has never really been determined at all is how far this word "procedure" goes. There we are shooting out into the dark. Now, in my opinion, if we attempt to settle this question here, then we change our minds from where we were a few days ago. A few days ago we said the judicial power shall be exclusively in the court, and now we are saying, basically, it shall be exclusively in the constitutional convention, that we are going to determine in advance everything that is procedural and everything that isn't. We are going to make up our minds now that all evidence is not procedural.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Pugsley, Mr. McAllister has sought recognition, and then you will be recognized. Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: I want to say that the innovation that proposed this minority report was the supreme court rule. Now, the supreme court rule doesn't say that their rules — that it only applies to rules of procedure. It is a blanket rule; that where any statute conflicts with a court rule it shall be of no force and effect, or words to that effect. So that is the reason that we felt that the minority amendment should be accepted.

It is true that for 150 years, or over 100 years, it has been the same in the constitution. The point that I make is that even these people who oppose the amendment say that it doesn't say in that section we are talking about that the court will have the right to do this, but the court has already done it. They did it on June 5, 1959, and the rule is not limited to rules of procedure; it is a flat statement and encompasses everything.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Pugsley.

MR. PUGSLEY: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I think there may be in the minds of the delegates, perhaps, who are not lawyers, some confusion when we talk about the matter of substantive law and the matter of procedure. I think it is the practice of the supreme court to exercise the right of telling the lawyers and those who seek to exercise procedure the method by which it shall be done. We must not confuse that with substantive law; it is given to the legislature to make the law.

Perhaps it will be interesting and enlightening to note the following decision by the supreme court in Jones vs. Eastern Michigan Motor Buses, 287 Michigan 619. I am reading from the footnotes of the volume which you all have. I quote:

> Since all judicial power is vested by constitution in supreme court and other inferior courts over which it has supervision and control, power to regulate procedure is inherently vested in supreme court, to be exercised under its rulemaking powers.

I think that is the problem. I think that is what is intended by this provision.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Garvin.

MR. GARVIN: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I believe Judge Pugsley just about covered it then. My question was going to be to one of the proposers or Mr. Wanger. In their opinion, where does the article IV of the constitution, where there is a division of the executive, judicial and legislative branches, where does it separate? The judicial branch must be at some point.

It is the contention of the committee that the supreme court has the right to make the rules under which the various courts proceed, and the lawyers practice, and that is part of the judicial branch. Now, if we take the position that every time something is to be changed by the judiciary, by the legislature, then there would be no point in having a judicial branch as has already been set up in the Constitution of the state of Michigan. I support the committee proposal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Dr. Nord, do you seek recognition at this time?

MR. NORD: Mr. Chairman, I have before me the text — well, I am informed it is the text — of the supreme court rule to which reference has been made many, many times in this debate, and I will read it, and then you can see for yourselves whether this has this evil effect as has been claimed. These are the words: "Any statutory provision that is inconsistent with any provision in these rules shall be considered as superseded by these rules."

Now, the question is, what is in these rules? If there is anything in these rules of a substantive nature, Mr. McAllister is right. If there isn't, he is wrong. We have them all before us. There is nothing of a substantive nature in them at all. They are entirely related to procedure. The title, for example, says Supreme Court Rules Concerning Superintendence of the Judiciary of Michigan. It goes on to explain how the administrator shall be doing this and that, with investigation by the court administrator, and whether they can transfer jurisdiction from one county to another, and so on. It is procedure. All the court has said is what everybody knows in the first place; that any statutory provision that is inconsistent with any provision in these rules, but not in some other rules, shall be considered as superseded by these rules. These are rules of procedure. Therefore there is no reason to be alarmed that the supreme court is taking off into orbit after Mr. Glenn.

I say we should vote down the amendment. I oppose the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister, on which Miss Donnelly seeks recognition.

MISS DONNELLY: I would just like to reply to what Mr. Nord said made Mr. McAllister wrong. I think if he reads it, we are saying that substantive law of the statute shall prevail. This does not make Mr. McAllister wrong. It makes him thinking just the way you are thinking when you say that. If you will read what our amendment says, you will be forced to agree he isn't wrong; he is right. We are talking substantive law.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: The only provision that our amendment makes is as to evidence and substantive law. That provision in there, I don't agree with your interpretation of it, Mr. Nord, because that is all inclusive.

We don't know what those rules will contain tomorrow, and the thinking is that if it is in the constitution the way we propose it, then no harm will be done; and the time to prevent injury is before it occurs, so that rule is all encompassing. Our amendment, according to your own interpretation of those rules, will not do any damage to the supreme court or anyone else. This is strictly a protective measure so that the evidence that is contained in our statutes, and has been there for years, cannot be destroyed by a rule of the supreme court where it relates to evidence or a substantive law.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Dr. Nord.

MR. NORD: Well, perhaps we can finalize the exact issue. Everyone knows, as I have said, and I believe everyone has said, that no one thinks the supreme court has the power to change a statute relating to substantive law just by its own fiat. They can't do it. The point I made was that you have given the impression the supreme court says it has that power. It certainly does not say so. Nobody thinks it has that power, and there has been no change in the situation from before to now. I admit that if you put those words in about substantive law it won't do any harm, but if you put the words about evidence in, I believe it will do harm. I do take issue with you on that.

In addition, if you want to be more than half safe, really be safe, you could start putting rules into the constitution about how the legislature shall run its business; that the supreme court shall not tell the legislature how to appoint its committees, and so on. Nobody has asked that that should be done. It isn't necessary. In this case, as to the substantive material, it isn't necessary; but as to the evidence, it is harmful.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Mr. Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. Mr. Habermehl.

MR. HABERMEHL: Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a question to Dr. Nord.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. HABERMEHL: The supreme court rules are promulgated by the court itself, are they not?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Dr. Nord.

MR. NORD: Mr. Habermehl, they were promulgated, as I see by the record, by 5 of the 8 supreme court justices.

MR. HABERMEHL: In the event they choose to put a rule in there that at least most of us would feel contravenes the statute on substantive law, who would make the decision as to whether or not those rules contravene the statute?

MR. NORD: The same court as would make the decision on any other thing which we disagreed with: the supreme court.

MR. HABERMEHL: This then, without the minority report, without the amendment proposed by the minority, of course, would give the supreme court the power to do exactly what you say no one believes that they have now.

MR. NORD: Mr. Habermehl, if you put words into the constitution saying the supreme court shall not have power to change the substantive statute, and if you distrust the court that much, you should predict this: the next thing they will do is to say there is no such thing as a substantive statute. Any statute you name they will say is procedural. If you are that worried about them, they have the final answer anyway. You can't stop them. The only way you could stop them is if they violate the United States supreme court constitution. I mean the United States constitution.

MR. HABERMEHL: Except that, of course, the Michigan constitution is a limitation upon the supreme court itself, is it not?

MR. NORD: Yes, but if you are going to put in words that are subject to interpretation, such as substantive, let us say, they can still interpret them. Let me put it like this: your real problem is, if you are afraid of the supreme court and the people on it, you have one way you could solve that fear: make sure that you can kick them out when they behave in an abominable manner. Make sure they are elected, and the people can kick them out if they don't like them. Do it by voting.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will ask the speakers to confine themselves to the amendment currently before us. The question is on the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Mr. Leibrand and Mr. McAllister. The secretary will read the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: I would like a division on this question.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister requests a division. Is the request supported? It is supported. The question is on the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly and others. Those who favor it will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister, the yeas are 32, the nays are 75.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is not adopted. Are there further amendments to section d?

SECRETARY CHASE: None on file, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: There being no further amendments, it will pass.

Section d is passed. The secretary will read section e.

SECRETARY CHASE: Section e:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: For an explanation of section e, the Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Again I would like to yield to the gentleman from Grand Rapids, Mr. Tubbs, on section e.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, this is a rewrite of the present section 7 of article VII of the constitution. It changes the language a little bit to clarify it, and requires that reason shall be given, and that all decisions of the court shall be in writing. Even a dissenting judge must give the reasons for his dissent. This has been in the constitution for a long time, and I can see no reason why it should not be continued, and hope that you will pass this provision.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I should also like to call upon the delegate from Detroit, Mr. Cudlip.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Cudlip is recognized.

MR. CUDLIP: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, the change with respect to writing these dissenting opinions is, "When there is a dissent in whole or in part" is the proposed rule. Today the constitution simply provides for dissenting opinions.

One of the justices that appeared before us said this in his report, and we in the committee thought it had a great deal of meaning and merit:

> Some members of the court have in the past followed the practice of signing on the left side of the opinion when they agreed with the result but didn't agree with all the reasoning in the majority opinion. By this they mean they do not agree with the reasoning and statements in the opinion, but agreed only with the result obtained.
> Either the section should provide for writing opinions and giving reasons when they disagree in whole or in part, or the provision with respect to writing dissenting opinions serves no useful purpose.

The reason the committee felt that the words "in part" should be included in its proposal are these: lawyers in advising their clients pay great attention to these dissenting opinions, and we know that as life moves forward, that sometimes the dissenting opinion and the views expressed therein become the majority opinion, and it is very useful for a member of the bar to sense the trend of the court. And it is particularly true of a dissenting opinion that is joined by 2 or 3 or 4 — or 2 or 3 judges in the cases of our court.

The same reasoning applies in the case of a judge or 2 judges who agree in the result of a case, the majority opinion, but don't necessarily agree in the reasoning, and that is where they sign, we will say, sometimes on the left, to indicate that very result.

We members of the committee feel, and I think the bar of Michigan felt, that if they do not agree with the reasoning, even though they agree with the result, they should say so. They don't have to be verbose, but they should say so, so that we who have to advise clients can detect those trends and, as I say, sometimes those trends become the majority rule, and that is a very important thing for lawyers to know: what these attitudes are of the appellate courts.

For that reason I ask that the delegates support the committee proposal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, do you have anything further at this time? The secretary has an amendment on his desk. Mr. Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a couple of questions, if I may, of the committee chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: You may if the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. NORRIS: First, Mr. Danhof, is a writ of habeas corpus a prerogative writ?

MR. DANHOF: It would be our interpretation that decisions involving the writs of that type, yes.

MR. NORRIS: Would require an opinion?

MR. DANHOF: I would hope so, yes. I would imagine the court would have some reason that they might interpret it another way, but I would think that they would write an opinion on it. I would hope so, anyway.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The secretary will read the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Pursuant to their minority report, Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 11, after "decision" by inserting "and denial of leave for appeal"; so the sentence will read:

> Decisions of the supreme court, including all decisions on prerogative writs, shall be in writing and shall contain a concise statement of the facts and reasons for each decision and denial of leave for appeal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Does one of the movers seek recognition? Mr. McAllister?

MR. McALLISTER: I yield to Miss Donnelly.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The lady from Highland Park, Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: I think, initially, "denial of leave to appeal" probably would be more usual language and perhaps a better use. Our main thought here is that today the supreme court does not ever give a reason for denial of leave to appeal. They merely say it is denied. This leaves the litigant and their attorney in the position of not knowing why. They maybe can guess, and when the client comes to the office and asks, the attorney can guess, the client can guess, and everybody can have a fine time, but they don't know.

It is our position at this time that having created an intermediate appellate court, instances when a person would go to the supreme court would probably be cut by a fantastic number. Therefore, when one does go to the supreme court — in all probability this is double guessing because we have not outlined here any reason why the supreme court must listen. Up until now the supreme court has given many instances and has heard many cases where there is any right to appeal. There are leaves to appeal in other instances.

With the creation of an intermediate appellate court there is great likelihood that the supreme court might find that one should have leave to appeal in practically every instance, except for a very few that they can set out in their court rule.

However, the problem of why this case will not be heard in the supreme court would thus become even more important to a litigant who wishes to know. It would be very advisable for all litigants coming after them. Therefore, we move to amend to include a denial of leave for appeal — or to appeal would be added — so that the supreme court, when refusing to give the hearing, will give the reason why. The reason may merely be this is merely an issue of fact which has been adequately determined. They could give that reason very readily, very quickly. Then the individual litigant will know.

This is a way of allowing people to in the future gauge what they should try to take and spend their money for and time and energy in hoping to be heard in the supreme court, and will give guidance to them all, as well as the reason for dissenting opinion, to give guidance to the future, to others who will have a case somewhat analogous to this, and this is in furtherance of this basic theory that people have a right to know.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, this particular amendment as put forth by the minority was discussed at length within the committee. Now, it was the thinking of the majority of the committe that the provision that we have adopted will allow the Supreme Court of the state of Michigan to function very closely to the Supreme Court of the United States. You will have a trial on a circuit court level. Undoubtedly there will then be appeal, if the case is appealed, to the court of appeals, where you will get a written decision. This is very similar to what happens in the federal court.

Now, if you desire to go further, and you have approved that appellate jurisdiction shall be divided by rule, we shall assume for the moment that the supreme court will set up rules regarding appeals as a matter of right perhaps in criminal cases involving life sentences. The rest they will probably say shall be by leave. Now, in the federal court, when you finish in the court of appeals, you file a writ of certiorari in the supreme court. You file a brief, and the court, if it grants the writ — you proceed to argue your case. If the writ is denied, normally that is what it says.

On occasions the court will say: the writ is denied; see such and such a case, or handled previously, no substantial question, very similar, or something to that effect.

But when you write in a provision that requires the court to give the reason for denial of leave to appeal, you are almost, in effect, asking the court to judge each particular case. Because if it is going to deny the leave, it says to set up the reason, and the reason will only be after it examines it, and so you might just as well grant an appeal as a matter of right.

Now, you may make them as long or as short as you desire, but it was the thinking of the majority of the committee that this could best be left to the discretion of the court. Now, if the court says your leave is denied, it very adequately means that the court of appeals becomes your court of last resort, and the decision therein written, as you know at the federal level, will passively become that in the law of the state of Michigan. That means that the supreme court of this state agrees with the court of appeals; agrees with the trial court. If it didn't, it probably would grant the leave to appeal.

Assuming that the court of appeals affirms the trial court, the supreme court agrees, it sees no particular reason to give its reason therefor, and consequently we felt that this would be putting an undue burden of detail within the constitution and upon the court. We have granted the appellate jurisdiction as provided by supreme court rule.

In the next section to be determined we state that the jurisdiction of the court of appeals shall be by law, and we think that perhaps the legislature should best pass the statute stating what cases would be appealed as a matter of right. If the supreme court picks up the case, of course it will, and of necessity, write an opinion, as we have required. But to tell them in each and every case they have to give the reasons as to why they have denied the appeal, we think, is undue detail and undue burden once you have established, as you have implied, that the appellate jurisdiction of what the supreme court shall do will be actually upon what the supreme court deems to be important.

As such, the majority of the committee — we discussed this quite in detail in the committee, and the majority felt that the section as we now have it would be complete, would make mandatory the writing of decisions which clearly set out what the court had to write, and we did take out where it should be filed. It says with the clerk. We think the supreme court will file them with the clerk, or with the recorder, or whoever they have.

Therefore I would oppose the amendment on the basis that it is details that we had best leave to the court, since we have allowed the appellate jurisdiction to be by supreme court rule.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, Miss Donnelly requests you yield to her.

MR. DANHOF: Certainly.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: I would like to ask Mr. Danhof 2 questions. One — this may be my lack of knowledge; this may have happened in my absence, and, if it is, I do wish to know this. You say the majority believes. The last time this came up in committee, to my best knowledge, the vote was 9 to 9, and I lack the knowledge of when the majority made the decision that you say they made. Now, maybe they did. I don't want to impute that this isn't true, but to my best knowledge the vote was 9 to 9.

MR. DANHOF: I never argue with a lady. If that was the vote, I don't have the details. But let me put it this way: the majority would not concur in putting in what the minority wanted to. If that was the case, I will not argue with Miss Donnelly as to the vote.

MISS DONNELLY: May I ask you another question? You impute to me — and I am sure you don't wish to, and I think this is for the clarification of everybody — that when the supreme court does deny leave of appeal they do decide this, don't they, and therefore they do analyze the facts, and when you say this requires them practically to make the decision you do not wish to impute that they don't review everything first, do you?

MR. DANHOF: I am not present in the chambers. I would hope that they give due consideration to it. I don't know. But I would imagine they do, not wishing to impute the honesty and integrity of the court. I may have to practice there some day.

MISS DONNELLY: I just wanted to clarify that. I didn't think you meant to say that they didn't consider them. All we are saying is, give the reasons in writing. It is not that we think they didn't consider them; we hope they did consider them. We just want to know what they decided.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize Mr. Garry Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, a couple of short questions, one to Mr. Danhof and one to Miss Donnelly. First of all, from your answer, Mr. Danhof, it appears that you do not interpret "decision" as meaning a decision on leave to appeal. Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, if the gentleman cares to answer, he can.

MR. DANHOF: Oh, you mean that when they deny a leave that that is not a decision? No. We interpret decision when they have taken the case and it has been argued and the briefs submitted and the record put before it. That would be the consideration of the committee, yes.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Now I am wondering what — it seems to me I have come across some cases where there has been a leave from an intermediate court of appeals, or an appeal from an intermediate court decision. Those are reported cases, on occasions, I believe, to some other jurisdiction. Is this the way other jurisdictions handle it? Do you know?

MR. DANHOF: You mean are the decisions of the court of appeals reported? My answer, I would imagine, is yes. As far as I know, they are, yes.

MR. G. E. BROWN: The decisions of those courts, yes, but I am asking you about the applications to the higher court, then.

MR. DANHOF: You mean when leave to appeal is filed and denied, is that reported?

MR. G. E. BROWN: Yes.

MR. DANHOF: To my knowledge, yes, but this would be a matter of practice and procedure, but I would assume the book publishing companies would pick that up in a hurry.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Okay. Now, leave to appeal in our supreme court, those matters are treated as window matters, so to speak, and it isn't a reported case as such on them. Now, then, I am wondering now, to direct a question to Miss Donnelly, and that is, did you contemplate that by adding this language, that you would make this a reported case, or merely that in the opinion rendered to the litigant that they would set forth their reasons? Now, where you have put this language, you have it after the preceding words that say "the facts and reasons shall be set forth," and do you contemplate then that the court would be required to set forth the facts as well as the reasons for denying the leave to appeal?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is directed to Miss Donnelly. Miss Donnelly is recognized.

MISS DONNELLY: I would contemplate that — to go back momentarily, originally the issue on the writ, or the question on the habeas corpus writ, is now treated as a window matter. To follow this logically, then, Mr. Danhof would have to say that window matters will be decided. Now, I don't interpret that window matters necessarily, except where they refer to prerogative writs, would be, but I believe that an individual is entitled to know.

Now, whether they have to publish in the long form is not what I intend. I would say a very short and concise statement could be made interpreting what the — in effect, if they were to print the intermediate courts, then the need to print all the facts would not be. But I don't think we are anticipating intermediate court's opinions being printed.

I think particularly of value to all people would be why this leave is denied, as well as why one is granted. This, in effect, gives them another decision. Therefore it would seem to me that a very short, concise statement that leave to appeal in case so and so versus so and so is denied because it is merely a question of fact, wherein the inferior court has more than adequately explored the field. A very short, concise statement.

I will stipulate that the nature of this draft is a little loose there, and I can see the reason for your question. Perhaps we should have redrafted this better. I think there is reason to think that. I wouldn't anticipate that they would have to write the whole case history up, no.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: I think there is some merit in your amendment. However, I think the place it is put in the language of the committee will require them to, in effect, recite the facts and recite the reasons much like they would in any other decision. That is why I wanted to clarify this point, because I would not be in favor of that. Conceivably this is a matter that style and drafting could take care of.

MR. DANHOF: If Mr. Brown will yield for just a moment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown, will you yield to Mr. Danhof?

MR. DANHOF: Now, you talk about the window matters, and of course they are not reported. However, it would be of very little import since the circuit court cases are not, as such, reported. I mean, there is no use reporting a denial for leave to appeal unless you are going to set up all the case history of it, when you don't have the circuit court case history in front of you. And when you get the federal type of reporting, where you have first a district court, if it is a case of fair import, and all of the court of appeals, then when the supreme court denies the writ or the leave to appeal it has real import.

Now, this is a matter that you can't spell out in the constitution, about whether they are going to publish the court of appeals, but I think that if you wanted a court rule or practice or procedure even by statute, that if the appeals and the decisions are fully reported from the court of appeals, that then the supreme court would begin to publish as they do in the back of the U. S. Reports, the case of so and so, writ denied. This would in turn mean something. But I don't think we should write that in and make it mandatory. Now, maybe that is what you have in mind, Mr. Brown. I don't know.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Mr. Danhof already has asserted the rules, but would you say this possibly could be done by the legislature in setting forth what matters shall be done in connection with the leave to appeal? I am wondering about what happens to section c where we have just said that the court shall have complete jurisdiction over the practice and procedure, and therefore very conceivably the court may say that we will not issue any reasons, we will not do anything in this regard, we will continue the practice of merely filing and sending back an order of the application for leave to appeal denied.

MR. DANHOF: I wasn't talking about who or what could be appealed. I was talking about the publication of court decisions, which I think might — our public records, in effect, could be moved that they all be — I suppose we could pass a law that all court decisions will be published. I don't know. This is what I was referring to, more than knowing who would appeal, and the manner and method is court rules of practice. This would be regulated by the court.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, first I would like to, with your permission, direct a question to Mr. Danhof.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. NORRIS: I wonder if he would pull the shade on window matters? Just what do we mean by window matters?

MR. DANHOF: As near as I can figure out, it is everything the supreme court handles that you do not read about in books, Dr. Norris. It is petitions for writs of habeas corpus, leaves to appeal, or various requests for writs that are forwarded to the court which are not, you might say, substantive cases wherein Jones, plaintiff, appeals a case against Smith, defendant, or vice versa. They are never quite clear just what they mean by window matters, but it involves not necessarily the appeal of the particular case, but rather, perhaps, after somebody has been convicted, he goes to jail, and then begins to file for writ of habeas corpus, or petition to remand, or something like that. We obtained this from the supreme court justices. Maybe some of the other members of my committee can enlighten you a little bit further. Maybe Mr. Cudlip, maybe even Dr. Nord can. This is where we obtained the language, but it is everything but the actual cases that are actually formally appealed. It is prerogative writ requests, and things along that manner.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: It is the recollection of the Chair, Mr. Norris, that the term derived from a habit of the justices of the supreme court in the early days of putting these requests up on the window sill until they were prepared to deal with them.

MR. NORRIS: Well, I had hoped the question would throw a little light on that subject. I am not so sure it has. I gather that what amounts to a window matter is that upon which the court has not exercised its judicial power to write a decision, and I am a little disturbed about it.

I am quite sympathetic to the amendment, Mr. Chairman. I think that a day in court includes an opinion at all levels, and as much as possible on all matters. I think that the litigant is, after all, a member of the public, and there is a little disposition on the part of the bench and bar sometimes not to remember that the bench and bar exist to serve the public, and the public doesn't exist to serve the bench and bar. And if we are going to take what I believe is the position that our service of the judicial power by way of the constitution is to fulfill the needs of the public, the public has a right to know the reasons that are assigned for denial on appeal.

I think this wording here, when it refers to prerogative writs, then I take it there would be a decision on all prerogative writs, and I would assume that would include a writ of mandamus, quo warranto, writ of prohibition, and all the rest of them, including writ of habeas corpus.

I am a little disturbed by the attitude of some of the judiciary, and a little bit disturbed by what Mr. Danhof suggested, that the writ of habeas corpus by people who are in jail, that is, that people who don't have the means to hire counsel, have used a petition for writ of habeas corpus for the purpose of getting a review of facts and law regarding their incarceration, and I don't think the fact that they do not have the means to procure a counsel ought to be a reason for not having reasons assigned for the denial of the writ.

I support the amendment because I believe that there ought to be a statement of facts and the reasons therefor. If the supreme court considers it at all, it must have arrived at a rational basis for its decision to deny appeal, and if it has a rational basis there is no reason why it ought not to say so in writing to the parties who are appealing. I support the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Taylor, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: This is where Mr. Danhof and I begin to part company. I am happy at last to have an opportunity to join with these 3 hard working members of the committee who have been up until now carrying the load all by themselves. This was a matter that the committee was somewhat evenly divided upon, and my recollection was that we really didn't spend a lot of time on it, because not all the lawyers on the committee had had the experience of the terrible disappointment of having these matters denied up there and then wondering forevermore why.

I don't think there is anything more difficult or frustrating to a lawyer, and particularly if you are representing a municipality — and these things, Mr. Norris, come up very, very frequently with respect to writs of mandamus and to injunctions whether they are granted or not granted — because you don't have a final order from which you have an appeal as a matter of right, and they frequently involve great sums of money and a great many personal and individual and community rights.

For example, this weekend I spent about a day and a half of my two days home working on a brief, answering a brief on an application for a leave to appeal. The person making the application against the municipality filed about an 18 or 20 page brief. Mine is much shorter. But after one of the judges reads this over there, I think that the very least he could do would be to write a single paragraph and say this is the reason why I am denying it. .

If the application for leave to appeal is granted, then you find out what happened because you then go on with the trial of the matter in the supreme court, the hearing. You perfect the record, and it goes into the books, and everybody knows why the court did what it did. But your rights are as fully and as completely terminated, if you happened to be the applicant, when that court says no, we won't listen to your appeal, as if you had the full hearing and then they said no.

If they grant you leave to appeal, and then you have the hearing, then you find out why they are not going to give you the relief that you think you are entitled to. But if you simply get a form — and this is the way it is done: you get a form back, and there is a place to fill in the word "not," and it says "The application for leave to appeal the above entitled case has — blank — been approved," and if they deny it they put the word "not" in there. Now, this is a rather summary way to dispose of it, and Bob indicates they occasionally go to the extent of saying "because we heard a case similar to this before," but I have seen several of these in the last 5 or 6 years, and I have never seen anything beyond 3 or 4 words, cursory words — a very cursory explanation, and nothing that you can take back, for example, to a municipal board or body or to the citizens of the community and explain why they are going to have a gasoline station right on the corner next door to a church, for example.

This is a very serious matter, and Garry Brown raises a very good question. I don't think that anybody, at the time that we discussed this in committee, anticipated that we were going to inject this point of procedure into the record books to the extent of requiring the printing of these as a permanent record.

The reasons for denial in these matters are only of interest primarily to the people involved. They are not binding on anybody else. They do provide direction for people so that — as a matter of fact, it has been suggested that the supreme court would have more work if this were done. I believe the converse is true. I believe that if, for example, all of the attorneys involved with a particular type of municipal problem were able to obtain a copy of a well reasoned reason, even a few paragraphs, as to why a particular action was taken, it would prevent other attorneys from going back and asking for the same thing knowing they weren't going to get it.

As Mr. Norris has said, all of us hate to believe that the supreme court or any member thereof — and you must remember that these matters are generally determined by a single judge, not the court sitting en banc — must have some reason for saying to a person: we are not going to hear you further. You are through. You have gone as far as you can go.

Now, having made up its mind that the court shouldn't entertain this matter any further, it is a rather simple matter, it seems to me, to dictate a couple of paragraphs to say why. This would produce the second result, and that is that we have no assurance and no way of knowing that there is any consistency in the way these are handled between different judges on the bench.

I had one granted about 3 or 4 years ago, and very competent counsel — I had a whole battery of them. I had even the proverbial big city lawyers from New York on the other side — who had a whole string of cases showing me that the court wouldn't entertain a petition in this type of matter, and they did. But if they had been able to show me why, they probably could have talked me out of it and saved everybody a lot of time and trouble. But nobody knows why they turned them down, so you have to just take your chances up there and see what happens.

Now, case A is turned down by Judge 1, and 2 months later the same set of circumstances come up, and Judge 2 happens to catch it on his window sill, and he says, "Okay, the court will hear this." Now, those 2 cases might be identical, but Judge 2 is so busy, they are both so busy, that they rarely know what's going on between them on miscellaneous or window sill matters, as they are called, and if there was a reason given and a record kept, I think it would tend to cause the reasons for them being allowed or disallowed to become more uniform, and instead of increasing the work over there, it would cut it down immeasurably.

It doesn't seem at all right that you should ever go into a court with a valuable right and have a decision made, so to speak, under a bushel basket and not really know why unless you happen to, by accident, bump into the supreme court justice who happens to catch that matter, and he happens to remember it from the many hundreds of others, and he says, "Oh, yes, I remember that one, and this is what I thought at the time." This is a very unsatisfactory way to find out what happened up there.

One correction could possibly be made — maybe Miss Donnelly might consent to changing it — to meet Garry Brown's question. Where you add the words "and denial of leave to appeal," maybe "and reasons for denial of leave to appeal" would make it clear that with respect to the denial of leave to appeal we don't want a reiteration of the facts, but just a statement of reasons.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: As a matter of fact, I think we had that in originally, and it sort of got lost. I definitely agree.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly, it would be appreciated, the Chair is sure, by the secretary, if you would prepare your amendment in the precise form in which you would like to have it approved, and present it to him while we are hearing from Mr. Ostrow and Mr. Garry Brown. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Ostrow.

MR. OSTROW: I support the Donnelly amendment. As a matter of fact, one of the reasons why I was in favor of an intermediate court of appeals was to give the supreme court the time to handle leaves to appeal properly. Now, for the benefit of the laymen, that is, the nonlawyers in this committee, there are very, very many cases in which the application for the the leave to appeal is the end of the litigation. It is not just in criminal cases or municipal cases.

I am not sure of the law at the present time, but at one time workmen's compensation cases could only get into the supreme court by applications for leave to appeal. In those days, if I remember correctly, they didn't even have this blank that they sent back to you. We had a clerk of the supreme court once who didn't want to clutter up the office with a lot of files and filing system, and so he just wrote on the back of your application "Application denied." There was always a suspicion, never confirmed, that he either denied them or a single judge denied them; nobody knew quite how or why they were denied.

These things are very important matters. Every supreme court case is an important matter not only to the litigant, but every day of your life you are affected by supreme court cases that you never heard of. I know it is a tendency on the part of some laymen to say, "I have never even been in the circuit court; what do I care about the supreme court? That is for the lawyers." Well, you should care about the supreme court; you should care about the circuit court; because whether you have ever had a lawsuit in your life, you are daily affected by cases you never heard of.

I want to give you one. We had a statute in the state of Michigan that required factories to pay women the same wages as men. But it was a penal statute. It provided — I forget — $100 fine, 30 days in jail, and nobody paid any attention to it because corporations don't go to jail, and if you got a hundred women working for you, and you are saving 20 cents an hour, you can afford to pay a $100 dollar fine. The case went to the Supreme Court of the state of Michigan, and the supreme court held that the women could sue and recover the difference in wages, and the women did sue and did recover the difference in wages, and since then, because every employer knows that if he doesn't pay women the same as men, that is, in factories, they can sue and recover. It is automatic. And very few people have ever heard of the case. It happened over 20 years ago.

While I am here I may as well take this opportunity to say this to the nonlawyers: here is your greatest chance to get free legal advice. You have got 56 lawyers here. If you don't understand what they are talking about, get up on your feet and make them explain it to you. Because if you don't understand, how are you going to go back home and explain why you voted for or against something? There is nothing so technical that it can't be explained to you, and anybody who knows what they are talking about can explain it so that you can understand it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes Mr. Garry Brown.

MR. MADAR: Point of personal privilege.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: State your point, Mr. Madar.

MR. MADAR: Well, I just thought that I would like to find out now from Mr. Ostrow how we are going to get this good information. It seems to me there have been quite a few attorneys here who didn't know what the other attorneys were talking about. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: As the Chair has pointed out also, from time to time they have talked largely to one another; but notes that our attendance this evening is much better. Mr. Ostrow.

MR. OSTROW: Let me say this in connection with that question: that is one thing that attorneys always get, that attorneys disagree. Certainly they disagree. Courts disagree. But at least you can get both sides of the question and then make up your own mind as to which you think is the better side. I don't claim that we can resolve all questions or agree, but at least get both sides of the question so you can talk intelligently on either side. Then your guess is as good as ours, but at least make it an educated guess and don't just toss a coin.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Garry Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the question raised by Mr. Norris a few minutes ago, I thought it still might be worthy of an answer to that question. In addition to the matters he mentioned as far as the appeals in the matter, of course, all of your motions and so on, that are pending in the case before its final adjudication are treated as window matters; such as motions for emergency consideration of appeal, and things of this nature. I think in fairness we should say, too, that the court, at least my understanding has been that not only one judge decides this matter, but he tries by a telephone conference to confirm that which he has decided. Now, I trust that he does attempt to contact a majority of the court with respect to these matters, and I will share that doubt at least in preference of the court before I decide to go along with Bill Ford that one man decides all this.

I think that this also raises a further problem, though, with respect to this matter of giving reasons for denial of leave to appeal, and that is that if this is done on a telephone conference basis, very conceivably it would be impossible for each of the judges to set forth his dissent as to whether or not there is going to be granted a leave to appeal. Really, I think that this is a matter which you cannot dispose of by just inserting a word or two; but very probably should be the subject of an entirely new sentence dealing with matters involving leave to appeal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brown, will you yield to Mr. Norris? Mr. Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Do I understand you, sir, to defend a practice of deciding leaves to appeal by one person confirming it by a phone call?

MR. G. E. BROWN: It isn't my privilege to say, really, Mr. Norris, as to how that should be decided. I think that should be decided by the court, of course, but I am saying that this is the practice, as I understand it. I am sure that if one of the justices were here, he would say that this is decided by the full court. "Of course, we don't meet together to decide these things, very possibly, but we all concur in the decision." Whether that is true or not, I don't know. I think, though, that with an appellate court you wouldn't have so much of this window matter, and that very possibly this will permit the supreme court, as such, to actually set forth their reasons, and to meet to determine these things such as on every Tuesday morning when they decide motions.

MR. NORRIS: I appreciate what you said, but I do think that what you have said, which may have some semblance to the actual practice, is added confirmation for the need to support the Donnelly amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair would suggest that some of the recent argument has tended to wander slightly from the point, and would request the succeeding speakers to confine themselves to the Donnelly amendment, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: I would like to point out, Mr. Norris, that I also favor the Donnelly amendment, with the objections I have raised in the wording of it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. King.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I would like to address a question to the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof, if I may.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. KING: Mr. Danhof, do you know of any state where the court states its reason for denying appeal? In your study of this matter did you uncover any state?

MR. DANHOF: Offhand I can't recall any, no. You mean where they have a court of appeals, I assume?

MR. KING: Well, either where they have an intermediate court or where they don't.

MR. DANHOF: You see, if I may, that is where you have to read this particular idea into the context. You can't read the present procedure into the court system that we have tentatively agreed to set up. That is the problem that I think is developing now. In those states where they have intermediate courts, New York, Illinois and New Jersey, I cannot recall any where they make it mandatory in the constitution. They might have it in the court rules, or someplace like that, but not that I can recall in the constitution.

MR. KING: I don't recall ever running into that kind of situation in my study of the law as a student, and I further think that there is great danger in asking a court for brief reasons for denying leave. I don't see how they can do it in one or two sentences. This is contrary to my understanding of the judicial system in this country.

I could cite many cases where the court has reversed itself over a number of years, and I am sure you can. Brown vs. School Board of Topeka, Kansas; Mapp vs. Ohio. But I don't want to say anything that is controversial here.

But it seems to me that this is something which is best left to the discretion of the court; that as time goes on, if and when the court feels constrained to reverse itself on an earlier decision, at that time it can, and it does, and it should have that right. I don't for a minute deny them that right.

I think perhaps that if you want to make sure that each judge has read the leave for appeal, then put in the constitution that each judge shall sign that he either concurs or does not concur in the denial. Perhaps at a later date he will be embarrassed if in fact he hasn't read the case. I think this is a dangerous step forward, and it is contrary to my understanding of the judicial practice in this country.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Iverson.

MR. IVERSON: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I am rather amazed, myself, at the action of many lawyers around here attempting to undo what this committee has already done. You will recall the other day that you agreed to what amounts to a 5 tier court system, and you have agreed to set up a court of appeals. One of the main reasons for that court of appeals is the fact that one of our other committees proposed that an appeal in all criminal cases as a matter of right shall be granted. That was one of the reasons. Another reason why this court of appeals was set up was for the purpose of relieving the supreme court of many so called minor matters, window sill matters, if you please, and I submit, and I am not inviting this, but I submit that if any language of this kind is necessary at all it belongs in Committee Proposal 92, where we set up and created actually the court of appeals.

I think you are completely undoing, if you adopt this amendment, everything that we are trying to do here. Has anyone any doubt in this room that on an appeal as a matter of right to the court of appeals, that there would not be a written opinion? Has anybody in this room got any idea that if someone asks for leave to appeal to the supreme court, that if that court denied the appeal without any comment, that there would be any question but what they agreed with the court of appeals?

So what you are doing by this amendment is absolutely nullifying what we are trying to do in this court system. I am not inviting it, but if you need it any place at all, and I don't say you need it, you need it in the other provision setting up the court of appeals. I hope you will not go along with this amendment. If you do, you are completely nullifying what we have already done here in the past few days.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: Well, I agree with Mr. Iverson, but probably a little more than he will agree with me. I think that he is right when he says that this belongs in Committee Proposal 92, but I think it belongs there, also. If you read over Committee Proposal 92, that mentions, in passing almost, an intermediate appellate court that will be set up along any rules that the supreme court may see fit to set this court up with. Now, there is no provision in Committee Proposal 92 for any type of decision in the appellate court. We may wind up with an appellate court here that has no written record. We have trial courts now that have no written record outside of the file, and we have all these items going to the supreme court where we have no written records right now.

This is what we are trying to undo. We want attorneys who come around a year from now with the same problems that an attorney has today to know whether or not it is going to serve his client any purpose, or whether or not he is going to save his client any money, or possibly get his client off with a bad decision, or a decision that he considers bad, from a lower court. Without these opinions, all attorneys are in the dark, and all clients are in the dark. You tell your client: possibly we can do something on appeal, we will apply for an appeal, and your client calls you up some time later and says: when are we going up? And all you can tell him is that the supreme court said no, and you can't say why or any other reason. All you can give your client is a no for the fee that he has paid you, if you are lucky enough to have gotten it already, because from there on in you can just whistle for it because you are not going to get it.

Now, because of the fact that I think 92 is just too wide open and just too vague as far as what this intermediate appellate court is going to provide for us, I feel that we should adopt the amendment to at least 91, and possibly 92, also, for the simple reason that we will want written records between the trial level and possibly the appellate level to stem off this future work.

Now, as far as taking a dangerous step forward, I think, frankly, this is a situation that a lot of attorneys have objected to for quite a while now, and as far as myself is concerned, and obviously the proponents here, this is not a dangerous step forward. As far as the other remarks tend to lead us to the belief that the appellate court will have nothing but an excess amount of work here: obviously they read these matters now, they make a decision and they write "not" on the little blank line in your request for an appeal.

It is not asking for too much to ask the court to just go a little further and write out 2 or 3 sentences giving you exactly, in as short a form as possible, their reasons for not entertaining your appeal. This is all that we are asking the court to do, is write down what they are deciding in their minds right now. For these reasons I would support the proposed amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize one of the movers of the amendment, Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: I examined one file of leave to appeal the other day over at the supreme court. I don't even remember the case. But I asked for a case where there had been leave to appeal filed, and I looked that file over very carefully, and that file only bore the signature of one judge, and that individual had practically no criminal experience; and this involved a criminal case, of course. If you have a case now which involves over $500, why, you can appeal to the supreme court as a matter of right, and then they have to give you a decision.

Another thing on leave to appeal, on this application for leave to appeal, a denial of it: a written decision would have to be signed by all 8 judges or 8 or 9 judges, whatever there is, and then you will know that each looked at it, because a judge is not going to sign that decision unless he is familiar with the case. So that if a man is charged with murder or manslaughter or embezzlement, or some serious crime, I think he is entitled to know why the supreme court has decided the case against him. I think that everybody — the lawyer is entitled to know. And, as was previously stated, then you will be guided in the future by their decision.

So I ask you to support this amendment. I think it is of great benefit and of no damage to anyone.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Wanger.

MR. WANGER: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, in speaking in opposition to this amendment, I do so, not because I am out of sympathy with some of the people who have urged it, but rather because I think that this amendment approaches the problem in absolutely the wrong way. It approaches it from the wrong direction. An application for leave for appeal is something which any one who is disgruntled with the decision that he received in the court below can send up to the supreme court. It is a request. It admits we don't have a right to appeal under the law, but it says "We would like to appeal anyway, and in the exercise of your discretion won't you let us appeal?"

It seems to me rather than force the court to write an opinion, even a short one, on each of these that come up, it would be much better to take these important matters which have been talked about, and which the lawyers are all concerned about, and make a provision in the law that there shall be a right to appeal, and to save the court from the burden of having to write an opinion discussing the reasons and the facts of these little minor matters which anybody can send up to them and try to get a decision on. And believe me, a lot of people will try to get such a decision, and it can prove to be embarrassing, and the reason that it can prove to be embarrassing is because of the fact that even a short opinion of the court, if it is printed up officially or unofficially and passed around, can become precedent for future action. We don't want those precedents to be based on snap judgments, whether by 1 judge or 2 judges or 3 or a dozen judges.

That is all they are going to be if you require one of these written opinions for every little matter that somebody wants to appeal on. They have to come down. This is going to be a snap judgment, and it is going to be, as Mr. Ford pointed out some minutes ago, it will be regarded as a precedent. We don't want that kind of precedent in Michigan, and it would be much better to approach this in the other direction by taking those important matters and giving them a right to appeal on those, rather than requiring an opinion on everything.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I thought perhaps we might be able to get a vote, and I inquired, and there are some 3 or 4 speakers left, and in view of the hour I move that we do now rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves the committee do now rise. All in favor say aye. Opposed?

The motion prevails. The committee will rise.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, Vice President Romney resumed the Chair.]

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration several matters of which the secretary will give a detailed report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 91, has considered amendments thereto, has come to no final resolution thereon. This completes the report of the committee of the whole.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Anspach.

MR. ANSPACH: Mr. President and fellow delegates, I appreciate the comments of Mr. Ostrow, being a layman. For the encouragement of all of you the proposals come from the committee, the minority reports and the amendments.

I think I feel like this individual who was on the rubberneck wagon in the city of Detroit. They were going along in the rubberneck wagon, and the ballyhooer said, "On the right, ladies and gentlemen, we have the home of Mr. Ford," and an old lady leaned forward and said, "Henry Ford?" The ballyhooer said, "No, Edsel Ford."

After a while he said, "On the left we have the home of Mr. Dodge." The old lady leaned forward and said, "Horace Dodge?" The ballyhooer said, "No, John Dodge."

A little later on the ballyhooer said, "On the left we have Christ Church." The old lady didn't say a thing, and a man back of her tapped on her shoulder and said, "Go ahead, lady, you can't always be wrong." (laughter)

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Leppien.

MR. LEPPIEN: Mr. President, I move the convention recess until 8:00 p.m. this evening.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: You have heard the motion. Those in favor say aye. Opposed?

We stand in recess until 8:00 p.m. this evening.

[Whereupon, at 6:00 o'clock p.m., the convention recessed; and, at 8:00 o'clock p.m., reconvened.]

Will the convention come to order please.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: Delegate Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the purpose of considering items on the calendar of general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT ROMNEY: You have heard the motion. All those in favor say aye. Opposed?

The motion prevails. Delegate Van Dusen will preside.

[Whereupon, Mr. Van Dusen assumed the Chair to preside as chairman of the committee of the whole.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will be in order. When last the committee sat, it was considering section e of Committee Proposal 91. The business before the committee is an amendment to section e offered by Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The minority report amendment offered by Miss Donnelly and Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister has been revised so that it now reads:

1. Amend page 2, line 11, after "decision" by inserting "and reasons for each denial of leave to appeal"; so that the sentence will read:

> Decisions of the supreme court, including all decisions on prerogative writs, shall be in writing and shall contain a concise statement of the facts and reasons for each decision and reasons for each denial of leave to appeal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, the Chair had when we last sat 3 delegates seeking recognition. The first of those was the delegate from Detroit, Dr. Nord. Do you see recognition at this time, Dr. Nord?

MR. NORD: Mr. Chairman, on this question of whether or not there should be a written decision on a denial of a leave to appeal, I have heard both sides of the argument during debate and also during dinner, and I believe there is a great deal to be said on both sides. But I would like to speak only on one side at a time. It is certainly true that this is by no means an open and shut case on either side, and that is evidenced to by the 9 to 9 vote in the committee.

I think the underlying problem is the thinking that causes the trouble, and we may not be able to cure that. The underlying trouble has to do, in my opinion, with the nature of the leave to appeal. Leave to appeal, in essence, means that the court says there is a review, but — that is, you have a right to file an application for review — they may decide to hear it and then again they may not entirely in their discretion, entirely as a matter of grace. Now, that is bound to cause trouble no matter what we do with it, because it is just antagonistic to our whole idea of justice that a court, if it feels like it, without any reason, can say, "Well, we will give you a hearing," and, if it feels like it, can say, "Well, we will not give you a hearing." So therefore we are probably not going to solve this whole problem as long as there is an appeal of that nature.

But assuming that the court rules will continue to permit leave to appeal in some cases, that is to say that they will provide by rule for a review of 2 kinds similar to what the United States supreme court does, namely, review by appeal where there is a right to review and review by certiorari where there is only leave to appeal or you request leave to appeal. Assuming that they will continue those both, and that we will have these cases where you have to request leave to appeal, then we get down to the meat of the question as proposed by Miss Donnelly, and that is this: if the court has said there can be review of that type, is it proper for the court then, absolutely at their own discretion, for no reason stated, to deny a hearing? Miss Donnelly has said the answer to that question is no; that if there is a review at all of that type, even if it is a matter of leave, that the least the court should do is state why they are not hearing.

It seems to me that the basic type of appeal here or review is not a very high class type of justice because of the fact that it's got this matter of grace or discretion in it. But, however, as long as that exists we ought to at least do something to make it reasonably fair. What we ought to do with it, if we retain it at all, or if the court retains it at all, is to make sure that every person who goes to the trouble of filing an application for leave to appeal, even if they are not given a hearing, at least they are not turned down just point blank, cold, in a rather cool and calculated manner, with no reason stated whatsoever.

I understand the point of view that has been raised by a number of delegates that this is a departure from established practice. This is by no means a settled or well settled approach. It is a new approach, in my opinion. I don't believe that makes it a bad approach. I believe we have to judge on the merits whether it is a good idea or bad idea. It seems to me that on the whole, if there is going to be such type of review, the least we can expect from the court is a decision, and we should not be deterred from requiring the court to make such a decision or such statement of reason, rather, merely on the grounds that this will be a nuisance to the court and it will be trouble, and they don't like it. My feelings about that is it is unfortunate if it is a nuisance, unfortunate they don't like it, but it is more important that the person who believes he has valuable rights, who by court rule is permitted to apply to the court for review, be given some answer more than just the word "no."

Therefore, on the whole, I believe the amendment is well founded and it ought to be supported, and I intend to support it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The secretary will reread the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment as revised is as follows:

1. Amend page 2, line 11, after "decision" by inserting "and reasons for each denial of leave to appeal".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Allegan, Mr. Farnsworth.

MR. FARNSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I am going to speak in favor of the adoption of the amendment. I am particularly appreciative of Mr. Ostrow's remarks this afternoon when he asked us if we didn't understand what the lawyers were talking about, that we please get up and ask questions, and I don't know if you understand quite thoroughly, Mr. Ostrow, what you have laid yourself open to, because now the laymen are going to get into the act.

But it seems to me that here is something that we nonlawyers can understand. I don't believe there is any question about it. It simply says that if we are unfortunate enough to get into court, and we get all the way up to the supreme court and they say: no, we are sorry, we can't hear your case, that they simply must give us some reason in writing. Now it seems to me that that is a rather reasonable request. It seems to me there is something that the nonlawyers can understand. It seems to me that here is an opportunity for the nonlawyers in this committee to help the lawyers who are apparently unable to make up their minds which way this thing is going to go, and we should support their amendment and decide for them.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Oakland, Mr. Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Miss Donnelly a question, if she would care to answer.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the lady cares to answer.

MR. KUHN: Miss Donnelly, under your amendment if I had a case which would have original jurisdiction in the Supreme Court of Michigan, and the supreme court would deny my motion, would they have to write a reason out under your amendment?

MISS DONNELLY: If I understood your question, if you have a case that has original jurisdiction in the supreme court?

MR. KUHN: Of the state of Michigan; a writ of mandamus against a state official, which would be — the original jurisdiction would be the only place I could go.

MISS DONNELLY: I would say yes. The only thing that bothers me is, I am not so sure we have got anything that's got original jurisdiction in the supreme court anymore, assuming the constitution is passed. This is what bothers me. Assuming that there is such a thing, the answer would be yes.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one question of the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If Mr. Danhof cares to answer.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Danhof, are you aware that today, under our present setup, that we could have a case which the supreme court would have original jurisdiction on a writ of mandamus of a state official, and that the supreme court could deny it and give us no reason why they denied it?

MR. DANHOF: Yes.

MR. KUHN: Do you think this is a good practice to be following? In other words, it would be our first chance to have our day in court, and yet we wouldn't know what the reason was we were thrown out of court.

MR. DANHOF: I think if you are going to grant, as you are in this case, where you are going to have most of this by rule, I would imagine that these things will be — there may be a question of what the supreme court has. But I think part and parcel of it, if the case is of sufficient import, the court will, under the new system, begin to report this, too, in their cases. I think we have tried to judge the past too much by what we intend for the future. I think in the past they have found that because of the work load there, and the numerous motions, they have not tended to write long decisions or report them. But in the future we would hope that the decisions that they make will be of sufficient import that they will be reported.

I can think there may be cases where a particular case should not be reported regarding the facts or what is involved. There might be a time when the court will say it is better that this one not be reported, and maybe they should be allowed that leeway. If it involves, like you say, a state official, there may be some personal reasons or something in there that it is not as good that it be reported, but the fact is, the only thing you find on the record is the writ granted or not, and all of the reasons and the thinking behind it should well be left to the court.

You have rules now to suppress a lot of cases, at least on the trial level. I don't know. We aren't prohibiting the court from doing anything. If they want to write their reasons for denying an appeal, let them do it. But what we are setting up is a new practice, and I don't think we can look 20, 30 years in the future to find out. Let them work it out as their practice. I have never known a court that is so shrinking that it has not printed most of its decisions that it can possibly get into print. It has been my knowledge that the lawyers are getting more books, not less.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say I support the Donnelly amendment for the reasons I was trying to state.

We had a case several years ago which did involve a state official. It was a very serious question on an election; whether or not an election law was constitutional. I thought I hired the best attorney in our city. He told me it was unconstitutional. All the circuit judges seemed to think it was unconstitutional, and that was the word we had by way of grapevine. We went to the supreme court, and the only thing we got there was the word "denied," and this was the court of original jurisdiction.

Now we do not know whether the statute is constitutional, whether it was a matter of timing, being too close to election, or what their problem was, and I think it is time that the supreme court put their decisions in writing on why they are denying these motions.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will suggest that the question at the moment is on the Donnelly amendment, which deals with statement of reasons for denial of leave to appeal, and will request the delegates to confine themselves to that question. Mr. Prettie.

MR. PRETTIE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Fellow delegates, I think it may be interesting to all of us to give a thought to what by way of work volume this proposed amendment will mean to the supreme court of our state.

I have before me one document that was furnished to the members of our committee on judicial branch, A Review of Judicial Administration at the Appellate Level in the State of Michigan, prepared under the supervision of Dr. Joiner of the University of Michigan law school. Two short excerpts I think will give you some idea of the work volume with which we are dealing in this amendment. Reading from page 3 of the pamphlet, the statement is made that "In 1956," which, incidentally, was the last year for which such statistics were available, "there were 250 written opinions handed down by the supreme court of this state." This is in fully prepared and presented cases with printed record and printed briefs. The pamphlet continues:

> This is one of the heaviest loads carried by any court of a state of comparable size.

Skipping to the next following paragraph:

> This, however, is but a part of the total work of this court. (In addition to the 250 cases the court in 1956 was faced with the decision of 591 interlocutory motions or window matters.) Thus, each week 14 of these matters must be decided, many of which are inadequately briefed, the decision of which determines in many instances the merits of a lawsuit. In most of the 591 interlocutory motions an informal memorandum is prepared by a judge and circulated among the justices. Often the time taken in preparation of this memorandum involves extensive research and briefing. Thus weekly each judge must first study briefs and records, prepare and polish substantially one major written opinion for the court.
> Second, study briefs and records of opinions of 7 other cases and prepare and polish such dissenting and concurring opinions as may be necessary, and, third, be prepared to discuss and decide up to 14 interlocutory motions and prepare a memorandum in at least 2 of them.

The appendix supporting this study appearing on page 48 analyzes some 50 different types of interlocutory motions that came before the court in the year under study, the year 1956.

I won't deal with all of them, but the most significant categories are leave to appeal in civil cases, of which there were 186, of which 104 were denied and 62 granted; leave to appeal in criminal cases, a total of 95, 72 denied and 23 granted; original writs or application for writs of mandamus 29, all denied; 42 writs of habeas corpus, 5 granted and 37 denied. And so I might analyze the rest of these categories. In summation, of these 548 interlocutory matters in that year, 186 were granted, 349 were denied.

The amendment we have under consideration would require the preparation and filing in that year of 349 decisions of the court. Although brief, they would certainly require the research that was referred to here. They would require a reason, statement of reasons for denial. I simply want to present these facts before you so you may intelligently vote upon the additional volume of work — I would dare say at least an increase of 100 per cent of the work load of the supreme court if this amendment be adopted.

Now, it may be said that the intervention of an intermediate court of appeals would screen out many of these applications, and I think this may be true. I have seen during my years in the attorney general's office many of these matters that have been referred to as window matters. They come primarily from a single source. They are very inadequately prepared, they are very inadequately briefed, an intelligent decision of them requires no end of research on the part of the justice who is required to write upon them, and unless we were to substantially increase the manpower of our courts at the appellate level, the proposed amendment would simply make impossible the work load that would be imposed upon our highest tribunal.

And until we can make some decisions on this other matter of the size of our courts and the establishment of an intermediate court of appeals, I find myself compelled to vote against the amendment because of the insuperable work load that statistically would be imposed upon our courts.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Ypsilanti, Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I rise to speak in support of the Donnelly amendment. I think it is about time that we gave some consideration to the litigants in these cases, and I don't think that the denial of the right, the power exercised by the court in merely saying "denied," is a proper showing of consideration to the litigants.

I don't have the figures before me, but the Supreme Court of Michigan decided only about half the cases in the year cited by Mr. Prettie that it did back in the '20s. There were some years in which it decided in written opinions over 500 cases, and now it is below 300.

I think that the amendment is foresighted in that it takes into consideration 2 factors that we haven't had in the past. First, that the committee report at least proposes to increase the number on the supreme court from 8 to 9; thus giving one more justice. It also takes into consideration that we will have an intermediate appellate court to act as a buffer between the circuit court, so to speak, and the supreme court. Therefore it seems to me that if a party has gone from the circuit court to the intermediate appellate court and had his case tried there — whether it is for or against him makes no difference — and then takes an application to the supreme court for leave to appeal, which is a matter of grace, that the least the supreme court can do is give the reason for that decision.

I don't say that it contemplates the type of decision that we get in an appeal that is heard on the merits, the length of it, but they can at least say that under the facts it is denied, or by virtue of such and such a decision it is denied, and at least the litigant — and again I am not speaking of the lawyers, but I am speaking of the parties — the party who has taken the trouble and gone to the expense of asking the supreme court to determine what his rights are, his basic rights in any case, is at least entitled to know why those 9 men denied him the right to have his case heard in the supreme court.

For that reason it just seems to be a matter of basic rights, it seems to be a matter that would be for the benefit of the entire state, and that the party involved at least would know why the door has been closed to him. For that reason I urge you to vote in favor of the Donnelly amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Taylor, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I looked for my copy of the document that Mr. Prettie was using, and he went through the figures rather rapidly. I wonder if I could ask, through the Chair, of Mr. Prettie if his statistics show what amount of the 349 not granted were criminal cases?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Prettie.

MR. PRETTIE: Yes, they do, Mr. Ford. The number of leaves to appeal in criminal cases not granted was 72. I might add that many of these, in my experience, come up on a writ of habeas corpus, and of 42 such applications, 37 were denied.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: So that we would have 72 plus 37 denials in criminal matters, is that correct?

MR. PRETTIE: That would be what the appendix to this pamphlet indicates.

MR. FORD: So we would have 109 cases included in your statistics that, if we have an intermediate court of appeals, will probably not find their way to the supreme court as window matters, but will go directly to the appellate court as a matter of right, is that right?

MR. PRETTIE: Hopefully that is true, although if Mr. Garry Brown's statement that an appeal is an appeal contemplates that you get into the supreme court as a right, they may, many of them, find their way there, too.

MR. FORD: I am going on the presumption that we are talking here in terms of the intent of the committee up until this point. Wasn't this their intentions, Mr. Prettie, in discussing the court, that by granting an automatic right to appeal in criminal matters, that those matters would go, in the first instance, directly to the intermediate appellate court?

MR. PRETTIE: In the first instance, yes.

MR. FORD: Thank you. Now, we shouldn't be too alarmed with these figures, because as I indicated a little while ago I agree with Dr. Nord that there is never an excuse for the courts to give less than full justice to the citizen because they are too busy. This would be an intolerable concept if we were to for one instant give in to it, and any argument that seeks to persuade you by saying that we should give people anything less than the full measure of their day in court because we might be burdening the court with a little more work than they would like to have seems to me to have no place in the consideration of the rights of people in a democracy.

Now, the intermediate court of appeals is going to be discussed later, but you must realize that when we are talking about this matter we are talking on the assumption that an intermediate court of appeals will be established, and on the assumption that it will follow pretty much the pattern of similar courts in other states, and somewhat the pattern of the federal system.

For example, our supreme court now has a great deal of its time taken up with appeals in negligence cases arising out of automobile accidents primarily. They are not cases of prime importance to anybody except the litigants involved. They are not making new law. They are up there on technical questions. They are up there on questions of the amount of damages, the measure of damages, the method used in measuring the damages, and as you review these advance sheets you read the same old stuff over and over and over again, because the supreme court is being asked to make the same decision, and the reason is that once you are involved in a civil case that involves more than $500, it doesn't matter how good your reason is for appealing, the supreme court has to listen to you, and when it denies your appeal it has to give you a reason, and it has to, in fact, print it in the books for all time to come.

Now, this kind of case very likely will not go to the supreme court in the first instance, and will meet its demise in the form of a formal decision at the appellate court level. So we are going to take this load off of the supreme court's shoulders.

Another series of cases that very recently have started to go up in larger numbers than they have been for some time are divorce cases, and again they are up there on questions of custody, questions of possible abuse of the judge's discretion — many things that are of importance and are not making rules that are to be followed by people throughout the state, but merely are important for that one case. And it would be our fond hope that cases that are not of general statewide concern, and cases that are not calculated to establish new principles of law or clarify otherwise hazy principles of law will not go beyond the appellate court level, and that in order to get beyond the appellate court level they would require something more than something in the nature of the application for leave, and that these would be very limited in their number.

I don't think if you consider from this point of view that the argument that we might be burdening the court over there by asking them to state the reasons why they do what they do has much merit.

I urge the support of the amendment proposed by Judge Leibrand, Mr. McAllister and Miss Donnelly.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Wayne, Mr. Mahinske. The Chair will remind the delegates that the subject under discussion is the Donnelly amendment. The Chair recognizes that relevant to that amendment are many other concerns, but will, nevertheless, ask respectfully that the delegates confine themselves as closely as possible to the subject under discussion. Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: I rise a second time on the proposed amendment here in view of the statistics that have been thrown out to us by Mr. Prettie. I am a little bit familiar with the report Mr. Prettie cites. There are 3 points that I would like to bring out that come to mind. One, the criminal matters that are so inadequately prepared, and so forth, that are denied, are, I would say, 98 per cent coming out of Cooper street down in Jackson and that is where the boys are all practicing law. This is why they are not too adequately prepared. Two, you notice that these are 1956 figures that Mr. Prettie has cited to us. There are 2 reasons for this, as far as I can see: the 1956 figures are the lowest work load figures that the supreme court has shown since 1929, and since they have reached that alltime low the supreme court has seen fit, for one reason or another, not to publish these figures anymore, and I would hesitate to think why, but I would assume that it is possibly because the figures are continually going down, and they would just rather not have these figures published. And this is something that is not mandatory on their part over there. And then, of course, we have all the arguments for the intermediate appellate court taking some of this proposed work load off of them. So, in view of these facts, I think that the statistics as presented should not — at least have not influenced my position in this matter and I still would rise in support of the amendment proposed.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, I do believe we ought to be somewhat cautious here and move our remarks to inculcate a spirit of respect, and place the supreme court where it should be, on the apex of our system of jurisprudence, and be cautious in indicating that there might be some reason that might not meet with public approval regarding the information on statistics.

I would be quite charitable with regard to the motivation as to why or why not certain data may be available. I do think, however, that we ought to weigh with due care and caution the data that was given to us by Delegate Prettie, and I am certain, too, that the data there was accurate, but he referred to the large number of interlocutory matters.

This motion, as I understand it, this amendment before us, deals with "and reasons for each denial of leave to appeal," and not with interlocutory matters. It deals exclusively with reasons assigned for the denial of leave to appeal.

Now, with regard to the data involved in that matter, I went over to Mr. Winters, the clerk of the Michigan supreme court, and he sent a letter to me on supreme court stationery dated November 27, 1961. This was with regard to the question of a right of appeal on a criminal case that I was preparing a memorandum on for our committee on declaration of rights, and this is what he indicated with regard to the data for the last year that data were available:

> In reply to your request of November 16, please be advised that during the period from November 1, 1960, to November 1, 1961, this court entered orders in 218 criminal cases. Of the 218 only 29 represented applications for leave to appeal granted. Of 39 petitions for writ of habeas corpus, 2 were granted. Of 30 petitions for writ of mandamus, none were granted.
> During the same period the court entered orders in 153 applications for leave to appeal in civil cases. Of the 153, 58 were granted and 95 were denied. In addition, 21 petitions for extraordinary writs were filed involving civil cases, of which 6 were granted and 15 denied.
> I hope this gives you the information you need in the form you can use.
> Mr. Donald Winters.

So that the volume that we are talking about, assuming that we have an intermediate appellate court to which there would be a right of appeal in a criminal case, and which would take care of that part of the problem, is some 95 cases out of 153 where leave was denied in a civil case, and I think that is the volume that we are talking about.

I think, further, that the question which was raised by Mr. Kuhn with respect to writ of mandamus was covered in the first sentence of the section proposed by the committee "decisions of the supreme court including all decisions of prerogative writ shall be in writing," and so forth. The writ of mandamus is a prerogative writ. And it does not envision that there would be a decision. It does mean in terms of the work load of 1960-61, where there were 30 petitions for writ of mandamus and none were granted, in those 30 cases there would be a decision to be expected from the Michigan supreme court in accordance with the committee's recommendation. And rightfully so, particularly in view of the fact that with reference to writ of mandamus the supreme court has original jurisdiction.

So, then, I think in terms of the volume of work involved, it would not be so voluminous as to call into question the second reconsideration of this matter, and I think that the Donnelly amendment ought to be supported. But I would, before leaving, suggest this point, and that is that what is significant is not only that there would be reasons assigned for the denial of appeal — and this would help the litigant, and would be in the best interest of the public — but it would indicate again that there would be a full day in court in the sense that a full day in court includes the reasons for a denial of leave to appeal.

And basically we are all under the umbrella of the proposition that this is a government of laws and not of men. That means that decisions cannot be arbitrary; that they be based on some rational reasons, and that the reasons ought to be declared in writing. And under the concept, the high concept of the exercise of judicial power under a government of laws and not of men, we ought to ask the supreme court, with the respect to which we accord it, to assign to us a reason when the important right to appeal is denied; remembering, remembering that the right of appeal is not a part of due process. It is not a constitutional right. It is a matter of grace in some respects, except as the constitution herein provides. So I urge support for the Donnelly amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Allegan, Mr. Farnsworth.

MR. FARNSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, in rising again in support of the Donnelly amendment, I am compelled to do so by the reason that our good friend, Ken Prettie from Hillsdale, gave us — the reason why we shouldn't go for the amendment — and the reason he gave was that it involved additional work to quite considerable extent. Well, what is this thing, Mr. Prettie, that we call justice? Is it something that we dole out to people when we are not very busy, or is it something that we give to them whether we are busy or whether we are not? This matter of research that you referred to: am I to believe that possibly the supreme court would take my matter under consideration and make a decision to deny the right to a review prior to the time that they made the research? Would they make that decision without going into the facts, completely researching it before they made that decision?

Now, I don't think the supreme court would, and so if they did make the research, I can see that a little extra work is required in writing down their reasons, or the results, or whatever they found out.

Again I am rising, Mr. Chairman, to try to help the lawyers out, believe me. This is with the best of intentions. I think we should heartily support the Donnelly amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Grand Rapids, Mr. Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. Chairman — thank you, Mr. Farnsworth, I am sure we need it — I am sure that all of the arguments pro and con on this thing far outstrip this necessity in this constitution.

But I am constrained to add just 1 or 2 things. I would like to ask one member of the sponsors of this amendment a question or two — perhaps Miss Donnelly — she seems to be one that is sponsoring it. I assume that this sentence applies only to application for leave to appeal; that the answer given by the court would be something like this, "Appeal denied. Reasons, none." Would that satisfy this amendment?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly, does the lady care to answer?

MISS DONNELLY: Mr. Tubbs, I suggest that you as a member of the bar are not serious in saying this.

MR. TUBBS: Let me ask you another question. I would like to ask a second question, Mr. Chairman, if Miss Donnelly would permit me. Now, this next opinion says "Appeal denied. Reasons, we do not like the brief filed for the appellant."

MISS DONNELLY: I like to use my first reasoning again. I don't believe they will do that, and I don't think you do, either.

MR. TUBBS: Third question: suppose the supreme court issues an opinion "Appeal denied. No reasons." Who and what will enforce the constitution?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Does the lady care to answer, Miss Donnelly?

MISS DONNELLY: I think you know the answer, Mr. Tubbs. Nothing will. But if the supreme court will so violate that part of the constitution, then we have a very, very serious problem in this state.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Madar. The Chair is sure, Mr. Madar, that you are impelled by the same motivations which brought Mr. Farnsworth to his feet.

MR. MADAR: Well, I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I believe that the laymen should say something this evening about this particular portion of the judicial proposal, and I might say that this is following along the lines of what I said before, that somewhere we ought to be able to find an attorney who got himself a good enough education in our colleges, our law schools, so that he would be able to write into our constitution something that would absolutely give us force, enforcing the legislature and the judges to do something about our constitution, and obey it. Now, I didn't get up to say just that. In fact, I hadn't intended to say that at all, but when the Chair made the facetious remark that he did, I thought he should be answered with something like that; as I understand he is also an attorney.

Fellow delegates, I don't find myself agreeing with Jim Farnsworth too often. However, I do know that Jim Farnsworth is a successful businessman, and I have been associated with him in the local government committee, and he has been doing a fine job, and I feel that we ought to take into consideration something here besides law.

The first night that I spent in Lansing, we were told that we should write a constitution that would even be understood by the supreme court judges. You know, I sometimes think that when it costs a man $500 to $800 to try to get an appeal, this should be understood and understandable to any judge that that is quite expensive, and that the man who is asking the attorney to get him an appeal is spending an enormous amount of money that 10 chances to 1 he can't afford, and he ought to get something more than just a plain, "denied".

I sat here listening to Mr. Prettie talk about a work load. Work load. Well, I have watched judges work in circuit courts, recorder's court, common pleas court, and, if you please, I set on more than one occasion in Lansing, Michigan, listening to the supreme court justices, and if you call this work, and if you think that this is putting in a lot of time for the money that they get, I am going to tell you right now that we here should get 75,000 bucks a year.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair is sure that we all agree with you, Mr. Madar, but hopes you will confine yourself a little more closely to the point.

MR. MADAR: I am confining myself to the point, in that I am trying to stress the reasons why they ought to be able to give us more than just a "denied", and I certainly am going to vote for the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Garry Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, it seems to me that too often when we are reviewing a proposal such as this one, that we lose the forest for the trees. In this regard I think that much of the criticism to the Donnelly amendment — and I am speaking in behalf of it as I shall later explain — comes from the fact that this is writing into the constitution many of those things which can better be left to either court rule or legislative act.

We set forth in the section that the facts and reasons for each decision shall be given. When we say decisions of the supreme court, and use practically the same wording that has been used in the past, we are expecting and, in effect, concurring in a similar interpretation of what the supreme court should do with respect to this decision. This would, of course, leave out any decision or the giving of any reason on any decision involving leave to appeal.

In Committee Proposal 92, which the committee has reported out — and which deals with the appellate court — in the very last section we say the jurisdiction of the court of appeals shall be prescribed by law, and then, of course, the practice and procedure shall be provided by court rule. Inasmuch as we do not know at this point what the jurisdiction — in fact we won't know in this convention if that proposal is passed — of the appellate court will be, how can we say with any degree of certainty what decisions should be reported, should be promulgated, and which one should bear facts and reasons in support thereof?

In answer to Mr. Prettie. I am not quite sure what he meant when he said that my statement indicated that an appeal is an appeal is an appeal. I know that I have been familiar with many briefs that have been filed in connection with leave to appeal which were 30 pages in length. I think this is adequate to prompt a decision from the court that would at least set forth in a paragraph or so its reasons. I think that it is justified, and it should be given.

I don't think that the Donnelly amendment, as such, is the answer to this problem. I certainly would support it, however, and do support it, if we are going to leave the committee proposal as it presently stands. But it occurs to me that it would be better to set forth in this section, rather than specifying that facts and reasons shall be stated, but rather some language to this effect should be stated: that all decisions of the supreme court shall be reported and promulgated as provided by law.

We are unable at this point to determine what the jurisdiction of the supreme court shall be, what matters will be subject to leave to appeal. All of Mr. Prettie's statistics have no bearing insofar as this section is concerned until we know what that jurisdiction shall be. We certainly thought it would be original jurisdiction in the supreme court, and that there would be matters that can only get to the supreme court by virtue of leave from the intermediate appellate court.

I want to say, if there is not to be any general language which will permit these things to be worked out by the legislature insofar as reporting and promulgating of decisions are concerned, we should support the Donnelly amendment.

As I say, I think that it would be better to use general language in this section. It is more constitutional in nature, and would be more fitting in view of the fact that we do not know what will be the jurisdiction and the ramifications of an appellate court in this field.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: In response to numerous requests, the Chair would advise that he has 2 speakers seeking recognition. The first is Mr. Gover.

MR. GOVER: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, as a layman like Mr. Farnsworth and Art Madar, it seems to us nonattorneys that we are like a jury hearing both the pros and cons of this case, of this amendment. I am inclined to believe that this is good for the small people of Michigan who should have a right to know the reasons for denial. I believe we should support this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I think a word should be said in behalf of the judiciary committee. I think Dr. Nord put his finger on part of the problem that may be had in understanding what is involved when he said that the petition for leave to appeal is a peculiar thing. This is a request for the laymen. This is a request asking permission for a fullblown argument and submission of briefs. The judiciary committee, in considering this matter — and several hours ago I think our chairman of our committee touched upon it — consideration of this matter involved the fact that we will have an appellate court.

Delegate King asked a question that I don't believe was answered; as to what can be expected of the appellate court with respect to a decision, and he asked whether or not we had looked into other states. Now, the state of New York has such an appellate division that renders decisions in writing, and these are digested in a set of books called the New York Supplement. I have used, on occasion, opinions of that court in argument.

Now, our anticipation, the anticipation of the judiciary committee was, I think, that where a petition for leave to appeal was filed and denied, that the supreme court, in effect, would be affirming the decision of the appellate court. The consideration was that, in my mind as a member of the committee, you would have on file a written opinion of the appellate court for reference.

If the court, the supreme court, is required to write a fullblown opinion in response to a petition for leave to appeal, you have, in effect, destroyed the whole nature of a leave to appeal. This isn't a leave to appeal anymore. This is an appeal. I am not certain that that is what the amendment contemplates, and I have been quiet here, but I would like to ask a member of the committee, or a member of the minority offering this amendment — and, as I read it, they do not anticipate a fullblown opinion. Ann, would you care to answer? The way I read this, all you ask for is reason for denial; you do not require a concise statement of the facts, is that right?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs yields to Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: I believe that is what the language says.

MR. HIGGS: I am asking what your intention is. I am also on style and drafting. We may have to face this. Do you anticipate a concise statement of facts?

MISS DONNELLY: On their reasons for denial of leave?

MR. HIGGS: Yes.

MISS DONNELLY: I would say that if the supreme court decided that it wished to give a concise statement of facts and say "This is ridiculous," they could, in effect, because of these facts it is obvious why we have done it.

I am not attempting to say that they must state everything and make as complete a decision as they would if they were granting the leave, although I think there is good argument why they should. At this moment I am not asking that much, although I think it is a worthwhile thought.

MR. HIGGS: You kind of left me. I would like to say this: if what is contemplated is simply a statement of a very concise reason without going into the facts, I think it is not such a bad idea. But if the supreme court must give a concise statement of facts as well as reasons, this they should not do on a matter of this kind without a fullblown hearing. Because if they do do it, then they are laying down precedent type of law that will be controlling throughout the state of Michigan, and this should not be done without a fullblown hearing, the arguments, the briefs, the whole matter. And if this is what you contemplate, then what you are doing is destroying this particular avenue of appeal, the leave to appeal.

MISS DONNELLY: I don't know if you are asking me a question or making a speech still.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs, were you asking a question or making a speech?

MR. HIGGS: I had asked the question, and I wasn't sure that the answer was clear, and if Delegate Donnelly would like to clarify that, then I would like to have it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs yields to Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: If I remember correctly, the amendment says "reasons for each denial of leave to appeal." Now, then, let's go a step further. I am not attempting, and I don't think anybody is attempting in this, to say that the supreme court may not make a comment on the facts. I think if the supreme court, in its discretion and in its decision and determination, feels that it is pertinent, it could certainly do so. To say that they can't is not what I am trying to do. I am just saying that they should give a reason for each denial of leave to appeal. Now, how they want to give their reasoning I would leave within their discretion.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I want to assure you this is the last time I will appear before you on this matter. When you ask the supreme court for relief, you expect the utmost consideration and fairness. The justices of this court are the supreme justices of the state of Michigan. They are supposed to be the cream of the legal profession.

Work volume is not a factor. This is not a factor in justice. This is the poorest argument advanced so far for the defeat of our amendment. No expense is spared to convict an individual and give him a red carpet prosecution. Oftentimes this alleged violator is acquitted. The time spent in telling a man convicted of murder, bank robbery, embezzlement, or any other serious crime, the reasons why his appeal has been denied takes only an hour or two, and is the least that any court can do for a man under those circumstances.

I yield to Leslie W. Richards.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister yields to Mr. Richards.

MR. L. W. RICHARDS: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, some 5 or 6 hours ago I was no authority at all on this particular subject. At the present time I feel quite an authority, and I might add at this time, as Art Madar referred to Jim Farnsworth, it isn't always he agrees with Jim; and Art, I am quite pleased to say I agree with you on the particular position you took and I rise to support the amendment and I realize, at least my interpretation of the tremendous cost that is involved for an individual to get his case as far as the supreme court, and with such cost certainly he should have a right of explanation why it was denied. And I believe all the lawyers here will agree with me that this is a tremendous cost, because, after all, I believe they would be a part of the cost rising to that height.

Up until now, folks, I had strenuously opposed the gag rule. It has been discussed a number of times, and I have really opposed it. But I have felt up to the present time if the lay people here in the group would go along with me probably this would be the right time to place the gag rule into effect, and while we are on the judicial committee I would be inclined to go along and vote with it.

I certainly support this for one other reason: I supported Tom McAllister on the last several amendments and lost my vote. I would like to again be on the winning side, and last but not least, Tom asked in his behalf if I would ask for a division vote when we are ready to vote.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Richards requests a division. Is the demand for a division supported?

It is supported. The gentleman from Pontiac, Mr. King.

MR. KING: I take it when the division is requested that means I should be very brief. I am still very much concerned about what we are doing here, Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the committee. The right to appeal is not a right at all. If you want to write in that in every case there shall be a right to appeal, then perhaps that is what we ought to do, if that is the sentiment of this committee. But, frankly, I am concerned about this short statement giving reasons why the right of appeal is denied or why the leave to appeal is denied. This is where the danger lies. This will become precedent making law.

I think some of us forget how the judicial system in this country operates. You can't have a brief, concise statement as to why the court decided not to hear your case. Either they don't hear it or they do hear it. If they hear it, they have got to hear it completely, and they have got to outline their reasons completely. If I personally were going up to the supreme court asking leave to appeal, if I were denied, naturally, I would want to know why, I would love to know why, and I would like to have them send me a dozen long stem roses when they sent the reason back, too. Dean Doty says that is a good point. (laughter)

I have a friend who is an author, and he wrote a story, and he sent it to a publisher, and all he got back was a rejection slip. Now, naturally he would like to have, I suppose, a book review instead of a rejection slip, and I don't blame him. But the supreme court is not a counselling service, nor is it a post-graduate school for attorneys.

We are missing the whole point here. The supreme court should not find itself in the position of writing a 3 line or 4 line reason why it has turned down the appeal. I am not really concerned about the work load. I am concerned about the American system of jurisprudence, and that is what we are tampering with at this point. And I don't think there is a jurisdiction in the United States of America which has any set rule in its constitution, and, frankly, I think that if this committee is prepared to adopt this amendment, as apparently they are, I think it may be well to move to give the committee on judicial branch an extra 24 hours to see if perhaps there are some other jurisdictions which have taken this rather drastic step.

This is not a light matter. I just want to impress that upon you, ladies and gentlemen. This is a very serious step that we are contemplating.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Ypsilanti, Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: I think Mr. King has given the answer that I was trying to get. If the supreme court should not be required to give only a 3 or 4 line opinion, if that is wrong, certainly it is much "wronger" to give one word "denied."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister. The Chair, unfortunately, has kept no record of those who have spoken for and those who have spoken against, and therefore it will be necessary to call for the vote, and the secretary will read the amendment. Mr. Wanger now desires recognition.

MR. WANGER: I want to make one comment. It seems to me that most of the people supporting this amendment all think that every case that is coming up will be a federal case; that the circuit court is not good enough, no, sir, and the court of appeals is not good enough, either. By golly, if I got a case going up, it's got to go to the supreme court. Whether I've a right to appeal or not, I've got a right to have the supreme court set out some reasons why my case, my client's case, my uncle or my brother's case shouldn't get up there and have a full hearing.

The only trouble with that is that if we go on that theory, why should we have any other court except the supreme court? If you want your reasons put out in writing, let's remember that your reasons are no good unless those reasons are based on a thorough understanding of the case, and if you want those kinds of reasons, then you are going to have to expect the supreme court to spend the time and research necessary to get those good reasons all in form.

And if you don't, why those reasons are not worth any more than any other thumbnail sketch or slipshod reason or excuse. No, the reason why our court system is divided is because we found out that the work load has to be adjusted, and that everybody's case isn't worth taking up to the supreme court.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, do you desire recognition?

MR. DANHOF: Only, Mr. Chairman, to perhaps wind this up and try to get back and get a vote so we can go on to the next section, which would, I am sure, promote, being new, much more discussion than something which we have had since 1908.

If the provision as amended — if the amendment is adopted, then this committee should realize what they are indirectly doing, what they are doing in making an appeal as a matter of right in every single case. Mr. King is completely correct. This, then, in effect, would be undoing what we had tried to do by setting up a court of appeals.

Mr. Farnsworth talked about the expense, and 2 days ago last Thursday we voted to have a court of appeals. This is in Committee Proposal 90. If you add this amendment, all you are doing is adding on the expense of going through another layer of courts, and you might just as well take out the court of appeals. If you are going to require the supreme court to write a decision every time it denies a leave, you might as well go there in the first place, and you might as well save your client the cost of the court of appeals, and this is where the real savings will come, Mr. Farnsworth.

Maybe Mr. Wanger had a point too in doing away with the circuit court. But the idea that the committee had in making a court of appeals was to make the cost less and not greater, and by adopting the amendment, both you and Mr. Richards should realize that if you approve a court of appeals, as you did, you then will be adding to the cost, because the cost will come not in going to the supreme court but in going to the court of appeals where you will be forced to go in between. The idea that the committee had was that when you file your petition for leave to appeal, if you are going to force reasons, you are going to get these curbstone opinions, which is just about what they are going to be, because the court will not have considered the case fully, will not have had all of the briefs, and when they look at a leave it is necessarily considerably less than a full hearing, a full brief and a full record, and they have to determine whether or not the case is of such merit or such magnitude or such importance that it should go up.

And what Mr. King is stating is absolutely correct. We are putting here a strangle hold upon the supreme court. The 1908 article was known as a very forward looking article because of the broad and very few restrictions placed upon the court. I am beginning to think that the article of 1962 will nowhere approach in relative importance what they did in 1908. Michigan has been copied by these other states very recently. What we do now will certainly put a strangle hold thereon.

I think we are letting the personal experiences of too many lawyers enter into the consideration of what is a good system. The fact that one of us might have had a case one time where we didn't like what the court said or how it was said to us should be thrown out. Those that try to try their personal matters have no place in this particular convention, and I submit that over the last 2 days this is what we have been doing.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Dr. Nord.

MR. NORD: Mr. Chairman, I believe that we are again getting overconcerned about terrible things that are bound to happen if we do this. The supreme court is not nutty. They can handle this problem with no difficulty. Of course if they were nutty, they would have a problem. But the point is this, all they need to do is adopt some rule. They would have to adopt some rules. That's true. They can't let everyone appeal from the justice of the peace court and all the way up just automatically and say that he has an opportunity to file a leave to appeal.

No doubt — I don't have the slightest doubt in my mind that they will do something like the United States supreme court. They will adopt rules stating under what circumstances there can be any review whatever, any review whatever, from the appellate court. They will state what those circumstances are, and if you don't fit within those circumstances you can never even file the application, or, if you do, it will be destroyed. It won't be even returned to you. Or if it is returned, it will be returned with one word, "not within rule 57" or some such thing.

Now another misapprehension is that the supreme court is going to give a decision on the merits in one paragraph. They would have to be absolutely asinine to do that. They will not give a decision on the merits for the reason it hasn't got to the merits yet. All they will do is decide whether they are going to hear the case. That is the only decision they will make. For example, the reason they will give will not be that your case doesn't appear to us to be just or right, or something like that, but what they will say will be something, for example, like this: the legal point involved according to the briefs has already been settled in 2 or 3 or however many different divisions of our appellate court there are, and it's uniform, and since it is uniform there is no reason for us to reconsider it.

On the other hand, if it had been nonuniform they would have listened to it. They may give that as a reason, that the rule is uniform, or they may say there is no jurisdiction to hear this appeal, and that is why they are not hearing it. Or they may say there is no rule supporting a view of any type in such a case. Or they may say the only thing that has been raised is a question of fact, and they may say on that basis they don't intend to go into it because it has already been gone into twice. They will give some reason of that type, and then you will know what was their reason for not hearing the case. You will not know what they would have done if they had heard the case.

So let's not get nervous that everyone will be able to appeal to the supreme court. They will not. Or that every time a motion is filed for a leave to appeal there will be an absolute appeal as a right. There will not. Or let's not get nervous that we will be getting decisions which are thumbnail descriptions or off the cuff opinions. We will not. All we will be getting is possibly a sentence or 2 or 3 stating one of these grounds or some such grounds, and then you will know exactly what you did wrong, and you will know better next time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Garry Brown.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I shall be very brief, and hope that the others will be likewise. I would only direct the committee's attention to section 4 of this white sheet which I think is section 3, which we dealt with on Thursday and Friday, and in that, of course, it says, "The supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction as provided by supreme court rule." Now, this only tends to supplement what Dr. Nord has said; that in these cases in connection with appellate review, that the court can limit those cases that will be coming to it purely and absolutely, and that there will be no application for leave to appeal in many matters, and that those matters that do come under the gray area, so to speak, between those which are appeals as a matter of right and those which cannot be appealed, those which have to be subject to a leave to appeal, will certainly be limited so the court can handle the matter adequately and give the reasons for its decison.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hoxie.

MR. HOXIE: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I feel impelled to rise to my feet to make a long discussion on this subject. I think we are getting very repetitious, and my recommendation from my legal training is 3 words: let us vote.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment to section e offered by Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is as follows:

1. Amend page 2, line 11, after "decision" by inserting "and reasons for each denial of leave to appeal".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Those in favor of the amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. For what purpose does the gentleman rise, Mr. Walker?

MR. WALKER: I believe a division was asked for and seconded.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: That is correct, and that is why the people are voting aye and voting no on the machine. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the amendment, the yeas are 78; the nays are 47.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is adopted. Are there further amendments to section e?

SECRETARY CHASE: None on file.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If not, it will pass.

Section e, as amended, is passed and the secretary will read section f.

SECRETARY CHASE: Section f:

[Section f was read by the secretary. For text, see above, page 1256.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: For an explanation on section f the Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I should like at this time to yield to the vice chairman of the committee for the explanation of this section, Mr. Ford.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof yields to Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: The chairman of the committee in his infinite wisdom relegated to me the truly noncontroversial section of the judiciary article.

This is somewhat new. The committee rationale is on page 466 of the journal. I might say that we were out of Journal 71 for some time, and there are copies available now. For some reason we had a run on them, but there are now copies available that might be handy to you for the balance of the discussion of the whole judiciary article. I will read first what the committee had to say:

> This is a new section, replacing and simplifying section 6, article VII of the Constitution of 1908. It extends the appointive power of the supreme court and its supervising control to its entire staff, instead of limiting it to the officers named in section 6, article VII of the Constitution of 1908.

The language that does that, if we can go through this together, is the first sentence, of course, which has 2 subjects covered in it. One, the appointment of the staff, and the second is control of expenditure within the budget allocated to the court.

> It continues the existing requirement that all receipts of the court shall be credited to the general fund. It also continues the prohibition against appointments by the supreme court to public office, excepting for the appointment of the staff of that court and other appointments of retired members of the judiciary to fill vacancies in the courts of the state by appointment of retired members of the judiciary.

Now this is where we overlooked the controversy in this section, because this is undoubtedly going to be controversial at another point, and I want to be fair and say I have a minority report that might seek to take that back away from them, but it is to another section. So at this point I am supporting the committee.

> The details of such appointment which will continue only until such vacancies are filled by election, are covered in other sections of this committee's proposals.
> Other proposals of this committee, which will be separately dealt with, permit the supreme court to authorize persons who have served as judges and who have voluntarily retired, to perform judicial duties for a limited period of time until a vacancy in judicial office is filled by election. The final language of this proposal is for the purpose of permitting the supreme court to make such interim appointments, and in the opinion of the committee, is necessary to correlate these 2 sections.

Now I want to say that although I will have some objections as to the manner that the committee has established for the filling of the vacancies on the courts, this is not the place to make the fight, and I don't agree with the person who wrote the rationale of the committee that this language in this section is particularly controlling of that issue.

So I don't think that we should argue that point here. I think, really, all this section does that is at all startling or new is to adopt the concept that when the court has money appropriated to it for its operation by the legislature, once the money has been appropriated the court itself will have control over the amount of wages paid to its employes, and so on and so forth, within the limits of the budget.

This would in some ways make it, as we are informed by representatives of that court, more readily possible for the supreme court to govern its housekeeping affairs and to handle matters of personnel over there. They have rather strange methods of obtaining assistance, and this would make it possible, for example, for them to attract people who are actually people with rather special training, and, in some instances, professional people that are on their staff.

I would like to yield for questions in the hope that the chairman can answer them.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford yields for questions. Are there questions with respect to section f of Committee Proposal 91? You seem to have passed nobly, Mr. Ford.

The secretary will read the first amendment proposed to section f.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Austin offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 15, after "control of" by inserting "the preparation of its budget recommendations and"; so that the sentence will read:

> The supreme court may appoint and remove its staff and shall have general supervision of the staff of the court and control of the preparation of its budget recommendations and the expenditure of the funds appropriated for any purpose pertaining to the operation of the court. . . .

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment the Chair recognizes Mr. Austin.

MR. AUSTIN: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I think we will have a little change of pace now. We nonlawyers have a subject that we can discuss. I have suggested this amendment because there is a question that needs to be answered, and I felt that the best way to get an answer was to propose this amendment.

In our debate the other day we deleted from page 1, line 16 of this proposal, Committee Proposal 91, the following words "prepare and submit to the legislature the budget for the court." You will recall we were talking about the administrative assistant of the court, and we deleted all of the language which would spell out the duties of that administrative assistant. Just to be a little more specific, the language that we deleted was

> The administrator shall, under the direction of the supreme court, prepare and submit to the legislature the budget for the court and perform all other necessary functions relating to the revenues and expenditures of the court.

It is not my intention to suggest that we reinstate this language. I am merely calling attention to the fact that we have deleted reference in this proposal to the preparation of budget.

The question, of course, is whether the preparation of budget for the supreme court shall be left to the executive department or shall it be left to the legislature. It seems to me that we must in this article include something that will indicate that the budget for the judiciary is under the control of the judiciary. It is quite possible that if we do not provide for budget control in the judiciary, it is possible that either of the other 2 branches may be able to exercise some indirect control over the judiciary through budget manipulation.

Now in deleting the language that was deleted the other day, the objections raised were that we objected to the assignment of functions to the administrator in the constitution, and that the language we had was rather rigid for the constitution. No reference was made at the time to the need to include any authority for budget preparation for the judiciary. The committee on judicial branch apparently saw the need for including some language of this sort, and now that it has been deleted from the paragraph from which it was deleted, it is my feeling that we can insert it at this point.

Now I would like to go one step further. I would like to refer you to Committee Proposal 46. I am wondering if you would take a look at Committee Proposal 46, which we have not yet considered, but which relates to the proposed executive budget. Committee Proposal 46, under section a — I am sorry — requires that the full budget for all expenditures are to be included in the executive budget. This budget, of course, will be prepared from recommendations from the various departments. On page 2, line 17 of Committee Proposal 46 you will find this language:

> The governor's power to reduce expenditures shall not apply to the legislative and judicial branches or to those services for which funds are mandated by this constitution.

I am particularly concerned about the exclusion here of the power of the governor to reduce expenditures for the judicial branch. If the governor is not to have this power, then who is to have the power? Is it to be left to the legislature?

This is another reason why I feel that we must include in this paragraph of section f of Committee Proposal 91 some reference to the preparation of budget, and instead of suggesting that the budget be prepared by the department, that is, by the judiciary, I am suggesting that budget recommendations be prepared by this department, and, of course, they would be forwarded to the governor for inclusion in his executive budget.

I hope that I have made clear what my intention for including this amendment is, and I will yield now for any questions.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Do you desire to yield to the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof, Mr. Austin?

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, Mr. Austin brought this to my attention last Friday. I told him at that time I personally could not see any particular objection. He did not have the exact words worked out, and now that he has, and has given an explanation, I certainly do not find it objectionable. I have not talked to the full membership of my committee, except a few who are in my immediate area. They agree to assent.

This endeavors to do what we are trying to accomplish for the supreme court, and what small amounts of money it gets in proportion out of the general budget; that is, that the court will submit a budget, it will be scrutinized by the legislature, and when the appropriation is made they can at least transfer within the amount of the appropriation. It also gives them the supervision over its staff.

I personally can see no objection to the amendment, especially in light of the action taken the other day wherein the other budget suggestion was taken out of an earlier part of this particular committee proposal. I would urge the adoption of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I think what Mr. Austin has done has amplified the real intention of the committee, and I would support the amendment to the committee proposal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Austin, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Austin's amendment:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Those in favor of the amendment will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is adopted. The secretary will read the next amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Messrs. Brake and Hutchinson offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 17, after "court" by inserting "subject to the general accounting laws of the state"; and after "staff" by changing the comma to a period and striking out "except that" in line 18; so that the language will then read:

> expenditure of the funds appropriated for any purpose pertaining to the operation of the court subject to the general accounting laws of the state or the performance of activities of its staff. The salaries of the justices of the supreme court shall be established by law.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, Mr. Brake. Mr. Brake yields to Mr. Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, I originated this amendment, and when we adjourned on Friday, and when we hadn't gotten down here, and I knew I couldn't be here this afternoon, I asked Mr. Brake if he would offer it because I couldn't conceive that we would not have gotten this far by the afternoon session. But we didn't, and so I am back, and I can explain it myself.

I offer it, even now since Mr. Austin's amendment has been adopted, for the reason that I feel it is now necessary to make clear that the control of the expenditure of appropriated funds to the court will be subject to the accounting laws of the state. You see, the supreme court is the final arbiter as to what the constitution says, and even when it is a party to the controversy, in a sense, because it has to interpret what its own powers are, from which decision there apparently is no appeal, in this area particularly the constitution is what the supreme court says it is.

Now, if we have seen fit to spell out the fact that the control of the budget preparation shall be in the hands of the court itself, then if we don't follow along and say that the control of the expenditures shall be subject to the accounting laws, perhaps the court will conclude that they are not. The expenditure should be subject to the accounting laws because they should be subject to the allotment procedure which is within those laws.

What I mean is this, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, when the legislature appropriates money, this simply amounts to an authorization to expend money out of the treasury. Now, the actual expenditure of the money is something that is within the executive branch operations. The several departments of the government have to go, under present law, to the state administrative board seeking an authority to withdraw from the treasury in accordance with the appropriation.

The procedure is, ordinarily, that the appropriation is allotted quarterly, so that the administrative board each quarter allots, presumably, 25 per cent of the total appropriation, and during that 3 month period the department involved may withdraw up to that amount of its total appropriation.

In cases where there is a justification for a departure from an even division into even quarters, why, the ad board may permit, for instance, the expenditure of 1/3 of the whole appropriation in a 3 month period instead of 1/4 of it if in another quarter the matter can be adjusted.

It does seem as though this court should be subject to the allotment procedures, should be subject to the other accounting procedures of the state, and particularly do I feel that it is important to spell it out here now since the budgetary matter has been spelled out. The budgetary part of it is the formulation of what we want to expend in the future. Having spelled that part of it out, that part of it which precedes the actual appropriation, then I think we should also spell out that part of the operation which follows the actual appropriation so that there will be control as there is in other departments.

Now I don't mean to dispute for a moment the idea of a lump sum appropriation to the court. I can see wisdom in a lump sum appropriation. But I think we should be concerned lest in times of restricted cash flow through the treasury the court might embarrass the treasury by demanding to take all of its whole appropriation out at one time, when there might not be sufficient cash there to accommodate them. I don't mean to say that they are not reasonable men. I think that they are. I think that by and large the court will be as cooperative as though they were actually subject to the executive branch.

On the other hand, we don't know what the situation will be in the future, and I sincerely hope that the committee will see fit to make this matter subject to the accounting procedures of the state, just as it has seen fit to provide that it shall be subject to the budgetary procedures of the state.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Hutchinson, on which the Chair will recognize the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hutchinson, let me first state that it was not the intent of the committee that there should be no post audit of any of the appropriations that might be given to the court. I don't have before me the exact wording regarding the proposal of the legislative audit. However, I can state, and I think without qualification, that the committee was firmly of the opinion that the legislature or the auditor or the auditor general, whatever we have, would have the right at the end of the fiscal year to come in and audit the account and the books and the records of the supreme court.

The only thing that appears to me is this: Mr. Hutchinson refers to the fact that the court should be subject to the allotment proceedings of the accounting laws of this state lest the court, by reason of its appropriation, raids the treasury. I think, in the first place, we are talking about an appropriation which, in the light of the general appropriation and expenditure of this state, is a very, very small percentage. The court operates with 8 men.

A DELEGATE: We will have 9.

MR. DANHOF: Well, we haven't gotten that far yet. We might only have 7. Now, last week this committee passed without worrying about a lump sum or allocation, the power to the regents of the University of Michigan to draw anywhere from $35 to $40 million out once the appropriation is made. Now, however, the supreme court must go hat in hand to the ad board and say, "Please give us our 90 day allotment."

Now, I don't envision that the supreme court, or the administrator who is going to run this, is such a poor politician that he does not want to get along with either the members of the legislature or the administrative board, and I am sure that he will do everything possible to keep a smooth operation going under the golden dome across the street; because each and every year he is going to have to go back to the same legislature to get his appropriation.

But to make it subject to the general accounting laws of the state, therein lies what I think is the great danger; because if we do that the general accounting laws may change to demand a line by line budget and again a line by line expenditure, and this can very definitely fall under the accounting laws of this state.

Now, if the committee wishes to put in there what it did for the universities, who are going to spend some $40 to $50 million, for this massive appropriation of the court, which will probably never exceed a couple of hundred or three hundred thousand, we will have no objection. We do think that the court is an independent branch of the government; that it should be given its appropriation; that the 8 justices of this court should be at least trusted to expend it with reasonable diligence and following what their budget is, and we do feel that they should have more authority than they have now so that if they do not find what they need for salaries, but they need additional equipment, they can at least move it around within the appropriation.

I am sure that the chairmen of the appropriation committees of the 2 houses, if they go too far astray on any particular item, that is, if they overestimate salaries and underestimate books, will cut them back the following year.

I would urge the defeat of this amendment, but would be willing to state that if we could draft language relative to a post accounting audit, perhaps this would be agreeable, in line with what we have done with the universities that we adopted last week. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Pontiac, Mr. King.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I would like to ask a question of Mr. Hutchinson. My question is, what constitutes the general accounting laws of the state?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, on that I would like to yield to Mr. Brake. I don't think there is a man in the room that is better qualified to answer than he.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hutchinson yields to Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Mr. King, ladies and gentlemen, principally just this: the vouchers of the supreme court would go through the regular channels, the same as any other department of state government. When it comes to allotment, they would not need to go to the administrative board hat in hand at all.

The even quarterly allotment would be made as a matter of course. If the supreme court wanted to spend ½ of its appropriation in 3 months, then it would have to ask permission, the same as any other department of state government. This is simply a matter of keeping the procedure uniform and orderly. It doesn't mean commingling of funds, it doesn't mean taking any money away from the supreme court, or anything of the kind.

MR. KING: Is it my understanding then that — well, let me put it this way, the general accounting laws of the state, of course, consist of a great many laws which are subject to amendment each and every session of the legislature, isn't that so?

MR. BRAKE: This wording occurs over and over and over again. It simply means you follow the regular procedures.

MR. KING: Would you object if we change your amendment to read subject to the allotment laws of the state, or laws regarding allotment?

MR. BRAKE: Well, that isn't all there is to it. It is a matter of presenting their vouchers to the department of administration which orders the issuance of the checks. That is included as well as the allotment.

MR. KING: Do you conceive of any possibility that the legislature could infringe upon the separation of powers?

MR. BRAKE: When the legislature has made the appropriation, that is the appropriation. They can't do anything about that. That is covered by the accounting procedures.

MR. KING: Don't you think a post audit would satisfy the requirement that you feel is necessary?

MR. BRAKE: That is something entirely different. There should be a post audit of everything. That isn't what this covers at all.

MR. KING: One more question, Mr. Chairman. What percentage of the state budget do you think is consumed by the supreme court?

MR. BRAKE: A very, very small part. It is a matter of having the same orderly procedure everywhere. It isn't a matter of saving any money.

MR. KING: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The vice chairman of the committee, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I want to support the statement made by Mr. Danhof. It is our view that what Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Brake would do now would be to provide a means whereby the legislature could take away, intentionally or unintentionally, the kind of fiscal independence, even though we are talking about a very small part of the state budget, that we are trying to give to the supreme court.

They have an awful lot of trouble over there where they hire a person for one job and they have to hire them with a classification of some other kind. They are dealing with professional people that they bring into the court from time to time, and it was the view of the committee that once they have established the need for funds, and the legislature has appropriated it, we could trust the supreme court to spend the money during the year understanding that when they account — at the end of the year when they come back asking for their new appropriation, if they abuse it in any way the legislature can take care of it.

It would seem to destroy everything we have tried to do if we place back into the hands of the legislature the possibility of adopting any kind of accounting procedure during the actual using of the funds that would take this independence away from the court, and I would oppose the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Austin.

MR. AUSTIN: Mr. Chairman, I just asked Mr. Brake a question privately, and I think I will ask it here on the floor, because I think maybe this answer ought to be in the record, because I am not clear on it. When the committee passed Committee Proposal 37 from the finance and taxation committee this language was included, "No money shall be paid out of the state treasury except in pursuance of appropriations made by law."

Of course, my question is — before I ask my quesion I would like to comment on something else that was said a little earlier about audits, because when I sit down I know that I will yield the floor. In regard to audits, I would like to call to Mr. Danhof's attention that we do now provide in the constitution that all accountings — that the legislature shall provide by law for the annual accounting of all public moneys; the legislature shall provide by law for the audit of state and county accounts by competent state authorities. I merely wanted to point out that we have already provided for the audit of any state accounts, and this would include the supreme court as well as any others.

Now, to get back to my question: I would like to know why this language "no money shall be paid out of the state treasury except in pursuance of appropriations made by law" would not cover what we are interested in in this proposal. We are saying here that we would like the — I can't read this — subject to the general accounting laws of the state.

It would appear to me that if the appropriation for the supreme court is made in accordance with the section that we have already agreed upon, that at the time the appropriation is made the law which makes the appropriation would in some way indicate how the money is to flow to the judiciary which is to receive the money. If that isn't the case, I would like to have it explained.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: The provision that we have approved in the committee here, Mr. Austin, simply provides that the money appropriated to the supreme court will be available for the supreme court to spend. It doesn't say how.

Mr. Ford talks as if the legislature would have to pass some special accounting laws so that the supreme court could spend its money. That isn't the case at all. Those laws are already there. They need not be changed. It is just a matter of having the supreme court put its vouchers through the regular channels; making any change in allotment they need from one quarter to the other, the same as everybody else does. It doesn't take any money away from them; it doesn't keep them from spending it; it doesn't take the control away from them.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Austin, do you wish to pursue your point further?

MR. AUSTIN: I yield the floor.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, might I respond further?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: I would like to respond this way to Mr. Austin's question: Mr. Austin says, well, the appropriation act of the legislature will probably say in so many words that this appropriation shall be expended in accordance with the general accounting laws of the state. He thinks it will be taken care of at the legislative level, and I would agree with him but for the fact that here we are writing something into the constitution, and the constitution would supersede anything that the legislature might say in its appropriation act, and even though the legislature might say in its appropriation act — and this would be the general government appropriation act, which would include something for the supreme court as well as something for the other agencies of the government — even though that act might say that these moneys shall be subject to the general accounting laws — these appropriations shall be expended only in accordance with the general accounting laws of the state, the point is that here we have it in the constitution that the supreme court shall have control of the expenditure of the funds appropriated, and there aren't any constitutional strings applied, and if the issue arose before the supreme court, and the supreme court was called upon to interpret what its constitutional power was, as opposed, if you please, to the statutory directions of the legislature and the general accounting laws of the state, who is to say that the supreme court might not say: well, the constitution is silent on the matter, and doesn't put any conditions on that, and it has given us the absolute control of expenditure. So we will control it, and we won't go to the state administrative board seeking allotments, and we won't comply with the general accounting laws of the state because the constitutional writers said that in this particular field we weren't forced to comply with it.

Now, that, I think, is the answer to your question, sir. It is simply that here we are writing a constitutional provision which would, by interpretation, supersede anything that the ordinary processes might require, and you felt it necessary to write into the constitution assurance that their budgetary procedures would be taken care of by them, and I think that it is equally important that we make sure that the other end of the procedure likewise is constitutionally provided for under these circumstances.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Muskegon, Mr. William Hanna.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Mr. Chairman, a question to Mr. Danhof. Mr. Danhof, in this matter you have "control the expenditure of funds appropriated." Is it your understanding that the supreme court would run a checking account independently of the general warrant system?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Do I think that they would? No, I don't think they would. As I said, I think they are intelligent people who want to comply with this system, and would go along with it. I can't conceive, assuming that this is going to be one of the duties given to the administrator, that he would do anything other than go with the particular usual state procedure.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Would you say that the supreme court could ignore central purchasing?

MR. DANHOF: It might.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Do you think they should?

MR. DANHOF: I don't know, but they might. It is possible that there are things that they may wish to expend on their own. Again, maybe they have to go out and purchase their own books. I don't know.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Is there any reason why they shouldn't be required to write a purchase order and go through ordinary purchase procedure?

MR. DANHOF: They are not a branch of the executive, Mr. Hanna. They are an independent branch, and again this seems to be a discriminatory tactic against the court.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Doesn't the legislature, when it buys its supplies, have to go through central purchasing?

MR. DANHOF: Only if they desire, I presume. They probably could say they didn't have to.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Do you interpret this language to mean they could issue their own warrants on the state treasury without any going through of the usual administrative procedure and having the warrant signed by the appropriate member of the budgetary control department?

MR. DANHOF: Could or would?

MR. W. F. HANNA: Could they?

MR. DANHOF: Yes, the same as the University of Michigan or Michigan State University can for $40 million or more.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Do you conceive of the supreme court as an independent body corporate that could be sued in its own name?

MR. DANHOF: I envision it as a separate branch of government that eventually should be given the right to run its own house.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Could it charge sufficient fees at the local court level with which to run its own operations, and thus not go to the treasury for appropriation?

MR. DANHOF: If you would read the second to the last sentence you will find that all fees and income must be turned over and credited to the general fund. They can't keep any money.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Well, this is inconsistent with your first position.

MR. DANHOF: No, because we do want control by the legislature which has to appropriate the money. Therein lies the control. The legislature, if it goes too far, would undoubtedly take steps to cut their budget, the same as it can do — it has the final say as to what is going to be appropriated. The court can't make its own appropriation. All we ask is that once it is justified in appropriations, it be given the right to spend the money within its own particular branch.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Grand Rapids, Mr. Martin.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Chairman, I have been voting consistently with the committee to support what I thought were full and adequate powers for the court to manage its own affairs, but I do want to indicate my agreement with Mr. Brake and Mr. Hutchinson with respect to this particular amendment. I think it simply says, in effect, that the court shall follow the same orderly procedures in obtaining its funds and making expenditure that other portions of the state government should follow. I don't think it will hinder the court in any way from using the money or spending the money in the way it sees fit. So I think the amendment is a proper one, and can do no harm, and perhaps can do some good in keeping the general procedures of handling the funds aligned with the procedures for the rest of state government. I would support the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Delegates Brake and Hutchinson, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Messrs. Brake and Hutchinson have offered the following amendment:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee report, and wish to express my agreement with Chairman Danhof. I think in all our discussion about the various branches of government it is time to remind ourselves again that we are talking about the supreme judicial power of the state of Michigan. We are not talking about an administrative branch or an administrative branch of an executive branch handling millions of dollars that we want to watch very carefully. Rather we are talking about the body that we look to as the deliberative thought provoking body that should not necessarily be tied down by routine and administrative channels, though certainly if they want to they can.

I would imagine from a legal viewpoint that if, for some reason, the legislature did not appropriate money for the pay of constitutional officers they could mandamus the state treasury to get it. I think that is as unlikely to happen as it is that members of the supreme court would capriciously or on whim spend the money. I think at some point, although building in safeguards is very proper, we should certainly respect a certain dignity of the office of both the legislature and the court, and I for one am satisfied that the legislature would not attempt to deny the pay of judicial officers, just as I am equally convinced that the judicial officers of the state would not spend the money capriciously.

I think the stand which is already explained by Delegate Austin is more than adequate, and I therefore urge opposition of the amendment and support of the committee report.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, after listening to the interchange between Mr. Austin and Mr. Brake — rather Mr. Hutchinson — I thought that we ought to vote against the amendment, and then I listened to Mr. Danhof, and I listened to Delegate Downs, a couple of attorneys discussing it, and it sounds to me as if possibly the judiciary ought to have rights to do something on an administrative matter that no one else has a right to do; that they ought to be solely in charge of their own funds and do just as they wish and please. But so far as I am concerned, I don't think that the judiciary and the educational departments, or any other group, has any right to do these things, and they should submit vouchers the same as I or anybody else must do in spending public funds. I am in favor of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Delegates Brake and Hutchinson. Does anyone desire to have it read further? Those in favor of the amendment will say aye. Those opposed will say no. The Chair is in doubt. Those in favor of the amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment, the yeas are 53; the nays are 60.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is not adopted. Are there further amendments to section f? If not it will pass.

Section f, as amended, is passed.

Mr. Bonisteel.

MR. BONISTEEL: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I know it is getting late, but I would like to ask Mr. Danhof a question, if he will be so kind.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. BONISTEEL: The last line in this section, "No justice of the supreme court shall exercise any other power of appointment to public office, except as otherwise provided herein." Precisely what does that mean?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Merely this, Mr. Bonisteel. As I understand it, that except for the appointments put in the constitution, there cannot be delegated to any justice of the supreme court by legislative act the right to make any other particular appointment in a public office either originally or in the case of a vacancy. Now, when they fill their staff, that is provided herein, that is, the staff of the supreme court. Also, as Mr. Ford read later on, we have a provision wherein the supreme court or the justices may designate a judge who has been retired to temporarily serve. Apart from that — and this is likewise true with circuit judges who in the Constitution of 1908 had only the right to appoint the clerk in case of a vacancy, and a prosecutor — in the Constitution of 1908 the court could appoint only a bailiff, a crier, and I think a reporter, Mr. Bonisteel.

MR. BONISTEEL: I am curious about the language here "No justice of the supreme court. . . ." Why should it be "No justice of the supreme court . . ."? Why shouldn't it be "The supreme court shall not exercise any other power of appointment to public office except as otherwise provided herein"? And then in furtherance of that same suggestion, suppose that the legislature directly authorizes the supreme court at some time in the future to make certain appointments which the legislature might feel the supreme court had better ability to do than perhaps somebody else; under the language you have here that would be prohibited, if I interpret it correctly.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: That would be my interpretation, Mr. Bonisteel. It was the feeling of the committee that a prohibition of this type would be ample warning to the legislature that it cannot do just what you say you feel it might do, because we feel the court should not get involved, except in its own operations, with the appointment of anybody to a particular office or filling appointment to any board, and such things like that. Now that is basically the reason we extracted it exactly from the old constitution. We could change it around if you want to say "The supreme court or any justice thereof shall not exercise. . . ." The thought is except as the constitution provides the justices, and, as we go on, the circuit court also shall not exercise any type of a particular appointment of any other public office other than as prescribed in the constitution.

MR. BONISTEEL: I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, after listening to the explanation, but what there should be some amendment to this sentence that I have just talked about here. I am not convinced yet in my own mind that the supreme court should not have the right, if the legislature so desires to give it the right, to make some certain types of appointments. And since the hour is getting late, I think it may be a good place to stop now and get an opportunity to check this. At least I would like to check it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Bonisteel, the Chair had, prior to recognizing you, announed that the section had passed, and I would suggest that your amendment would be in order after completion of our consideration of Committee Proposal 91, when amendments to the body of the proposal are in order.

Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves that the committee do now rise. All in favor say aye. Opposed no.

The motion prevails. The committee will rise.

EIGHTY-EIGHTH DAY

Tuesday, February 27, 1962, 9:30 a.m.

PROCEEDINGS

PRESIDENT NISBET: The convention will please come to order.

Our invocation this morning will be given by one of our own delegates, Leslie Richards, from Marquette county.

MR. RICHARDS: Let us pray. Almighty God, Thou hast taught us that in quietness of prayer, Thou shalt be our guide. Help us to know that Thou art always with us. As our purpose is to help our fellowmen and to promote all that is good in the life of our state, so we pray that Thou wilt strengthen our hands in all our undertakings. O God, who dost hold us to account for the use of our powers and privileges, guide, we pray Thee, the delegates of this convention, that by wise legislation and administration the rights of all the people will be protected and our state enabled to fulfill its purposes. Grant to us the spiritual gifts of understanding and wisdom, of strength and counsel, that we might uphold what is right and follow what is true. Save us from discord and confusion, from pride and arrogancy, and fashion us into one united group. Exercise our minds to meet our responsibilities and endue us with Thy wisdom. Deliver us from putting selfish, private interests or concerns above public welfare. We know, our Father, that at this important hour we need Thee. We need Thy strength, Thy guidance, Thy wisdom. There are always problems far greater than the wisdom of man can ever solve. May these responsibilities lie heavily upon our hearts. Give to us honesty, courage, and the moral integrity of doing that which is best and right. Bless this state we love so much, and may the work of our hands and minds the past few months brings to our state a constitution that will bring to the people a real sense of well being, fairness, sound security and peace of mind. Purify our intentions, strengthen our purposes and grant that in serving our fellowmen we may serve Thee. Through the name of Jesus Christ our Lord we pray. Amen.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will be in order and the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: From the committee on judicial branch, by Mr. Danhof, chairman, Committee Proposal 91, A proposal pertaining to the supreme court.

For last previous action by the committee of the whole on Committee Proposal 91, see above, page 1300.

[Section g was read by the secretary. For text, see above, page 1256.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: For an explanation of the section, the Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, to explain the majority position of the committee and the report of the committee on this particular section, I should like to yield at this time to the delegate from Hillsdale, Mr. Prettie.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Hillsdale, Mr. Prettie.

MR. PRETTIE: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, in this presentation I do not propose to read either section g of Committee Proposal 91, which the secretary has just read to you, nor the report of the committee in support of it. I shall assume that you have all read these. If you have not, the proposal is before you, and is published in the journal at page 465, and the report begins at page 467.

I do want to highlight some of the developments of the past 6 months that have resulted in the presentation of this proposal for your consideration, and may I say it is submitted in all sincerity. Several members of our committee, as well as lawyers statewide have long been concerned with the flagrant inconsistency of our supreme court justices being nominated at party conventions and then, so to speak, taking a bath and running as nonpartisan candidates for this high office. It was obvious that some correction of this anomaly was necessary if the integrity of this court was to be preserved and public respect for it maintained. Such an inconsistency, I believe—and I think many join me in this—reflects at the very outset upon the integrity and the honesty and the political acumen of every candidate for this high office.

Before this convention met, several delegates, who later became members of our committee on the judicial branch, corresponded between themselves on this subject, and they had the benefit of the advice and counsel of then and now members of the supreme court. Later, when these delegates to whom I have referred were appointed as members of the committee on judicial branch, we found ourselves and the entire committee faced with several possible solutions to this dilemma. Some of them were Hobson's choice.

If you refer to the material projected on the wall that will be before you as I discuss this matter, our choices were between some appointive method, providing either for the appointment of justices of the supreme court by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, or from a list of qualified appointees submitted in accordance with the so called Missouri plan. A second choice was a continuance of the present provisions of section 23 of article VII, as implemented by statute, which results, as I mentioned, in partisan nomination of justices followed by "nonpartisan" statewide election. A third choice is a constitutional change or a direction to the legislature to provide for statewide nonpartisan primary, followed by statewide nonpartisan election; or, in the alternative, a statewide partisan primary followed by a statewide partisan election. A fourth possible choice, and the one that we have before you, a plan for election of justices of the supreme court from areas within the state so arranged as to be as nearly equal as possible in population and availability of qualified candidates. Now I wish you would keep these choices before you as we consider some further matters.

As early as October 24, 1961, the general subject of the Missouri or ABA plan was vigorously advocated before our committee. John Manning, writing on the editorial page of The Detroit Free Press on November 1, 1961, said:

> Last week at the constitutional convention, certain representatives of the state bar association resumed their argument in favor of the Missouri plan for making judges. Under it the public has virtually no say. A tight little committee of attorneys and laymen would tag a list of judicial nominees and the governor would pick appointees from this sacred list.
> Delegate K. G. Prettie of Hillsdale demanded of Professor Charles W. Joiner, a convention codirector of research, "Do you feel there is something so sacrosanct about the courts that we should treat them differently from other public offices?"

Then the article went on to comment favorably upon the general principle of election as opposed to appointment on any basis of members of this high court.

This favorable press reaction to election as distinguished from appointment of our judiciary encouraged certain members of our committee to discard the Missouri plan, and on November 7, 1961, Delegate Proposal 1218 was introduced, joined in by 6 members of our committee, including 3 former circuit judges of this state, and proposed a district plan for nonpartisan election of members of the supreme court. On December 1, 1961, this plan was further refined and included as a part of a complete judicial article as Delegate Proposal 1488, which you have all had on your desks for months. In the meantime our committee was hearing testimony from scores of witnesses on every phase of the judicial article, including the subject of judicial selection and tenure as bearing upon the 4 choices, the subdivisions that you have before you.

May I share with you some of this testimony? And I have to apologize for reading it because I wish to quote it with ultimate accuracy. On November 8, 1961, Justice Eugene Black appeared as a witness before our committee, made a rather lengthy statement and then answered questions for some considerable period of time. One of these questions was:

> Wouldn't the election of supreme court justices on a district basis be advisable for these reasons? Areas wouldn't be so large that the people would not be acquainted with candidates, and it would also eliminate the strenuous campaign ordinarily being statewide. What is your thinking?

End of the question. Then the answer:

> The plan that you are talking about is one that Judge Pugsley has labored with me on for months and months back. I think it is wonderful. I think it would be a step forward as the nominating system and elective system would normally be separated from party politics, and it has this advantage: it takes less time to campaign in a limited district and, if you are a money spender, it would take a lot less money to campaign in a limited district. I do not believe in the appointment of a judge to a judicial position for any length of time.

Then the question:

> If we adopt the district system, would the district represent a like number of voters or like area?

And the answer was:

> I would like to see them represent a series of districts composed in such a way that every man's vote has equal value.

End of quote, and end of that portion of Justice Black's testimony.

On November 9, 1962, Justice Theodore Souris made a very helpful presentation to our committee in connection with the establishment of appellate courts, and those appellate courts he suggested be established by districts, and submitted maps, in which regard he testified. His testimony is rather lengthy, but I submit to you that it is so important on this matter of these choices before you that I ask you to bear with me in reading it. He testified, "I suggest that it might be desirable to have intermediate appellate judges elected from the districts within which they would be working." In answer to questions he testified:

> I say to you that where you have a whole state from which to select your nominees at a particular moment it may be necessary to make a selection, it may be desirable to make a selection from a particular area.

He was asked the question:

> What is your view of the federal appointive system? Do you think that this has resulted in less than adequate judges on the federal bench?

And he answered:

> I prefer the caliber of judges we obtain in Michigan at our circuit court level and at our supreme court level over the caliber of judges we obtain in our federal district court and circuit court of appeals level all over the country.

In his formal statement to the committee Justice Souris spoke strongly against any appointive system, saying:

> The people's right to vote for their judiciary should not be taken away from them any more than there should be taken away from the people their right to vote for those who enact the laws or those who enforce them. Once anyone assumes a special capacity for selection of superior judges, it must necessarily follow that they or others like them possess a special capacity for selecting, in place of public election, the governor and our legislators. No thoughtful student of American government would go so far. It's bewildering to me to discover that some thoughtful citizens apparently are seriously considering the unconditional surrender of the elective franchise as it relates to the judiciary.

End of Justice Souris' testimony.

Justice George Edwards, in a prepared statement on November 1, 1961, advocating a statewide elective system, testified at some length. In his prepared statement he said:

Election of judges has been a basic part of the American tradition since the revolution. Most state judicial systems provide for an elected judiciary. In Michigan our state judicial system has been elective since 1837, when Michigan became a state.

During all of its history, the Michigan judiciary has been of high repute in the state and the nation. No major scandal has besmirched its record. Its record for disposition of litigation compares very favorably with the records of sister states.

Michigan's present electoral provisions relating to the judiciary provide for independence of the judiciary. At the same time, this constitutional article would preserve to the people the right of election of their judges. By requiring judges periodically to report to the people who are the source of their power which they wield on the bench, some tendency is created toward restraint of possible judicial arrogance.

And I think in the past few days, parenthetically, we have had some indication here of what has been termed judicial arrogance. To return to Justice Edwards' testimony:

While relatively few incumbent judges have been defeated for reelection, the people have had a remedy when a clearcut need was presented.

The suggestion that election of judges should be removed from the hands of the people and placed in the hands of a select committee I regard as having little merit. The argument of the advocates of this plan is that it will serve to remove the judiciary from politics. In reality, the plan means that open political consideration of the judicial nominations is replaced by a few men in wholly private meetings.

The people of this state have never exhibited any desire at all to abandon their right to elect their judges. I would think it most unwise to draft a constitution for presentation to the people which did not retain an elective judiciary for the state of Michigan.

Justice Dethmers, who was one of the few witnesses appearing before our committee testifying in favor of the Missouri plan, of group selection or nomination, rather, and then appointment, broadcast over channel 10 TV on November 20, 1961, and among other things Justice Dethmers said:

It has been demonstrated that people don't know much about who the candidates are for the supreme court, and so they cast their votes, a majority of them, for a name candidate, who perhaps may have been governor or secretary of state, or something like that.

He went on to say:

Now, what is it that the people are entitled to in a judge or in a supreme court justice? Well, I submit that they are entitled to—what they are entitled to is independence, impartial judges who are not influenced in any way by party obligations or influence of pressure groups. Now, I am submitting that when you have to be nominated by a party, and then have to have party support to be reelected, it takes good, strong character to resist the memory or the realization of that fact.

Justice Paul Adams also appeared before us and favored the present status quo with its inconsistency, and opposed the Missouri plan. I am only going to give a very brief excerpt of very fine and extensive and helpful testimony that Justice Adams gave us. He said:

I strongly advocate the election of judges and justices. There are two important aspects of this process. First is the participation by the people in their government. Second, and equally important, is the effect running for election has on the candidate himself. There is no other way for our officials, the representatives of the people, in whatever branch of government, to get close to the people and to understand their needs except by submitting themselves to the people and seeking their support.

Judge Michael Carland, president of the Michigan judges association currently, on November 16, 1961, testified in part:

We are opposed to any plan which takes from the people the right to elect their own judges. The suggested election of supreme court justices by districts may be the answer, and seems to have merit, but only if elected upon a nonpartisan basis.

Judge Noel Fox appeared as a witness on November 14, 1961, and submitted the report of the citizens advisory committee of which he was chairman. This committee recommended that the present inconsistent method of nomination and election be retained, but this report rejects any appointive plan and states at page 29 of the little booklet you all have:

This constitutional article should preserve to the people the right of election of their judges. The suggestion that election of judges should be removed from the hands of the people and placed in the hands of a select committee is regarded as having little merit.

Now our committee felt that this district plan was perhaps somewhat novel; certainly new to Michigan, but we learned that it was not unique, that it exists in other states, and it exists in our neighboring state of Illinois. Recently that state revised its constitution, and in that revision it retained the district election of its supreme court judges. We therefore invited, as a witness before our committee, Mr. Albert Jenner of Chicago, a past president of the Illinois bar association. He testified on December 7, 1961, to the following question:

Do you find that the election of the supreme court justices on the district basis has any tendency to polarize or balkanize those judges in their thoughts on the supreme court?

This answer:

No. I can say this after 31 years of practicing law, and I am a litigation lawyer, and have been in that court a 150 times. It has not balkanized those judges at all.

Then the question:

Do you find that the election of these justices of the supreme court on a district basis has a tendency to encourage better lawyers to run for office?

And his answer was:

Very much so. First, let us take campaign expenses. For a judge to really campaign throughout the state of Illinois is a tough job. It costs a minimum of $45,000 to $50,000; an absolute minimum.

Now I could share with you, fellow delegates, a great deal of additional testimony before our committee taken over the 3 months we deliberated this matter, but this should suffice to give you the general purport of what we heard.

Following this extensive testimony we took a first vote on substantive matters in our committee on January 16, 1962, and that vote was on the proposition as to how many of our 21 members favored an appointive as against an elective system. The vote resulted in that 18 opposed appointment, 1 favored it and 2 were absent. On the same date we voted specifically on the Missouri plan. Fifteen opposed it, 3 were in favor of it, and 3 were absent or abstained. This vote eliminated from our consideration any appointive method, and left us faced with the second, third and fourth choices and their subdivisions appearing on the wall before you.

A continuance of the existing inconsistency was unthinkable in view of the testimony of which I have given you excerpts, and that eliminated choice 2. Much testimony had convinced us that the difficulty and expense of statewide partisan or nonpartisan elections was an insupportable burden beyond anything that would attract competent members of the judiciary. This ruled out choice 3. The group within our committee, therefore, continued to work toward further perfection of the district plan, which was finally revised on January 25, 1962, so that it looked like this — if I may have the next projection. There. This map is very similar to the one that has been distributed to you and outlines the areas and the boundaries of these districts, which are in correspondence with the boundaries of existing circuits so that they correspond with the general judicial structure. I think it is quite impossible for you to see the figures in the upper right hand corner of the board. It's possible it could be moved down just a little bit lower.

In carrying out the desire of those who sponsor this proposal for as nearly as possible equal distribution of population throughout the state, a division was made which establishes Wayne county as one judicial district, entitled to elect 3 justices, and with a population of some 888,000 persons per justice. Oakland county is somewhat smaller than 1/9 of the state, but this was purposely so because of the projection figures for 1970 population that would indicate substantial growth. The other areas of the state range, as you can see from the chart — and you have had these in your hands for over a month — from a low of some 815,000 to a high of some 990,000.

Now another problem that concerned us was the legal population of the state and the availability of competent legal talent on a statewide basis and on a district basis, and if we may now have the next projection, which is a projection of figures also appearing in your journal, this tabulation will illustrate the thoroughly constant proportion of lawyers to population in each of the proposed judicial districts. I think the low is 520 lawyers in the judicial district 4, ranging up to 767 in judicial district 5, and with 4200 in Wayne county. But from that there would be selected, as the years go on, 3 members of this high court. In making this tabulation, the source of which was figures from the state bar of Michigan, I endeavored in Wayne county, at least, and also in Ingham county, to eliminate those who could be clearly identified from legal rosters as public officials, house members and law professors, but these tabulations in all instances must necessarily include some retired, inactive practitioners and members of the judiciary.

On January 25 there was submitted to every member of this convention a draft of this plan with reasons in support of it much the same as those appearing in your journal. A request was made for any objections or criticisms or suggestions for improving it, and with a request that each delegate return an indication of his thinking on this plan. As a result of this, one letter was received urging a completely appointive plan; one letter vigorously opposed the plan, and I will discuss this later in greater detail. Twenty marked ballots were received, of which 14 favored the district plan. While the return of the questionnaires was disappointingly small, it was no smaller than the percentage of votes by which most of us hold our seats in this convention. In any event, it indicated some substantial majority in favor of the plan, and encouraged those who had been working upon it for months to go ahead further with its perfection and presentation.

I should point out further that while this plan was under consideration, the state bar of Michigan conducted a poll of its membership. The results of this were received on January 10, and have been duplicated and distributed to you. Even without the details of the district plan before them, because it had not been finalized when this questionnaire was prepared on December 20, if you will refer to page 2 of these questionnaires, you will see under question 3c that if the court be elected, 1442, or 36 per cent of the lawyers expressing a view felt that a regional basis should be advisable, and this was somewhat a matter of buying a pig in a poke, because the details were not before them. Although the point will be made that on page 1 of this questionnaire there is an indication that out of 4903 lawyers some 2500 favored the Missouri plan, in evaluating this questionnaire — and this fact was very vigorously brought out by Mr. Ford in our committee — the circumstances under which that poll was taken must be given consideration. To every lawyer in the state, and concurrently with the distribution of that questionnaire, were delivered 2 separate pieces of literature favoring the Missouri plan. One of them starts out with the catch line "A once in a lifetime opportunity," and the other one starts out "Arise and be heard." These questionnaires were returned with that kind of solicitation at the ballot box, if you please, before the lawyers of the state, and I think the result of it must be evaluated with that in mind.

I do not wish to repeat the argument submitted in the report in support of this plan. These were furnished to each delegate on January 25, and are spelled out in detail on page 468 of the journal. I might say that one feature which wasn't mentioned in those arguments, and which I think is a very important one, is that such a plan as this would provide for an orderly progression through competent lawyers to positions on our circuit bench, through that, hopefully, to positions on the bench of our intermediate court of appeals, if and when established, and, hopefully, from that on to the high bench.

Now, I said I wanted to deal briefly—and I will try to be brief in the presentation of it—with some of the criticisms that have been leveled against this plan. First, the catch phrase or the cliche that this is a balkanizing of the court. I submit this has no real validity. The argument entirely overlooks the fact that our circuit judges now preside in courts throughout the state. They are, of course, elected in their own individual circuits. No one has ever claimed—certainly they haven't claimed with any justification—that this resulted in any parochialization of the thinking of our circuit judges. They have administered justice with an even hand regardless of where they reside or the location of the court in which they preside. Many of those judges who are delegates here presided in many of the courts of this state, and the fact that they came from Harrisville or Oceana county, or some other county, Bay county, didn't influence their decision when they were sitting in Wayne or elsewhere in the state.

Furthermore, Justice Souris himself suggested that the proposed court of appeals be established on a district basis and that the judges thereof be elected from the districts so established, although they would be empowered to sit and hear cases in any district in the state. If this does not balkanize the appellate court why should it be claimed that district selectives of the supreme court justices would balkanize that court? I mentioned earlier there had been distributed to you within the past 2 or 3 days a map much the same as the one on the wall, but containing the names and terms of service of 29 justices of the supreme court who have served this court within the past 30 years. I made a little analysis of that, and 7 of these judges came from district 1. Seven of them also came from district 6, and the Grand Rapids area. Three each came from districts 3, 4 and 5, only 1 came from Oakland county in that entire 30 years, and 5 came from the upper part of the lower peninsula and the upper peninsula, what would be district 7 under the plan as suggested.

So, if the court has not been balkanized by the distribution, perhaps by accident, resulting from partisan nominations over the past years, I don't think a planned method of distribution of the selection of our talent would be in any wise more of a balkanizing effect. Now, I prepared a chart, which is on the screen, of the present membership of our supreme court, and you will note that it comes from 5 of the districts now proposed. It cannot be contended with any validity that the distribution of our present justices from various parts of the state results in a parochial attitude on the part of the membership of that high court. Justice is, and I submit has always been, administered with a view to the law in the state as a whole. There was no evidence before our committee that election on a district basis in Illinois resulted in a balkanization of that state. In fact, the testimony of Mr. Jenner was exactly to the contrary.

Now, by reason of the imminent retirement of Justice Carr at the end of his present term beginning January, 1964, there will be a change in the court. Taking this into account, and if the district plan be adopted, then the personnel of the court, subject to reelection, would be as shown on this projection. This assumes the creation of the 9 judicial districts proposed in the plan. It will be noted that there would be one vacancy from district 1, and there may be some question concerning Justice Kelly, who I think now is a resident of Otsego, but under the plan he could run from the Detroit area where he has historically lived, or choose district 7, if he so desires. There would certainly be one vacancy from judicial district 1. There would be a vacancy from judicial district 2. Justice Smith would represent his home district, district 3; Justice Black is district—Port Huron and the area—4; Justice Kavanagh, now a resident of Lansing; Justice Dethmers is presently a resident of Lansing, but his origins were in Holland, and he, under the plan, would have the choice of running there; and Justice Adams representing district 7.

On February 14 there was distributed to every delegate here a letter from the league of women voters stating their views as to what we should do here. This well meaning group of some 3700 interested citizens stated that this plan "opens the highest court in the state to unwholesome partisan and sectional pressures." Partisan pressure is exactly what they are trying to avoid. Sectional pressures, I submit, do not exist. We have had no evidence of it in the years that sections have been represented on our high court. It is further stated in this letter that the supreme court must serve all Michigan people equally and impartially. Whoever said that it does not? As I pointed out, although the justices now and always have come from various parts of the state, as shown by the map I referred to a moment ago, they have administered even handed justice on a statewide basis. And, finally, the league of women voters urges us to ease the voters' job by providing for original appointment. My answer is: this doesn't ease the voters' job, it destroys it.

The argument is made that the state's keenest legal minds are to be found among Wayne county lawyers. There are among this delegation 6 retired circuit judges who have presided in Wayne county and elsewhere throughout the state. I hope they will take this floor and tell you, as they have told me, that there is no monopoly of legal knowledge in this state nor in any county of this state. The map that you have negatives this fact. There has been a fair distribution of membership on our high court throughout the state over at least the past 30 years, and I think the analysis might be extended for many years back of that.

Now just a word about the minority report appearing on pages 579 and 580 of the journal. To me it does not seem to be constructive; it merely proposes the elimination from the constitution of section g of this committee proposal. I am not certain where this would leave us, for the committee has filed Exclusion Report 2043, recommending exclusion of the entire judicial article, now section 23 of article VII. I believe that it is the intent of the minority report to include in Committee Proposal 96 a continuance of the status quo. But I think we have already discussed that sufficiently.

The most recent criticism that has come to my attention is an editorial in one of our state's metropolitan dailies. It is a constant source of wonder to me that the writers of these editorials, without hearing any witnesses, and without considering all sides to any question, suddenly become experts. Let us look at this editorial. The editor states, "We have no great love for the present system, especially its nomination to a nonpartisan court by party conventions." Later they state, "There is no point in plugging for a modified Missouri plan. It's politically dead." By these statements 2 of our possible alternatives have been eliminated. The editorial then criticizes the district plan because, they say, it is a situation tailor made for name candidates or pressure group favorites. This certainly is not true in the major part of the state where circuit judges and competent lawyers are known to their constituents for their character alone. Another criticism, "Highly qualified men may be shut out in his own district while mediocrity turns out to be the best to be found in the next district." History has shown that competent jurists can and have been found and have served with credit on this court from every area of the state. And, finally, in this editorial the point is made, "Sectionalism should have no place in deciding statewide questions of law." I think I have already dealt with that sufficiently. The historic geographical distribution of members of our court has never resulted in sectionalism, and the continuance of statewide distribution of personnel will not, I submit, result in any sectionalism in the future. After reading this editorial yesterday, it seems to me clear that the writer is against practically every plan that has been proposed, but it certainly is not clear to my mind what he favors, and that is the problem we have here to decide.

Two or 3 final details should be outlined. These are found toward the end of Committee Proposal 91g, lines 14 to 21. It provides for readjustment of these districts by the legislature as population changes may require, but such readjustment should not result in the removal or disqualification of an incumbent judge for election or reelection. The proposal makes existing election laws applicable to all primaries and elections for justices of the supreme court. It continues in office incumbent justices without regard to place of residence, and permits their reelection similarly without regard to place of residence. It empowers the legislature to provide for transition from present methods of election to the method provided in the proposal.

Now, before someone else mentions it, I should state to you, in all frankness, that this proposal was reported out of the committee on judicial branch by only 11 votes, with 5 opposed and 5 absent or abstaining. I would further point out, however, that it was the only proposal that obtained a majority vote in the committee, and that the plans for appointment, as I discussed very early in this presentation, were opposed by an overwhelming majority. I submit that this district plan, coupled with our established precedent of nonpartisan election, will secure for this state a supreme court of the highest caliber; will attract as candidates the most competent lawyers from all over the state; will make members of the judiciary known to the voters who elect them, and will result in a truly nonpartisan court without the inconsistency of party nomination followed by so called nonpartisan election.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, do you have—Mr. Danhof is not present. Mr. Ford, does the committee have further presentation with respect to section g?

MR. FORD: In the absence of Mr. Danhof, I would like to yield the floor, if I may, Mr. Chairman, to Judge Leibrand.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, after listening to the able presentation of the position of the committee on district election of judges, most anything that I might say would fall very flat, indeed. I do think, however, that perhaps it would be helpful to the delegates if I gave a brief review of the history of Michigan's judicial system.

Michigan's first constitution was drafted in 1835, prior to the admission of Michigan as a state of the union. Following the plan that had been in effect during the territorial days, judges were appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the new state senate. It took only 15 years for the people of the state of Michigan to have a belly full of that system. In 1850, when they drafted their new constitution, they provided for the election of judges. Now, that election under the 1850 constitution was by a partisan system, by conventions, state conventions and county conventions, but it was, fellow delegates, election. That election continued from 1850 until the Constitution of 1908, with 58 years experience. And again the drafters of the Constitution of 1908 provided for an elective system, for the election of supreme court, circuit court and probate court judges. They continued on this party system, which was the only real system which was known then not only in Michigan but in other states. By the year 1939 the people of the state of Michigan had had their fill of partisan elections. For 89 years they had experience with them, and they decided that they could improve the judicial system by placing the election of judges on a nonpartisan basis.

By initiative petition, not through the political parties, not through the legislature, but their own initiative petitions, there was placed on the ballot in 1939 a measure which was designed to make the election of judges truly nonpartisan. I don't have the figures before me, but my memory is that that initiative proposition carried by a vote of something like 375,000 to 240,000. And I say to you members of the convention, and I have mentioned this before, it isn't so bad to try to tinker with provisions that were put into this constitution by the Convention of 1908, but when you start to tinker with any proposition which has been put into the constitution by the people, particularly by a large vote, we are treading on awful thin ice.

Going back to this 1939 nonpartisan amendment, initiative amendment, that provided for the complete 100 per cent nonpartisan nomination and election of probate judges and circuit judges in their counties and districts, nomination by nonpartisan petition, election on nonpartisan ballots, when the favorers of the initiative amendment got to the supreme court, and how to handle that, they ran into trouble. They knew, as well as we know today, that it was a very, very difficult proposition for a lone nonpartisan candidate to campaign the entire state of Michigan, and to carry the campaign costs, the expenses that were incident to that. So the framers of that initiative amendment did what we are doing here in this convention with many matters for which they could find no solution. They passed the buck to the legislature, and they said the nonpartisan nomination — the nomination, not nonpartisan, but the nomination for justices of the supreme court shall be made in such manner as is provided by the legislature. And the legislature had as much trouble with that proposition as had the framers of the initiative amendment. And so the legislature came up with this proposition of nomination at party conventions and election statewide on nonpartisan ballots; the proposition, as Delegate Prettie says, of going into a convention with your hat in hand to get a nomination and then taking a bath and starting out around the state claiming you are pure, white and free from any political taint.

Now, I've campaigned. I say to you that this provision, this system we have for nominating justices of the supreme court, and which will be in effect for the nomination of justices of the appellate court, is decidedly unpopular with the people. My district is about 100 miles wide — 100 miles long and about 30 or 40 miles wide, and I campaigned that district intensively for about 3 months, and I appeared at dozens and dozens of meetings and dozens and dozens of debates, and as I did so I found considerable concern about the Michigan supreme court and the method of nomination of its members, and what the folks in my audiences and the folks who asked me questions were concerned with was not how to transform this into an appointive system — not once out of these dozens of meetings, out of these hundreds or thousands of questions, did I hear one single suggestion that the nomination and the election of the Michigan supreme court should be done by appointment. The questions I did hear and the suggestions I did get were that this convention should settle down to do something that made the judiciary of Michigan truly nonpartisan. I believe, members of the committee, that that is what the people want. I don't believe they want an appointive system. I don't believe they want the hybrid system that they have now.

Thirty-seven out of our 50 states have an elective system. Thirteen out of the 50 have an appointive system. But no one has the kind of a monstrosity that we have been trying to get along with here since the year 1939.

Mention has been made of an editorial appearing in the Detroit — my fellow delegates said a metropolitan paper. I'll call the names — The Detroit News, dated February 26. I hope you all read that. And then after you have read it, I hope you compare it with an editorial in the State Journal of November 19, 1961. Now, I submit to you that since we have been assembled in the convention here there have been numerous criticisms about the accuracy and the positions taken by the metropolitan papers. I submit to you that since we have been in convention most of us have been reading for the first time regularly the State Journal published here in Lansing. I am not a stockholder in the State Journal, but I say to you that I feel that the reporting in the State Journal and in the Booth newspapers is so far superior to the reporting in the metropolitan dailies, there is no comparison. I want to read you this editorial from the State Journal, which gives you the other side of the question, and then I will be done. The title of this editorial is, "Sham Should Be Eliminated."

> Some changes in the Michigan supreme court system are almost certain to be written into the new constitution proposal being drafted by the constitutional convention. A parade of witnesses already have been heard on the supreme court issue, and although there has been no unanimity on what should be done, most of the witnesses, including a number of supreme court justices, have expressed themselves as to the need for revision.
> Under present law Michigan's 8 man court is selected in staggered terms of 8 years; 2 justices elected every other year. Theoretically the justices are elected on a nonpartisan basis, but the only thing nonpartisan about it is the official designation. The justices not only are nominated by party conventions, but they tour the campaign circuit with party nominees for other elective offices, and their campaign expenses are at least partly paid by party campaign funds.
> This sham should be eliminated. The justices should either be elected on a truly nonpartisan basis, without political party strings, or they should be elected on a partisan basis, and their political party made responsible for their action. The ideal arrangement would be to elect supreme court justices on a nonpartisan basis with neither the political parties nor the governor nor the legal profession — and I emphasize this with special reference to the American bar association or the Missouri plan — > nor the legal profession determining who shall be nominated or who shall be barred from nomination.

> The difficulty of this procedure is the element of cost, since supreme court justices hold state offices, the cost involved in conducting statewide campaigns in both primary and general elections can be considerable; so great, in fact, that many capable jurists would be precluded from office because they could not afford the expense of the election campaign. Obviously no one wants a supreme court packed with millionaires.
> One proposal that had been suggested to meet this problem is the election of supreme court justices by districts. Thus a candidate for the high court would not have to campaign throughout the state, but only in his particular district.
> This solution to the cost problem also would remove another thorn that bothers a lot of people in the state of Michigan; that is the problem of preventing 1 political party or 1 pressure group with a potent political machine from grabbing control of the supreme court. If this should happen, and it could, the judicial system of Michigan would lose its integrity. A truly nonpartisan supreme court with justices elected from separate districts would reduce political pressures on the state's highest court, and would guarantee equitable representation for all citizens of Michigan.
> The supreme court should have an uneven number of justices; not 8 as now, but either 7 or 9, so there would be no votes on split decisions.

Mr. Chairman and delegates, I support the remarks of delegate Prettie, and support the adoption of the majority report on the district system. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Prettie, the Chair believes you had retained the floor. Do you have further presentation?

MR. PRETTIE: Mr. Danhof has now returned to the floor. I yield the floor to him.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: At this time I would like to yield to a member of the committee, Mr. Iverson.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Iverson.

MR. IVERSON: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, my remarks are going to be really brief, because I think this matter has been so ably presented by 2 previous speakers that it is unnecessary for me to enlarge upon it, except that I want to make a few remarks.

I go back perhaps 8 or 10 years when the bar association, the American bar association, I believe, first started action upon the so called appointive system of judges, and I must confess that for a short period of time at least, I was rather impressed with this system because I think as lawyers we are primarily interested in seeing that our courts are free from political pressures or other pressures, if you please, and I believe I was almost sold on the so called ABA plan. And I must make another confession; that about the same time I was a little discouraged about the jury system, and I had some ideas in my mind that perhaps that could be improved by some professionals, perhaps, sitting as jurors, or perhaps a bank of judges. I think all lawyers go through those situations, and I presume this situation was brought about by some immediate case where I felt there was a miscarriage of justice as far as juries were concerned.

Let me say to you now, I have completely changed my mind. Regardless of the fact that sometimes juries, to my way of thinking, do not try a case properly or come up with the right decision, I am still inclined to believe that it is the best system in the world today. I am ready to admit that juries can make errors, just as lawyers or judges can. I am ready to admit that in our system of government there are mistakes made. It is a slow process, and many things could be done for less money and in a quicker way. But I still think that we better retain our present system, regardless of those delays or regardless of the cost, and I think it goes without saying that most of you in this room agree.

As I say, I did feel at one time that perhaps this judicial system could be corrected by appointment of judges, and I presume a few situations occurred in between times where certain judges who were appointed for life became what I considered practically tyrants, and I am not ready to further a system of that kind in this state. Since that time, as I say, I am very much for trusting the people, if you please, to elect our judiciary just as they elect the other 2 branches of the government. Even though in some respects they may not know all the candidates, at least there is a chance that they can be informed, and, generally speaking, over the years they haven't made too many mistakes. I might have disagreed with them politically, perhaps, but that is neither here nor there.

Getting down to this present system, I don't think there is anyone in this room, deep down in their hearts — including the sponsors of the minority report which proposes to maintain the present hybrid system and, I believe, the minority party in this group — but who will agree with me that it is a crime and a sin, and I don't care which party you are in, to place a man in nomination, a lawyer, a reputable lawyer, in a party convention and then throw him to the wolves in a general election. I know whereof I am talking, because of one of the so called nonpartisan campaigns I handled for 2 of the gentlemen who were running for that office — and very capable men, too. Now, I will tell you, it just makes me sick. I don't think that anyone in this room — I don't care what party he belongs to, if he will be true to himself — will agree that the present system is conducive to good justice in this state. I think further than that, that unless we correct this situation we will have the wrath of God brought down on our heads as far as the press is concerned and the people of this state, because I don't think they're going to stand for the maintenance of this present system, and I, for one, am not yet ready to let the legislature make the correction. They have had since 1939, which I believe is about 23 years, and there has been no apparent attempt to do what is necessary to be done to correct the evils in the election of supreme court justices.

I hope you support the committee proposal in this matter, and I believe we will end up with a system of election of justices of the supreme court in the years to come which every one of you will be proud to have participated in.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, has the committee further presentation with respect to the majority proposal?

MR. DANHOF: No, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If not, the committee will proceed with the consideration of the amendments on the secretary's desk, and the secretary will read the first amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Pursuant to the minority report of Messrs. Ford, Garvin, Bledsoe, Miss McGowan, Messrs. Ostrow, Barthwell and Krolikowski,

Mr. Ford offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 25, by striking out all of section g.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment the Chair recognizes Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, although I find much to disagree with in what has been said by the previous speakers, I find even more disagreeable the reaction that I have when I stand here and see that we are, in my opinion, debating one of the most important issues to come before this convention, and one that affects everybody in this state intimately and throughout everything they do, and see that we don't have a quorum on the floor. I know it is not a popular thing to start advocating a cause by antagonizing your jury, but it would seem to me that there ought to be a device whereby we can take a recess and then get back here and consider this, and if it would be in order I would like to move that the Chair follow the rule on the 10:30 recess, and we come back to this when we have a better audience.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford, a quorum is present. The Chair has just satisfied himself of that fact. The Chair is advised it is the intention of the chairman of the committee to move that the committee rise at approximately 11:30, or shortly thereafter and, therefore, in the discretion of the Chair, he had determined there would be no recess and suggests that the retention of the audience is a matter that is within the province of the speaker. However, in fairness to you, Mr. Ford, the Chair would suggest that the secretary ring the bell. The committtee will be at ease briefly while the bell does its work.

The committee will be in order. For the benefit of those who have just arrived, the secretary was instructed by the Chair to ring the bell because of the apparent absence of full attendance on the floor. The proceedings have reached the point where the minority report is being presented. The secretary will read the amendment offered by the minority, following which we will proceed to its consideration.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Ford, on behalf of the minority, has offered the following amendment:

[The amendment was again read by the secretary. For text, see above.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: The minority, in this case consisting of 7 signers, I believe, proposes the elimination of the committee proposal with respect to section g, and I think it should be said at the outset that everything that might be said about the minority attempting in this instance to maintain the status quo should be looked at with some close attention to what is actually happening here. Now, regardless of what your feelings may be about the present system, let's get clear at the outset that this is not a constitutional system we're talking about, basically. We are talking about a statutory system, and all of the things that I have heard criticized about the present system can be changed and could have been changed at any time that our bar association, which is one of the loudest critics, would have had the ambition to go over on capitol hill and talk to the people in the legislature; because all the present constitution requires with respect to the supreme court is simply that the justices be elected on a nonpartisan basis, and that they be nominated in a manner provided by law. The constitution doesn't say that the parties will nominate them at their party conventions. It doesn't say they can't be nominated on a partisan basis, that they can't be nominated by a primary, and, as a matter of fact, Mr. Prettie's entire plan could be implemented by statute without changing the 1908 constitution. There is nothing in Mr. Prettie's plan, as we look at it, that would be inconsistent under the present provisions of the constitution. So what the proposal of the majority is asking you to do is by constitution freeze in for all time a plan that may or may not be better than what we have.

Assuming for the moment the possibility that we ought to try something like this, it would seem that the wisest way to try it would be to try it by statutory change, and if it doesn't work, and if this produces some of the evils that many of us are prone to suspect it of, then the transition back to a system that has been in existence for many years would be rather a quick transition, and could be accomplished before great mischief was done. It is not the request of the minority in asking you to vote against what I refer to as the "balkan plan," to reject it entirely, but merely to reject the idea of building it into the constitution. I submit that even the people who support Mr. Prettie's plan for districting of the supreme court can, in all comfort, support our proposal to remove it from the constitution, and then convince the legislature that this is a good thing on the assumption that if it is tried and it doesn't work, the legislature can correct its error much more readily than we might should we build this into the constitution.

The minority has set out some specific reasons in Journal 76 which you will find for our seeking to strike section g. Primarily it revolves around the fact that everybody on our committee will have to agree that after examining the judicial systems of other states, and listening to the many people who came before our committee, however reluctantly, you ultimately come to the conclusion that although there are improvements that each one of us individually as lawyers might like to suggest, based on a personal experience — for example, Art has had the unhappy experience of campaigning all over the state for 2 very well qualified men who didn't get elected, and this always leaves us unhappy when we have had this kind of experience. And so he would correct this in the manner that appeals to him. I came to the convention, as many other lawyers did, convinced that we had an anomalous situation with the partisan nomination and nonpartisan election that cried out for some sort of a change, but one by one as you examine the alternatives you began to realize that although it took them a long time to evolve the system to the point that it has reached, it is not a bad system.

In supporting the district plan, Mr. Prettie pointed out that we heard from the president of the bar over in Illinois. They have a district plan over there. They have, I believe, 7 judges in their court, and Cook county, which has 60 per cent of the population of the state and 90 per cent of the lawyers, has 1 representative on that court. Now, when we asked the president of the Illinois bar why he thought they should retain a district system — as Ken has indicated to you in their judicial revision they are retaining it — he stated 1 reason directly and he stated another reason indirectly. The reason that he stated directly was that he felt that this protected the state against having its supreme court dominated by the residents of the city of Chicago. Now I submit that this reason is not a valid reason in Michigan. We distributed to all of you the other day a map which shows by indication on the map where the judges of our court have come from in the last 30 years. One of the copies — we gave you 2 maps, and 1 of them has some darker lines on it, and the darker lines show what happens when you superimpose the committee's district plan on top of this, and it will show, as a matter of fact, that the present system has done a little bit better job of distributing judicial talent geographically than Mr. Prettie's plan would do.

Now immediately it is going to be said, because it has been said several times here, that being from Wayne county I should welcome Ken's plan, because only on rare occasion during the past 30 years, or in the history of the court, has Wayne county had the number of judges that he would give us under his plan. I suppose the people who say this to me are proceeding on the assumption that all of us came here to represent the people in our own little provincial area first and the people of the state of Michigan second, and I am not so sure that we haven't demonstrated over and over again here, all of us — and I am as guilty of this as anyone — that this becomes true; that no matter how hard you try to examine these issues objectively you must always come to a conclusion which is based largely on your subjective observations, based on the fact that you come from a part of a state where a particular problem is of more importance than it may be in the other part of the state, and the people in the rural parts of the state cannot be expected to get as exercised about the question of a city income tax down in Wayne county as some of us might. By the same token, there are problems involving the townships, maybe the 15 mill and some other things, that don't excite the people in Wayne county in the same manner that they do the others. This is as it should be in a body such as this, because we are elected on a representative basis, and we are here to put our best foot forward for the people who sent us here. I don't think we should be nearly as sectional in our point of view as the legislature is, because there clearly those people are sent to represent a small group of people, but I submit that our own experience here at the convention should show you how dangerous it is to send people to a court or to a convention to draw an instrument that is supposed to objectively serve the needs of all of the people of the state, but elect them on the basis of representing just a few people in the state.

Mr. Prettie, himself, said the present system distributes judges throughout the state, but sectional pressures haven't resulted from this. Of course it hasn't, because regardless of where a judge comes from in this state, when he writes an opinion or makes a public pronouncement — and of recent years some of the things that have disturbed some of us most are not the decisions coming out of the court, but the public pronouncements that are being made from time to time by members of the court which carry a lot more dignity in the press than they should have in the minds of a lot of attorneys, because it is a member of the court talking. They feel free to criticize almost all facets of government, speaking with the authority that members of the bench have whether they are sitting on the bench or off of it. I am now proceeding with some temerity, because I expect to be back over there shortly, and I trust that the judge or judges we are referring to won't remember this speech.

Mr. Prettie said since we have had the experience of judges being elected from throughout the state, and we have discovered that it hasn't produced sectionalism, we shouldn't fear sectionalism in a district plan. He says sectionalism doesn't really exist; it is something that everybody fears and nobody really believes. But then in his very next comment he said many contend that all of the talented lawyers are down in Wayne county. Now, in all due respect to Mr. Prettie, I don't think for 1 minute that Mr. Prettie doubted that he was touching on a raw nerve with some people, and particularly some of the members of the judiciary here, when he suggested, with tongue in cheek, what some people, unenlightened people for sure, have suggested in the past, that big city lawyers are the ones best qualified to be on that bench. And I am sure that when he suggested it — it may have been automatic — I am sure Ken was acting in good faith. He realized that he was appealing to a certain prejudice that lies in the back of some of our minds here, and, as I said before, I hold no grudge or do not deny the right to have this kind of prejudice in our minds. This is part of what makes a representative body.

He went on to solicit even further this sort of thinking in the convention by suggesting that you could look around the room and see very many eminent gentlemen who, because of the weakness of the present system, had been passed over as potential judicial talent for the supreme court. I happen to agree with him on this, too, but I submit in trying to justify his position he has demonstrated just the kind of subtle sort of pressure that exists when you start talking about sectionalizing anything, and I don't think we have any place for it on a court that writes opinions which are the law for all of the state.

The contrast with the circuit court is a rather absurd contrast, because at the circuit court level, that circuit court is not making decisions that are very often of statewide concern, but the supreme court is almost invariably making decisions that are of statewide concern, and I would hate to suggest the possibility that we might place our court in the position where 3 of them, for example, would only have to be concerned about the popularity of their decisions in a single county, Wayne county, and a fourth one would only have to be concerned about the popularity or public acceptance of his decisions in Oakland county. And I feel real sorry for the fellow who gets in under district 7 under their plan, because he has to satisfy the people in 48 counties, starting at Bay City and going all the way to the Keweenaw peninsula.

Now you might notice from this map, for example, we have had in the last 30 years 3 judges from the upper peninsula. We have had 7 from Wayne county. As had been stated, only 1 from Oakland county, and we have had 6 from district 6. This brings us around to the second reason that the president of the Illinois bar association had for retaining the district plan in the judicial revision; the one that he didn't like to come right out and say, but the one that was very easily read into his comments, and that was that as a realist who had been fighting as an idealist for many years for judicial revision in Illinois — and anybody who examines their system knows that they need it if anybody needs it — there is nothing in that system that commends it be copied by the state of Michigan, because in every way that you might compare it with our system it is inferior. They fought for many years as a bar association over there for revision, and they finally came to the conclusion that if they were to get any revision at all they had to get something less than a perfect system and something less than a perfect system meant that they were going to have to satisfy the state legislature and the politicians in Illinois that they were not taking away from them the judicial system.

So, admittedly, there are things in the judicial revision proposed for the state of Illinois that the theorists do not believe in entirely, but they feel they have to take it in order to get the other good things, the other gains that are made, and one of the things that the politicians in Illinois absolutely insist on is the retention of the district plan, even though they're going to give Cook county more representation than it now has, because the district plan in Illinois absolutely guarantees for all time, as it would here, a substantial majority of the court coming from the state outside of the heavily populated area. Now, all of us have this in our minds. There is not too much sense in us kidding each other about this being a factor, and there is a political overtone in this plan that is inescapable, and the political overtone is the immediate effect of this on the very next election that occurs. And as one observer, not speaking for my party, not speaking for anyone else but myself, it is my humble opinion that there are at least 3 other judges next coming for election that don't have the chance of the proverbial snowball down below of surviving the election if we go to the district plan, and the sponsors of the district plan well know this.

Mr. Prettie cited the difficulty of statewide elections, cited the comments of bar presidents from other states. He didn't mention, however, the comments of the president of the Minnesota bar, who appeared before us, when he was asked somewhat eagerly, "Don't you agree that it's a terrible burden on a supreme court judge to make him go all over the state campaigning for office?" And without batting an eyelash he looked right back at the questioner and said, "Why no, I don't think it is a burden at all." He said, "I think it's a darn good thing for him to get out and find out what's going on in the state. It makes him a better judge." It has been suggested here a judge might be a better judge if he only had to campaign in Wayne county and never had to go out of that county in order to get on the bench until he drove to Lansing to assume the position than if he had to campaign from Wayne county to the Keweenaw peninsula, and talk to the people, meet their questions and be subjected to their scrutiny. This, it seems to me, is contrary to the popular conception of democracy, that the best way for people to make a decision about a candidate, and the best way for the candidate to serve the people that he is elected to serve, is to be exposed to them and be selected by them. And a judge elected out of Wayne county to the supreme court does not represent the people of Wayne county; he represents the people of the state of Michigan, and he should not, under any circumstances, make his decision based upon the fact that he represents a certain section of the state.

As I said before, if you would like to experiment with this system, I submit you should vote for the minority report amendment and leave the system as it is now with the legislature having the power to institute this system if they want to try it out; but let's don't freeze a system like this, or anything similar to it, into the constitution. We are not asking to freeze the present system into the constitution, to wit, the partisan nomination or the nomination by the party convention. This can be changed at any time. We don't advocate that this should be kept for all time. If somebody has a better system, let's try it, but let's don't try it by taking the flexibility now available to the legislature away from them and freezing a system into the constitution.

We are back around again to this magic word of flexibility. In this particular instance I think the minority finds itself on the side of the angels, because we are not advocating status quo in the sense of saying we have got a system that works, nobody can demonstrate by any example that another system is better, they can suggest by theory that it might be better, and therefore we are holding out against progress. This is not the situation at all. We are holding out for a provision, a constitutional provision, which permits any kind of a change within its framework that the legislature might see fit to institute, and this could be any form of progress in a change. The only condition that is involved here in the present language of the constitution is election, not even statewide election, but just election by the people, and nonpartisan election by the people, and I don't think there is anybody here who is seriously going to urge that the people of Michigan are ready to go to a partisan system of electing judges. I will have to confess and admit that I would have, with greater alacrity, supported a plan for the nomination, the partisan nomination and election that existed prior to 1939, but there just doesn't seem to be very much sympathy for it either here at the convention or amongst the people. The people themselves put this in in 1939, and there are a number of political reasons that have been explained historically for this happening, but it has worked rather well.

There is this, also, to be considered. We gave out the other day photocopies of 2 sections of the recommendations of the state bar that were made before the convention convened. They were made by committees made up of many prominent men. Some of them are here in this convention. Looking at page 47, you have the beginning of the report of the committee on court administration. If you will turn over to page 48, you will see a rather impressive list of prominent members of the bar, I am sure, showing a good cross section of the state by sectional basis, by the judiciary versus the working bar, and by partisan affiliation, if any. The recommendations made, as I stated before, before this convention started, on the basis of a year's work or in some cases on the basis of many years of work, by this committee of the bar were 1, that the present provisions of the state constitution pertaining to the election of judges be retained. Now, did this mean that the members of this committee subscribed wholeheartedly to the exact method that is now used? Not at all. Merely that from the viewpoint of constitutional change, they felt that no change was necessary.

At this juncture it might be well to observe also that although there was a lot of discussion during the campaign for con con about the court system, in watching a lot of candidates in our area it seems to me that the lawyers are the ones who are responsible for talking about it, because this was the safest area for us to talk in with lay candidates against us on the other side, because regardless of our backgrounds, we had a little bit of an edge in that kind of debate. But really, in my section of the state which did vote to call a convention, a crying need for judicial reform was not the compelling motive for voting to call a convention, and I haven't experienced any great ground swell of dissatisfaction amongst the people with the present system, and I don't think anybody else here can honestly say they have, either.

There is always agitation amongst the lawyers, as there should be, for changes in the court system. The lawyers are somewhat similar to the military and anybody else, and I think it might be safe to say when the lawyers quit griping, that is the time to start worrying, and if they ever agree on anything, then I would certainly be worried, because it is very difficult to get a majority, and certainly never unanimous view, from any group of lawyers as soon as you put 2 or more of them together. Nonpartisan nomination and elections should be retained as to judges who have terms of 6 or more years, except those elected on a statewide basis. The same should apply to the justices of the peace if revision for justice courts were retained in the constitution; the present system of nominating and electing supreme court justices should be retained with the same provisions to apply to judges of the intermediate courts of appeals.

You will notice that they made a distinction on this nonpartisan primary when they got to the justices of the supreme court because, for many of the reasons that Mr. Prettie has indicated, you get into a great deal of difficulty if you try to saddle the system with a nonpartisan statewide primary; that, apparently, in their wisdom, the people who have gone on before us want to avoid. Mr. Prettie has quoted at some length from Mr. Justice Edwards' testimony before the committee, and in conclusion I would like to read a letter that he wrote quite recently to the president of this convention. It is addressed to Mr. Stephen Nisbet, president, constitutional convention, Lansing, Michigan:

Dear Steve,

As one whose testimony pertaining to the judicial article of the forthcoming constitution was sought by the committee on judicial branch, and as a former justice of the Michigan supreme court, and one with continuing interest in the administration of law in this state, I would like respectfully to record my view concerning Committee Proposal 91, submitted by the committee on judicial branch and recorded in Journal 71 of the constitutional convention, dated February 2, 1962.

This proposal contemplates the election of justices of the supreme court by district rather than on a statewide basis. Such sectionalization of the highest court of the state seems to me to be most undesirable. The supreme court of the state should command the talent of the best which is available on the bench and the bar of the state, regardless of where the individual justice resides. Above all, each justice should be dedicated to consideration of problems of law as they affect the whole state of Michigan rather than any geographical or political district thereof.

While I do not, of course, deny that there are many public officials elected by districts who rise above sectional interest in the discharge of their duties to the state or to the country, I see little merit in imposing upon each justice sectional considerations of this nature which would represent a burden to all and a real impediment to some.

I do not comment upon whether or not this plan, by its nature, indicates partisan origin. I have made no detailed analysis of the districts or the electoral picture that might result, and for the moment I assume that it is submitted in utter good faith. There has been, however, much high hope engendered that the constitutional convention might move this state toward modern government and toward good government by the adoption of a modern and sound constitution. In my opinion, sectionalizing or districting the Supreme Court of Michigan is a step in the opposite direction from good government.

I trust the convention will reject this portion of the committee report.

Sincerely yours, George Edwards.

I think that this very clearly and succinctly sums up the position of the minority, and I would like to yield at this time to Mr. Garvin or Mr. Barthwell.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: To which gentleman do you prefer to yield, Mr. Ford?

MR. FORD: To whichever is ready.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford yields to Mr. Barthwell.

MR. BARTHWELL: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I walked into this judicial committee, and was really disturbed when I found that I was the only lay member on this 21 man committee. I thought a while, and as I listened to the committee lay their plans out, just how we would proceed to study the article, and listened to them say that we would call the bar association for polls, and the eminent judges to talk to us about this article, I began to feel that I was real happy that I was on this committee, and sorry that some more lay persons were not on the committee, because it immediately appeared to me that this committee considered that the judicial article was made for the service of the lawyers, and they had forgotten the people completely. I want to say, after listening to the very many eminent judges, lawyers and secretaries of bar associations from various states, about the only question that they seemed to have agreed upon was the fact that the court system of Michigan was not bad as compared to court systems of the nation. They all said that we had many things that they would like to have. So, this is about the only point that they agreed upon.

Mr. Prettie mentioned the committee's report. Well, as I live, I learn many things. I even found out how lawyers agree to get a majority report out of a committee. We had a very fine chairman; a very fine committee. We divided very sharply over the different methods of selecting the supreme court justices, so the day before the last day we had our committee chairman say to us, "I have got to report out by the deadline, so I want to get at least 11 votes for some plan. You can sign a minority report or you can get on the floor and oppose it; but just let me bring this plan out." So it was under these conditions that we finally brought out the majority plan.

I figure the division of our deliberations has been over trying to improve the method of selecting judicial officers. It is contended by those who propose the district system that by districting the state this would enable us to encourage a high type of lawyer to present himself for the office of supreme court justice. May I call your attention to the states where this plan has been adopted? They are Oklahoma, Kentucky, Illinois, Louisiana, Maryland and Nebraska. I would like also to call your attention to the fact that of the eminent people we have had to testify before our committee, none of them have pointed out a single one of these states as having a judicial system superior to ours.

Let's look at the committees' supporting reasons which are found in the journal, page 461, and I just want to read the statistics of their reasons to you. The first table is the districts and the population in each district. In district 1: 888,766 people there; in district 2: 690,259; district 3: 817,341; in district 4: 855,308; in district 5: 999,019; in district 6: 904,908; in district 7: 890,062.

This does represent a fairly even division of the people living in the district, but when we get down to the next table, which I really consider the meat of the plan, we find the number of lawyers living in these districts. In district 1 there are 4,215 lawyers; district 2, 566 lawyers; district 3, 544 lawyers; district 4, 520 lawyers; district 5, 767 lawyers; in 6 there are 581; and in 7, 516 lawyers.

Based on the figures contained therein, it shows that where the districts are divided fairly evenly upon a population basis, this does not hold true with reference to the lawyers living in these districts; hence their lack of availability. One third of the justices will always come from over 50 per cent of the lawyers of the state, while 2/3 of the justices must always come from less than ½ of the lawyers of the state. This clearly reveals the mathematical weakness of this contention, because you are going to always have to find the most able people from less than ½ of the lawyers for 2/3 of the justices.

We are not here for the purpose of changing for the sake of change. We want to improve the judicial article. The districting plan does not improve our present system, and I think that the minorities plan to leave it with the legislature is at least giving the lawyers in their political setup as fair a choice as you are giving the people of the state as to home rule. We left it to the legislature for them to decide what home rule would be, and I think we could make a similar compromise, since this seems to be a compromising deal from start to finish.

Therefore I urge you to please support the minority amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford, do you desire now to yield to Mr. Garvin?

MR. FORD: I would like to yield to Mr. Everett first.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford yields to Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I am here to support the minority report amendment, not, I feel, for the reasons for which it was offered, but for the principal reason that to me, this is the only method by which we can have a direct vote in this convention, at least in this committee, on the district plan. As Mr. Prettie has very fairly stated, there are a number of alternatives which have been offered. These alternatives will be debated and voted upon in turn, but no other method is given us to express ourselves whether we are for or against the district plan.

If a majority of this committee favors the district plan, we should know this now at the outset. If, on the other hand, a majority oppose it, for whatever reason and with whatever alternative in mind, we ought also to know this so we can then turn to the alternative plan and determine which is best. I think without question, all of us, whatever method we may support, have one common motive. We are seeking the best system of getting the best personnel on the Supreme Court of the state of Michigan. In this case, if, as I say, you are opposed to districting, as I personally am, you will support the minority report amendment so that we can clear the decks and start finding that best method. If, on the other hand, you agree with Mr. Prettie and favor the district plan, you have an opportunity to express yourself by simply voting against the minority proposition.

I would like to second what Mr. Barthwell said. The district plan is only technically a majority plan of the committee. Four of us, myself included, voted to bring it out solely so we could have a matter here to be discussed and to be determined by the committee of the whole, and ultimately by the convention itself. It is for these reasons that I rise to support the minority plan and urge votes for it on behalf of all of those who may object to the districting plan offered.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I would like to yield to Mr. Garvin, cosponsor of the minority report.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford yields to Mr. Garvin.

MR. GARVIN: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I want to emphasize what Mr. Ford said in one respect, just in the event that some of the delegates still believe that the method of the election of the supreme court and the nomination thereof is in the constitution. It is not in the constitution now, and we hope that it will not be, because the legislature is there to rearrange any court structure whenever it is deemed necessary to rearrange it.

You received on your desks the photostat of the Michigan State Bar Journal, page 59, Judicial Selection and Tenure. I am particularly interested in that committee, because I see by the names of that committee about 30 members, people that you know. I want to give you their recommendations to the state bar of Michigan in September, 1961, which is as follows:

> A new state constitution should provide for a court system consisting of a supreme court and intermediate court of appeals, a trial court of general jurisdiction, a separate probate court and a court of limited countywide jurisdiction.

The committee has done that. There are other recommendations:

> No one should be allowed to exercise judicial power unless he is a member of the state bar, with an appropriate exception for present incumbents who are not lawyers.

Your committee has done that. Number 3, "Incumbent judges should carry a designation of office when running for reelection." We have not covered that point. Four, "In elections other persons should be allowed to run against the incumbent." We, I believe the majority of the committee, believe in that. Five,

> In the multiple court, judges' court, staggered terms should be provided. Precise definition of multiple courts has not yet been determined. Tentatively, however, if a court has fewer than 4 judges staggered terms probably would not be required.

I believe your committee has covered that.

Now, since this recommendation by this august committee of the state bar, which in September of 1961 had such prominent members, I wanted to, if you are not looking at your copies now, give you some of the members. The chairman was one J. Don Lawrence, a very eminent lawyer. One of the members was a person who has been mentioned here, who I believe is justice of the supreme court, Eugene S. Black. Another member whom I believe some of you know, and has made this recommendation, is one Richard C. Van Dusen. Of course we have also Theodore Souris, another august member of the bar of the state of Michigan. I just wanted to bring to your attention that this was in September of 1961, after we knew that there would be a convention to rewrite the Constitution of the state of Michigan.

Now, of these august members of the state bar there is no minority report, but if you look at the names there, you will see people in your own district who supported this—all except the provisions of section g that we are discussing at this time.

So I therefore, through the help and assistance of this august committee, recommend the minority report amendment that section g be deleted.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford, the Chair believes you retain the floor. Do you desire to yield further at this time?

MR. FORD: I would like to yield to Mr. Ostrow, who is also a sponsor of this minority report.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford yields to Mr. Ostrow.

MR. OSTROW: I support the minority report and oppose the committee report. I want to talk to the nonlawyers. I think I can do some good there. I can't with the others.

Now, we have heard a lot about political influence on the courts and pressures on the courts, all in generalities. At recess time go to the library downstairs and pick up one of these books. Pick up the latest ones. These are the Michigan Reports, and contain all of the opinions of the supreme court on every case they decide. You run through these volumes and see what you can see of a political nature in any of these cases that are reported there. Take a look at the lawyers, take a look at the litigants, take a look at the subject matter. You won't find one in 10 volumes.

Now, the kind of judge who would be influenced by political pressure if he is elected in a convention is the same kind of a judge who would be influenced by political pressure if he was elected from a district, or if there is no district he would be influenced by business pressures or social pressures. Nobody has ever been able to figure out who will become a good judge. You can't tell by what kind of a lawyer he was. Nor can you tell by his clientele before he became a judge what his thinking will be after he becomes a judge.

Your best example is Chief Justice Earl Warren, and I say this not disparagingly. Chief Justice Warren leads the liberal element—to some people the radical element—of the United States supreme court. He was appointed by a president. Nobody could have predicted what his thinking would be when he became a judge. There was nothing in his background as governor to indicate what his thinking was. This thing called judicial temperament, which makes the ideal judge, nobody has been able to figure out how to measure it before the man becomes a judge, whether he is elected or appointed. It is like going around with a girl. You can go with her for 10 years, but you cannot tell what kind of wife she will make until after you marry her. That is the same thing with judges.

So it gets down to the point that it is not a question of influence on judges. There are a lot of people who don't like the thinking of particular judges. There is no way you can get insurance against that. If you are in the insurance business, you don't like the judgments that have been handed down in automobile accident cases. I submit to you that it is not only Democrats who are run over by automobiles. And I submit further to you that every lawyer who can get into federal court goes into federal court because they get bigger judgments there, and I further submit that it's the jury that determines the amount of the verdict and not the court. In California, where they have a modified form of the Missouri plan, the judgments there are 2 and 3 times as much as they are here.

You look at these books. It won't take you long. Just run through the cases. See the subject matter—automobile accident cases, divorce cases, zoning cases, contract cases—and you see how many of these books you have to go through and how many cases before you run into a single thing that even remotely resembles political consideration. I don't like everything our court has done. Nobody ever likes everything that a court has done. In every lawsuit somebody wins, somebody loses. The losers don't like it. At least I don't. And if you get to losing cases, it gets to be a habit and you can't win. The fault, if we have any fault, is not with the way we pick our judges. Men rise to the occasion. If they don't, it doesn't make any difference how you pick them.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford, the Chair believes you still retain the floor. Do you desire to yield further?

MR. FORD: I believe that this takes care of all of the sponsors except Mr. Bledsoe, who wishes to speak.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize Mr. Bledsoe.

MR. BLEDSOE: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, if Mr. Ostrow will permit me, I think I shall address myself to the nonlawyers in this convention.

I want to say to you that, just as Mr. Barthwell said, this was not a majority opinion, in fact, it was not a majority report that came out, because it was tied, and I said to the chairman, "Lock the door." I am sure this will meet with a certain expression that was given here the other day about locking the lawyers in, because I wasn't prepared to come out of there. And it was after I said lock the door, I think it was one of our gentler sex, or the only gentle sex of our committee, who said, "Well, I'll put my 1 vote in just for the purpose of getting out of here." That is how you got this. Now don't feel that this is a sacred cow. This is your supreme court, and it belongs to everybody, and we thought it was so important we had better bring it out to you and let you help us thrash it out.

The only thing that disturbs me, and it has disturbed me all along about the possible changes that may take place with reference to our supreme court: I came, and I am certain most of us did, with the idea that we would try to make things, where we could, make a better article or make a better constitution, and I listened with great interest to find out just where these improvements could be made, and we don't have any. The only criticism that we have heard, and it came both from very eminent men, the judge, and my good friend, brother Prettie, over there, but it seems to me, after listening to them, the only thing that disturbs them is the fact that after the candidates are nominated by the respective parties, they have to take a bath before they can run on a nonpartisan ticket. That is what they said, both of them. Not a single word, just as Sam has said—and you read those opinions of those judges, I am certain you won't get any idea that they hadn't taken a bath when they wrote those opinions.

Now, that's procedure. That's procedure. If we don't like the way that our conventions are subject to vote, they are partisan, and if we don't like the way that they nominate our judges and get them on the ticket to run, that is a change that can be done by the legislature, and if we haven't arrived at the place in our social thinking that we can achieve that, let's not bind the infirmity of our inability to accomplish this on the next generation for 50 years. Maybe 10 or 15 years later there will be a smarter generation that can come through with this. It has given us a lot of trouble, and that is why this article is here. That is exactly why it is here. We believe in nonpartisan election of judges. We believe that it should be done by the great political parties. Maybe we don't like the party system, but what can we do better? Just like the jury system, let's change it. I don't know anything that is better than having the selection of our judges by our political parties. They come from the people. The delegates who come to those conventions nominate the candidates for the rest of the members of our governmental structures without them having to take a bath to run. We nominate the attorney general, and we nominate, up to now, unless there have been some changes hereabout—proposed changes, I think, in the department of education, but the same conventions that nominate the other members of your parties are nominating these.

Now, if we're going to start changing, you are going to have to make basic changes, and until we do that, until we can come up with that, I see no reason to change just for the sake of change. I asked Justice Black, when he came before our committee, I said, "Well, Judge, do you think that —" and it is in the record—"any of the men who are presently sitting on our supreme court are men of ill repute?" or that "anything that has happened to them in the process by which they got the office that has made them unfit to sit there?" I challenge the record, brother Prettie. You were sitting there. And his answer was no. That was the answer. I asked that question more than once. There isn't a single person who came before that committee who was able to pinpoint any scandal or anything that would tend to degrade our court by virtue of the process by which they are presently elected, and the record is entirely barren of that. So here this morning for the first time I hear they need to take a bath after they got nominated by the party. That is the only thing. The presumption is when a person needs a bath, he needs one. But that wasn't even mentioned before the committee. It might have had some influence if it had. It was mentioned here on the floor for the first time.

Now, if either of these gentlemen can get up here now and break this bath situation down where we can get hold of it, and tell us just what it is that happens to a man who is nominated by his party, selected by honorable people from the community as an able, honest, fearless, upright man to sit on that court, and then he is nominated by the party, the same party that nominates the rest of the ticket—and that's done by both parties—and after we carry him through there, and he is elected by the people on a nonpartisan ticket, I want to know where this metamorphosis takes place that degrades this man after going through this process. Just pinpoint the apex of this change where he—between cleanliness and uncleanliness, after all this has happened to him, so we can take that out right here on the floor. And until that is done, I see no reason at all for disturbing this, and certainly fastening this procedure on our generation for another 50 years—because I do hope they will be a little smarter than we are. For that reason, I think we ought to ponder this a great deal. It is your ox and it is my ox. Let's tie it up in this matter, and forget the fact that this was a majority consensus that came out of that committee, because it wasn't. We are going to have to depend upon you, my good laymen, to help us get out of this. The lawyers are stuck.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof—excuse me, Mr. Ford, the Chair believes you still retained the floor.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, I believe this concludes the presentation of the minority, and at this time I would like to yield to the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford yields the floor, the Chair takes it, and yields to Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, as we anticipated this has engendered much debate, and will undoubtedly do so later. Looking at the hour, I move that the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves that the committee do now rise. Those in favor of the motion will say aye. Opposed, no.

The motion prevails.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the purpose of considering matters on the general orders calendar.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on the motion of Mr. Van Dusen. All those in favor will say aye; opposed, no.

The motion prevails. Mr. Van Dusen.

[Whereupon, Mr. Van Dusen assumed the Chair to preside as chairman of the committee of the whole.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will be in order. When last the committee sat we were considering an amendment to section g of Committee Proposal 91, offered by Delegate Ford. The Chair had 3 delegates seeking recognition on the amendment. The first of those was Delegate Lawrence, the gentleman from Ypsilanti. Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I rise to speak in favor of the amendment and against the committee proposal, the so called majority proposal, which really isn't a majority at all, and wasn't a majority except for the purpose of getting the proposal out of the committee.

I concur in what Mr. Everett stated this morning, and I feel that this convention and the people of the state will be much better served if the minority proposal is adopted. After all, our purpose should be to get the best candidates possible, and, as I see it, it will least be served by the elective position taken by the so called majority report.

I would like to ask a question—I would like to have somebody at some time explain it—and that is, if the elective system is best, if this elective system as that part of the proposal contemplates is the best method of getting the best judicial candidates possible, why is it necessary to break it down into districts? What is there that this perfect system, so called, has that it cannot be conducted on a statewide basis for a state office? Why is it necessary, if the system is so good, to gerrymander the state, allocate to Wayne county a total of 3 seats and leave outstate either 4 or 5 or 6 seats, depending on the number of judges we end up with in the supreme court? I would like to have someone tell me what makes this system, this elective system, better if it is on a district basis than if it is on a statewide basis.

Surely there is nobody here who would claim that a voter in Wayne county, of that large population, would know the qualifications of the 3 candidates in Wayne county unless he happened to be an attorney who knew them or made some special study. He could just as well find out about a candidate from Grand Rapids or Flint or Saginaw, or any other place in the state, because he is going to have to make an investigation, and an investigation probably is not necessary as much outstate, whether it is a statewide candidacy or not.

Certainly if the system, which is the system we have used in the past for all these years on a statewide basis, of electing our judges, if that is what is claimed we have been doing—at least we have been going through competitive elections eventually—if that has been good all these years, why has it suddenly become necessary to divide the state up?

Of course, it is my contention that the elective system as proposed in the majority report does not weed out and make available the best talent obtainable, and, of course, that is the real difficulty with this elective system where anybody who can get the necessary petitions, or can get nominated at a party convention, immediately injecting politics into the judiciary, or whatever other method is used which is eventually decided on by the legislature, can become a candidate. It doesn't make any difference whether it is in the supreme court or in the circuit court, when it comes right down to it there must be some means of selecting the candidates in the first instance; some competent way of doing it, and not by political parties, if we are to have a truly independent judiciary.

So, for those reasons, that there must be a fatal defect in the system or it would not be necessary to break it down as they are trying to do, I urge you to support the minority report amendment and vote against the committee proposal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The lady from Grand Rapids, Delegate Judd.

MRS. JUDD: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I should like to make a few comments on the arguments that have been presented to us this morning, the argument being in favor of the district plan.

I couldn't tell for sure this morning which side Delegate Prettie was arguing on because he called to witness 4 Democratic justices, and we know that the Democrats are opposed to a district plan, and then he called to witness 1 Republican justice, whom we know is in favor of an appointive plan. However, we can find out a little more clearly the reasons why the majority or so called majority of the committee want the district plan, and I would like to take up point by point the rationale given in the journal.

MR. LEIBRAND: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: State your point, Mr. Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: It is my understanding we are discussing the minority report, and Delegate Judd is discussing the majority report.

MRS. JUDD: I am discussing, Mr. Chairman, the reasons why we should delete the majority report. Is that in order?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair thinks the lady was proceeding in order, Judge Leibrand.

MRS. JUDD: The general reason is that the reasons given in support of the majority report are not, in my opinion, valid reasons. We have not been given a good reason for voting for the district plan, and therefore we should vote against it.

If you would turn in your journal to page 468, let's discuss some of these reasons. Reasons 1 and 2 say that the candidates and the voters may meet and know each other. In the twentieth century this is a nostalgic viewpoint. Obviously the writer does not live in a metropolitan area where people don't know their neighbors and seldom even see the family that lives across the hall. If, indeed, the need to be personally acquainted with a candidate for statewide office were possible and valid in our day, wouldn't it be equally reasonable to divide up the office of the chief executive into 7 parts and elect 1 member of it in each of 7 districts, and then some of us would know 1/7 of the executives.

Drop down to reason number 4. A "balance", it says, "will be maintained in the type of men sitting on the court . . . thus assuring a statewide approach to cases. . . ." Balance in the type of men. I think this is a valid term. What type of men do we want on the court? I would presume we want men of integrity, knowledge of the law, objectivity. Do these qualifications relate to area? Do we want merely a balance in these justices of integrity and objectivity? How does dividing the court in areas assure statewide approach? Doesn't it rather tend to show a provincial point of view?

Reasons 5 and 6. It is consistent with a nonpartisan judiciary, the journal says. Let's skip this one for the moment. It strikes at the heart of the issue and should be our final consideration.

Reason 7. It would remove the inordinate expense of a statewide campaign to the candidate. Any election which is nonpartisan, and hence without party backing, is an inordinate expense even in a district, as all of us know who survived the primary for election to this convention, and to just that degree it limits the independence of the judge unless he is wealthy in his own right.

Reason 8. It would attract the candidates of the highest quality. This presents a puzzling contradiction. No doubt it will attract some able men. Any system of the selection of judges will secure some men of high quality. But, on the other hand, I hear the argument that you can't require probate judges to be lawyers, because in some areas there are too few lawyers. Yet from the same area we are asked to elect justices of the supreme court who, we are told, will assuredly be candidates of the highest quality.

Point 9. Would inspire every lawyer to strive for excellence so that his fellow lawyers might think him worthy to serve on the court. Here I believe the rationale falls to a lower and lower level. The system will inspire lawyers to be on their good behavior. Is this why we have courts? The argument, in my opinion, is a brazen appeal for lawyers' support of the district plan. No wonder so many lawyers like the plan, and, parenthetically, I don't dislike lawyers. I love one very much. The writer has evidently at this point forgotten that there are laymen in the convention.

Point 14, the third paragraph down. Justices in the past coming from many different parts of the state, once elected, take a statewide view. The implication is that under the district plan they will also, once elected, take a statewide view. This is a logic hardly worthy of the legal profession, for the key to the viewpoint of a justice is not where he came from but to whom he owes his election.

Another view of the rationale brings its Achilles' heel to light. The whole argument falls when we look at district 7 on the map. Forty-eight counties stretching from the Bay City line to the tip of the Keweenaw peninsula. Will the voters of this vast area be acquainted with the candidates? Can a candidate make the rounds of every city and village? Is the area so uniform in its characteristics that its judge can add to the "balance of the court?" Will a campaign in the area be inexpensive? And why is it so big? The answer is the lack of lawyers in the area. If all the advantages of the system claimed in the rationale failed to hold in this district, what value the system?

Let's go back to points 5 and 6. It would eliminate partisanship. Yes, it would, perhaps, within the district, but as to the court as a whole it would assure partisanship. Indeed, at this point, we must face the reality of the plan. It is designed to assure partisanship.

In this convention the delegates are faced with 2 alternatives coming out of the judiciary committee, the majority report for election by district, designed to assure Republican dominance of the court, and the minority report for statewide election, designed to assure Democratic dominance of the court. Is this the way to secure objectivity in our judges?

I say a plague on both your houses. Let us defeat both these plans and search for one more likely to assure political independence and objectivity, and fair to both parties.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Norris. Mr. Norris passes. The gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Iverson.

MR. IVERSON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Ford a question.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. IVERSON: I believe Mr. Ford, in his presentation of the minority report, made the statement that we do not advocate that the present system be kept. As I read the rationale of the minority report on page 580, "The legislature has provided a system of nomination and election under the 1908 constitution which has worked very well in the state of Michigan," and then, in the closing paragraph,

> In conclusion, the proponents of this minority report believe, after listening to testimony by representatives of the bench and bar throughout the state and at all levels, as well as representatives from the bar associations of other states, that our present system for selection of supreme court jutices is far superior to any alternative plan presented before our committee.

I would like to ask Mr. Ford if his statement in presenting the minority report is the correct one or is the rationale included at page 580 the correct interpretation?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Does the gentleman care to answer? Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: They are both correct. They don't differ. Art is using one of these things that Mr. King characterized as a lawyer's device on this floor yesterday, or the day before, trying to create the impression we are being inconsistent. I think I said earlier today that we are on the side of the angels on this one because we are not holding out for status quo in a rigid fashion. In this case status quo is flexibility and not rigidity. What I said was that in the opinion of the people supporting the minority report the present system was superior to anything that had been offered as an alternative, and this I will stand by. What I said this morning was that in addition to this, even if you believe that the district plan is a good plan you should still support our position because our position is that no matter what plan you select at this point, unless you are convinced that it will work for all time in the future you shouldn't freeze it into the constitution. And all we are asking to do is leave the flexibility that now exists in the language that is now in the constitution so that if you want to try a district plan and it doesn't work, you can take it back out.

So I will stand by the statement I made this morning, and also the statement made by the minority. As far as we are concerned with what we have before us now, we urge that you vote for the minority amendment even if you believe in the district plan, because the right way to do it, if you want to do it, is not by freezing it in the constitution, and if you believe in the Missouri plan or the modified federal plan, or whatever plan you have in mind, you should still vote for the minority amendment to strike section g from the so called majority committee proposal.

Now, when we speak in the minority report, in the written report here at 580, we are simply saying that 7 members of the committee not only prefer that you don't put the district plan in, but prefer that we retain the present system.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Iverson.

MR. IVERSON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make one further comment, and I dislike to suggest that Delegate Judd did this intentionally, but apparently she is so wrapped up in her opposition to the district plan, and so wrapped up in a plan which is not the present plan of the supreme court, that she decided that under section 9 of the rationale this was for every lawyer in the state to strive for such excellence that his fellow lawyers might think him worthy to serve on this high court.

I am sorry to say that Mrs. Judd failed to quote all of the language, because the language reads, ". . . every lawyer in the state to strive for such excellence that his fellow lawyers and the public might think him worthy to serve on this high court."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Dr. Nord.

MR. NORD: Mr. Chairman, I come before you not to praise the district plan but to bury it. I don't know that I have the power to bury it, but if it is possible I will add my little bit to it.

It is very, very difficult to speak calmly about this plan. I have been advised to speak calmly about it, and I doubt whether I can do it. It is not a calm type plan. I have been reported in the newspapers as saying I believe that it's something like a disgraceful plan. I believe that it is. In fact, I reported that this is one of the most disgraceful plans that I have ever seen before me at this convention.

The fact that The Detroit News' editorial supports my position does not make me think I am wrong. They are usually on the opposite side, but it happens this time they are on the same side. I did not distribute this thing, and I don't believe in publicizing it in the newspaper. But I notice from the remarks of Mrs. Judd, and from the editorial of The Detroit News, and some other sources of information, that this issue is a very, very tricky proposition, and partisanship or nonpartisanship is at the root of it. It is not sufficient to say that nonpartisanship is at the root of it. Both nonpartisanship and partisanship are involved.

Before we decide this issue it seems to me it is very important to understand how basic the whole problem is. This is the most basic problem we can ever face in the constitution. I will explain why I take that view. We write in a constitution protection for people from the majority, and we put that in the constitution in the form of the declaration of rights. It prevents the majority from doing wrong in certain cases to the minority or to an individual. Then we select supreme court judges to make sure that that constitution remains in effect. If we ever have judges who do not obey the constitution, particularly with respect to those basic rights, civil rights, civil liberties, then we have no constitution, and that means we have no protection for minorities, and that means we don't have the rule of law.

As I say, there is no such thing as a legal system or constitutional system unless the judges are selected according to some system which will guarantee that they do live up to the constitution and the laws. Nobody has ever figured out a system that will guarantee positively they will do that, but there have been other systems which certainly don't do that.

And I will call to your attention — maybe some of you have seen that new movie, Judgment at Nuremberg, and if not, you are aware of the fact that there were judges, supreme court judges, in Germany, and they did not uphold the constitution nor the laws, and a horrible result eventuated.

It is crucial that judges obey the constitution, and that they obey the laws, and that they be independent of day to day pressure. I have no doubt about that. At the same time there is also the problem of what do you do with judges who go wild; how do you get rid of them? You really have 2 inconsistent problems, and that is why nobody has a neat solution. One of them, how could they be independent of the public, because if they are not independent of the public that means they follow the majority rule, and if they follow the majority rule, what happens to the rights of the minority under the constitution. Therefore they cannot always follow the majority rule. On the other hand, suppose they never follow the majority rule; suppose they abuse their power. You must be able to get rid of them. And because of these 2 things, that they must be independent, and, at the same time, be in contact with the public somehow or other, no one has ever figured out a really good system, to say nothing of a perfect system. It is a difficult problem and it's a crucial problem.

There are 2 halves of this problem about how you select a judge. One is how you select him in the first place, and the second one, what you do with him after he is a judge. How does he stay in or how does he repeat his term of office? The way he is selected the first time is not particularly important. For example, we have an election system now, and yet, in effect, it is an appointive system. I believe that it's perfectly all right. I don't really worry too much of how we appoint them. But what does bother me is how we get rid of them. If we can't get rid of them we can be in for a lot of trouble.

In this connection I would like to say that the plan that is proposed now is the one plan that makes it certain that you can't get rid of them. Just think about what this plan does. Suppose there is a judge who is abusing his prerogative, he is behaving in a monstrous manner, he cares nothing for the constitution. Nowadays he has to return to the people and if the people of the state judge him he goes, he is booted out. But under the plan that is proposed he will not by judged by the people of the state. Eight-ninths of the people of the state will be disenfranchised from rendering an opinion on that judge. Eight-ninths of the people are excluded from making such a determination. All that is left is 1/9 of the people. He cannot be booted out anymore by the people. He can only be booted out if it so happens that that 1/9 of the people wish to do so. All he needs to stay in power, no matter how he abuses his office, is a majority of that 1/9 or 1/18 — in other words, a little over 5 per cent of the people. If he has them behind him he can do anything he pleases, and he can never be removed from the office unless he behaved in a crooked manner. He might be impeached.

The point is, the people cannot boot him out. This is one of the most pernicious features of this plan. Let's not get mixed up about the details, that this is just a technical difference. It is not. It is the heart of the matter. Either the people can kick him out of the court or they cannot. Under the present plan, and, in fact, under every other plan I have ever heard of, the people can kick out a judge. Under the plan proposed here they absolutely cannot.

Now, what is the reason that some effort is being made to change the system? I think there will always be some effort made at all times to change the judicial system, because there is an absolute conflict among 2 ideas: to make the judge independent, at the same time to be able to kick him out. So it is in this case, and no doubt in every convention there is a desire to improve the system. In this particular case the problem has to do with nonpartisanship. I have been hearing here that the argument is that the judge is now selected by a partisan convention and then he takes a bath and runs on a nonpartisan ticket. There is no doubt that that seems very odd. Whether you say take a bath or not, it doesn't seem very sensible. In fact, it seems hypocritical, and many people have objected to it because it is hypocritical. So let's examine that situation and see whether it is hypocritical or whether it is something else.

What is a nonpartisan election? That is the root of the problem at this stage of the problem. What is a nonpartisan election? A nonpartisan election is an election in which somebody runs for office and nobody supports them except when they go to vote. Nobody comes around and says, "Here is some money for your campaign." Nobody says, "We will help you in your campaign." They just leave him alone. No 2 people get together to support that candidate during the campaign. I ask you whether anybody has ever run for office under those conditions? The answer to that, as far as I know, is no. There is no such thing as a campaign which is nonpartisan in the sense that the man runs entirely by himself; that nobody assists him, and if you adopted a law that says that the campaign shall be nonpartisan, what is it that you say? You say that nobody shall assist him. You say that nobody shall help him financially, nobody can help him in any other way.

In my opinion, first of all, that is impossible to accomplish. In the second place, it would be extremely unwise to do it if you could accomplish it. We do want people to be able to get assistance from others in order to be able to run, otherwise nobody could ever run except the most wealthy man.

In addition, it seems to me that there is a basic civil right involved, and that right is the right to assist in a campaign and not just the right to vote. I therefore conclude on the point that the idea of a nonpartisan campaign is a fiction. In addition, it would be an unwise thing even if it could be done.

A nonpartisan ballot is an entirely different story. A nonpartisan ballot is the easiest thing in the world to do. You simply do not allow anybody to state who it is that supports him on the ballot. Now, there is certainly some merit to that in some cases. I have no objection to that system. In fact, I believe it is the best system for judges. I also believe it is perfectly all right to put the word "incumbent" underneath the name of a judge. There isn't anything wrong or difficult or complicated about having a nonpartisan ballot. But when it comes to having a nonpartisan campaign, as I say, it seems to me that is impossible and also undesirable. Now, if you face up to that, what do you conclude? You conclude that it seems to be desirable to have a nonpartisan ballot, and it seems to me desirable to have a partisan campaign.

That is the actual situation in Michigan at the present time, and I say that didn't happen by accident. It happened by trial and error. We have not been able to come up with a better solution. Here is not a great solution, but there doesn't seem to be a greater one in the offing.

Turning to the merits of the specific plan that we have before us, which has to do with population districts, I would like to say a number of things about population districts in view of the fact that we have been studying them at this convention for 5 months with great detail.

First of all, I would like to put this out: a number of Republicans, and, as a matter of fact, people not at the convention have a mistaken notion about the nature of population districts; districts which are equal in population. They have a notion that such population districts in this state under the present voting system would tend to be Democratic on the overall results. That is not so. The actual statistics based on past voting records show a different thing entirely. They show, as a matter of fact, for example in the legislature, where you have districts, that on a population basis the Democrats normally lose—in fact, they always have lost in the recent past—by a small margin, and the reason is that even though they may get 52 per cent of the vote ½ of the time, a big part of that vote is, so to speak, wasted votes. It is in Detroit where we have excess votes for Democrats, and they don't make any difference. And, as a result—and there is more of that in the Detroit and Wayne county area than there is outstate to counterbalance it—as a natural result of that, the actual facts show the population districts slightly favor Republicans. I am not against population districts because they favor Republicans. I am in favor of population districts in the legislature, or wherever we need to have districts. But I wouldn't want anyone to make a mistake and think that when you support population districts, that you are bending over backward to be nonpartisan or to be in favor of the Democrats. It is not so. To the contrary, it favors Republicans.

In this particular case, for example, where you have 6 districts, the various different estimates I have seen based on present voting strength would indicate you could expect to have 3 Democrats and 6 Republicans, or some people say 4 Democrats and 5 Republicans. I know that The Detroit News agrees with me on that point, that they feel that the result of this plan would be a majority of Republicans. I really doubt if anyone thinks the reverse. It is a Republican plan to that extent and the reason I mention that is because this plan has been put forward as a nonpartisan plan. A nonpartisan plan which switches the court from a majority of Democrats to a majority of Republicans is really not a nonpartisan plan.

But again considering it on the merits of a population district, we have had a lot of experience with population districts in the legislative organization committee. We know it isn't as simple as you may think. The first thing we learned is that in any kind of district, whether on population or something else, we run into the problem of gerrymandering; that is, where do you draw the line? No matter where you draw the line it has some political consequences, and if you draw lines for supreme court judges it will have political consequences, and if it has political consequences it will not be nonpartisan, it will be political. I don't see why we should wish to introduce the problem of gerrymandering in another part of the constitution. It is bad enough when we are forced to have it in one place, but we certainly shouldn't welcome it and bring it in in another place.

Similarly, the problems that we have had with apportioning of the legislature would be introduced in the judiciary. You know that in this plan as it is proposed, at the end of a certain period of time, January 4, 1973, and 10 years thereafter, every 10 years thereafter, the legislature would be expected to draw new lines, new districts, roughly based on population or as one of the proponents said, on population as nearly equal as may be. That is not the exact language of the proposal, but that is the language mentioned by the proponent. The legislature has not had a good record in drawing such lines in the past; not just in Michigan, but in all states they have had the most complicated trouble there can be. In the legislative apportionment committee we decided to give up on the legislature and turn it over to somebody else. It was just not possible to do it. I recognize the problem here is not identical with the one there, but the point still is that there are political consequences to those lines, and if there are, the legislature is going to have trouble drawing them.

What happens if the legislature does not draw them, as they were not able to do before? Suppose they fail to follow the language you have here? Suppose they never reapportion? You will have the same problem as you have with the legislative apportioning. You are just asking for new problems which never existed before. Suppose the legislature should adopt a plan, a reapportioning plan, but it isn't within the terms of the constitution. Who will adjudge that? The Supreme Court of Michigan will adjudge it. Now you will be asking the supreme court to determine whether the district plan for it is constitutional or not. It seems to me that you are simply inviting trouble there, too. You are injecting political boundary lines into the court.

I might say as well, possibly, that the legislature, having this power, has very considerable power over the supreme court. I recognize they can't actually get rid of a specific judge, but still they could affect the courts of judicial opinion by the power to redistrict, and they might use it as a club on the supreme court. This problem about population as nearly equal as may be also has caused trouble in the legislative organization committee. When some of us introduced a proposal just like that for the house of representatives, it was argued by others that it was impossible to do; that there was no way to make certain that something really is as nearly equal as may be because it is too vague. The language we have before us, of course, is more specific than as nearly equal as may be—it says within ¼ and ½, but anyway, if they attempt to come as nearly equal as may be, as is the objective stated by the proponents, we have that problem that we don't know exactly what that means. In the house proposal that the minority put out for the legislative organization we did attempt to grapple with that. We set up a statistical test so you could tell whether one proposal was closest to the norm or another was closest. We don't have anything like that in the present proposal for the judiciary. Again we will be running into problems about which plan is more constitutional than the other.

The main thing that you are doing by drawing these districts, I think we should recognize is that you are not just drawing lines on a map. What you are doing is drawing lines around people, people who live in various places of the state. And it seems to me there is never any reason to draw a line around a group of people and say from now on you will be treated differently from another group of people in the state, unless you have no other choice. In the legislature we have no choice. We elect them by dictation from those districts. In the supreme court that is not the situation. There is no need to draw lines around people.

Now, when we elect officials, supreme court judges, from these districts, what is supposed to be the objective of these districts? If it is anything like a legislative district, it means that the official is responsible to and therefore is responsive to the people of that district. If that is what we mean in this case, we are certainly making a terrible error. We don't want supreme court judges to be responsive only to 1/9 of the people of the state. We want them to be responsive to all of the people within a limited extent.

Also what you do when you draw lines about people is, you set up a quota system. I might say that the quota system is one of the things that causes me most to shudder. The quota system is something we must always try to avoid. Why must we have a quota system that says that we must have 3 judges, not less and not more, from Wayne county, and 1 judge from the upper part of the state, not more, not less? A quota system is a system that I have been familiar with in a very unhappy way. Quota systems are always used to discriminate against one group of people or another. In this case, when you enter into a quota system, you are letting loose that kind of objective. It seems to me that that might be the real objective behind this, to say that under no circumstances—and that has been mentioned here by someone that that is part of the desire—shall there ever be more than a certain number from one part of the state. That quota system I object to very strongly, and I might say, too, it doesn't make me feel better that under this proposed quota system you would increase the number of judges from Wayne county. I haven't got the slightest reason to believe at the present time we ought to have 3 judges from Wayne county. I don't know who the third one would be. We are better off not to have one from Wayne county unless we know who he is. Nobody should think that just because a number of us Democrats are from Wayne county, therefore we would enthusiastically endorse another judge from Wayne county. As far as I am concerned, nothing could be further from the truth. We don't want something for ourselves, for the district that we come from. This is not a district or local problem.

Now, what have we actually done when we adopt or attempt to adopt this particular plan? It seems to me that we take a very peculiar view of a constitution when we do this. First of all, I think we have to recognize that this is a radical change from the past in Michigan. It is a radical change. It is true that some states have taken this radical step. It nevertheless is a radical change. We can't predict exactly what will come out of it. I am not against every radical change. I believe every time there is a need for a radical change, then it should be taken. But for any change, whether it is a slight one or a big one, in a constitution, I am always cautious about making that change, including a legislature apportionment. My position has always been the same. In a constitution you must be conservative. You must not make changes, because what you have is a document that protects the rights of minorities against the majority and you mustn't tinker with it. You must leave it alone as much as possible. You only make a change when you feel there is a necessity, when you feel you have an answer to that need. In other words, there is a big burden of proof in making any change in the constitution.

In this case, with respect to the judiciary, I don't see that the committee has carried the burden of proof. They have failed to show, first, that there is a need for change, and second, if there is a need for change this is the solution to the problem. A conservative view of this problem would say that it looks like there is a need for change, and when we can find one that we know is good we will make it, and before we know that it is good we will leave it alone.

Mr. Prettie has inferred that he reached this particular proposal on the basis of the process of elimination. He eliminated all the other proposals, and there was nothing left over except this one. It seems to me that that is a rather backwards way to come up with a new constitution. When you do it that way, you are not sure you really have eliminated everything there is, and you are not sure, even, you shouldn't eliminate this one. You have a sort of elimination type plan. I suggest that if we continue to examine this proposal we will eliminate it, too, and when we do we will be in a position of going through all the other plans that have been thought about, considering every one of them separately, and then if we find one of them is good we will adopt it, and if we find another one that is good, it seems to me the logical thing is to leave it alone.

Mr. Chairman, that is my basic position. We have not seen anyone carry the burden of proof on this plan, and if there is a need for a plan we haven't seen that this is the right one and, that being the case, it should be rejected.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand, some time ago you rose. Did you seek recognition independently of your point of order?

MR. LEIBRAND: Yes, I did, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize you.

MR. LEIBRAND: Might I inquire before I start, of the Chair, what we are discussing?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question before the committee is the minority report amendment offered by Mr. Ford and others to strike out section g of Committee Proposal 91. Section g is the section of the proposal which provides for the method of election of justices for the supreme court.

MR. LEIBRAND: That is what I thought, but I was somewhat misled by the other speakers.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair would state, Judge Leibrand, that he was reluctant to interrupt any of the speakers in midstream. The Chair would certainly agree with your point that it would be wise for all the speakers to attempt to confine themselves, as near as possible, to the question before the committee.

MR. LEIBRAND: May I recall to the Chair that I tried it once and it didn't work?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair ruled at that time, and he thinks properly, Judge Leibrand, that Mrs. Judd was addressing herself to the point. The Chair will try to keep everybody on it as much as possible.

MR. LEIBRAND: Well, I will keep on it, and I will start, that is, on the minority report amendment, and I will start by pointing out to the delegates that what we are considering here is an amendment that would, in effect, keep the present system of partisan nomination of supreme court judges and appellate court judges, if we have them; nomination in party conventions and elections as nonpartisan at large. I am opposed to the minority report, or amendment, whatever it is called.

Now a number of lawyers and some laymen have taken the floor and theorized and speculated on what effect this party nomination and nonpartisan election has upon a judge. I don't know, and I don't think they know, but I am going to call a witness who does know, the Honorable Eugene Black, who in 1955 or '56 received a nomination for the supreme court from the Democratic convention, and who 8 years from then, 1963 or '64, is going to have to be going back to that convention, hat in hand, for a second nomination. My good friend, Harold Bledsoe, recalls that when Judge Black was before the committee he, Delegate Bledsoe, asked Justice Black, in effect, whether or not Justice Black felt that the system corrupted or made corrupt the justices of the supreme court, and Justice Black, naturally enough, answered no, that he din't think that, and neither does Delegate Bledsoe, and neither do I. But I have in my hand a transcript of a statement that Justice Black gave before the committee on judicial branch, which tells in plain, unvarnished terms what he does think of this monstrosity of a system that would be reinstated by the adoption of the minority report amendment. Mr. Justice Black said — I don't have the date, but the committee records will have that—

> No one believes under this impossible system of open partisan nomination followed by the pretentious fakery of a nonpartisan election that the pressure of party politics has ever or could be fully eliminated from our minds and consciences. When men look forward to continued nomination and election, and actually owe the very perpetuation of their tenure to the pleasure of a partisan group, we ask too much of them to expect total judicial independence.

And get this. Says Mr. Justice Black,

> The people have a right to expect of a supreme court justice no less than that kind of independence Marshall called for 130 years ago, limited solely by God and his conscience.
> I know that 1 or 2 members of our court protest vehemently that party politics are eliminated from supreme court souls and deliberations, as thoroughly as if each of us had been cleansed in the Jordan 2,000 years ago. You may take your pick of these conflicting viewpoints, but you will have no doubt about this: whoever is right, the political appearance or partisan posture of the court before the public is as damaging as the fact thereof. There is no use trying to deodorize by talk or double talk the impression the public is beginning to inexorably have of our partisan nominated courts. That can only be done by constitutional action, because, as we know from 20 years of experience, the legislature will not act.
> You may gather from all this that I don't want supreme court justices picked either in the Detroit athletic club or solidarity house. I suggest that they should be picked in the open, by open personal primaries and open personal elections, just as it worked so well for 2 decades with the circuit and probate benches in all outstate Michigan.

Now, I have a thesis, Mr. Chairman and delegates, that I intend to carry all through this convention, and that is: the best government is the government that is closest to the people. The district system will produce that. The minority report amendment will bring us back to the hodgepodge of political confusion so aptly and well described by Mr. Justice Black. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ann Arbor, Dr. Pollock.

MR. POLLOCK: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I presume it is still in order for a nonlawyer to make a few observations.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: You are quite in order, Dr. Pollock.

MR. POLLOCK: And also that the purpose of the committee of the whole is to promote brief and informal discussion.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: That had been the Chair's thought.

MR. POLLOCK: Thank you. I merely want to discuss the present parliamentary situation, in the course of which I will very briefly state my own opinion. I favor the adoption, for the moment, of the minority report amendment, because I think that the arguments—and I wish to associate myself with the able arguments made, among others, by Delegate Everett, Delegate Ostrow, Delegate Judd, Delegate Nord. Those arguments, it seems to me, have demolished the proposal of the so called majority of the committee. I think the proposal, the majority proposal of the committee, is an utterly defective plan for the reasons which have been so adequately presented to this committee. I also, however, wish to say that I am not at all satisfied with the present plan provided in the present constitution. But since this committee of all lawyers, with one very long suffering pharmacist, was unable to come up with an agreed plan, I see nothing else for the convention to do but to defeat the proposal of the so called majority, leaving for the time being the situation the committee was originally faced with, namely, our present plan, and then the convention will have to do the job which the committee was unable to do, which we can then do by adopting one of the remaining plans which I believe are provided for in amendments.

Therefore, the parliamentary situation putting me in this position, I shall certainly now support the minority amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Hart, Judge Pugsley.

MR. PUGSLEY: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I think it is well known to the delegates here that I have had something to do with the introduction of this plan which has been so much discussed. We have been asked why we favor this plan. What are its merits? I think we start out with the premise that the great rank and file of the voters throughout the state of Michigan are not satisfied with the present plan. I think we also recognize the fact that the people of the state of Michigan wish to continue not only in the executive and in the administrative, but also in the judicial branch of our government, the privilege of selecting those who are to occupy positions of great responsibility and authority.

I think I can agree with most of the speakers who have spoken here today upon the theme that what we are most interested in, regardless of where we live and regardless of our politics, is by what method can we select the most competent, the most efficient, the most honest individuals to represent us in every spot and place in our government, the judiciary included.

As all of you know, I come here from one of the rural areas, from the sticks, so to speak. It has been my pleasure and my privilege to be a member of the judiciary on the lower level, in the circuit court, for 30 years. My circuit has not been one of the smallest, neither has it been one of the largest circuits of the state. There has been some time during my incumbency which I have had to spend in other districts, in other circuits throughout the state, both in the lower and the upper peninsulas; in the city of Detroit, if you please, for many, many days. I have enjoyed this work. I have enjoyed this experience. It has also been my privilege and my opportunity to serve on the bench in every one of these districts that are mentioned in the plan which has been submitted here, and I am here to say to you, fellow delegates, that without exception there is in every one of those districts today men in the legal profession eminently qualified to fill the position of a justice of the supreme court. Several of them have done so in many of these districts in the past. Some of them, unfortunately, have gone down to defeat when the time came for them to be renominated and elected; a loss which was suffered to the state of Michigan, I think, through their defeat. I do not wish to indulge in personalities, but I do wish to emphasize that I believe that the state of Michigan has a wealth of material in the lawyers in the state of Michigan in all parts of the state who would grace with dignity and efficiency the position of justice of the supreme court.

Now, one of the reasons why I have advocated this plan is because I have seen many elections of justices of the supreme court, and I know that the voters who have gone to the polls have, in many instances, if not most of the time, voted with ignorance as to the qualifications of the justices for whom their votes were rendered. And it has been the thinking of those of us who propose this plan that if the justices who were proposed to be elected came from an area nearer to the residence of these particular individuals, they would be much better acquainted with the public and, as a result of that, we prophesy that a much greater interest will be taken in the selection of the representatives of the people from those particular areas.

I mention these things. I have been slow to rise and have anything to say in this argument, and I do so at this time because I know there are among my friends in the delegates at this convention those who are wondering, perhaps, whether I had changed my mind. Emphatically I have not. To me this offers an opportunity for the people of the state of Michigan to express themselves more intelligently at the polls than they had heretofore been able to. It is with that thought in mind that the judiciary will be kept nearer to the people whom it seeks to serve through this plan than any other that has been suggested.

It has been a pleasure, my friends, during my incumbency as a member of the bench to serve in various parts of the state, and it has also been my pleasure to note the interest that is taken by these judges, by the public, in the courts throughout the state.

Now, to come to the point, the question before us is this: shall we support this amendment or shall we turn it down? I believe, my friends, that we should turn down this amendment, and if it later appears that there is presented to this convention a better plan than this district plan, let us consider it then, but until we do have something better before us, let's turn down this amendment. I hope you will agree with me in voting against it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Bad Axe, Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I think the question that we have before us here today is do we want the people to know who they are voting for and their background, and the right to elect their choice.

We have had some conversation here about this being a lawyers' matter. There are 7,710 lawyers in Michigan, according to the journal, and approximately 8,000,000 people. As I have told you before, I am not here as a lawyer; I am here representing my people back home, and I think what we are concerned with is the people, not the lawyers. The lawyers can take care of themselves. But the people of Michigan can not intelligently vote today on the candidates for the supreme court because they come from widely scattered areas. In fact, the last 2 who were elected or appointed were 1 from Flint and 1 from Sault Ste. Marie. How many people throughout the state know anything about the background or experience of these men?

We have talked here about political pressure. Political pressure does not appear in court decisions, but to those of the lawyers here, we have had many decisions 5 to 3; 3 of one political faith on the one side and 5 of another political faith on the other side.

Mr. Lawrence has asked, is the elective system the best method of selecting judges on a district basis? Any time the people in these districts throughout Michigan select a man, he will undoubtedly be the best qualified in that area. The people in these areas know these individuals intimately, they know their background, except possibly in the city of Detroit. And I want to say that I don't believe that the people in the Wayne county area will have any difficulty in becoming acquainted with their candidates if they are men like Norris, Nord, Ford and Ostrow. I am sure that they will see that the people are well acquainted with them and have an opportunity to determine whether they should be the candidate for the supreme court. I think even Mrs. Judd, who doesn't know her neighbor next door, will be sure to get around the area, if she can be a candidate for the supreme court, and that they will know her and all about her before the campaign is over. So I don't think we have too much to fear if we elect these people by districts, because the people will have an opportunity to become acquainted with those folks who are candidates for public office.

I believe the subject has been pretty well covered here, but I do believe that we are interested in the people of Michigan, as individuals, and if we believe that they have the intelligence to now what is best for them, that we should defeat the minority amendment and get the courts closer to those who the courts serve.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ann Arbor, Mr. Bonisteel.

MR. BONISTEEL: Mr. Chairman and fellow members of the committee, for many of the reasons given by Delegates Everett, Lawrence and Judd, and others who have followed, I am voting for the minority report amendment. Because I believe that there are better plans for the selection of judges that will be presented to this committee, and at that time I may desire to speak at greater length on one or more of those plans. But I am voting for the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Lansing, Mr. Wanger.

MR. WANGER: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, before lunch Delegate Ostrow — I see he is not here now, I am sorry to say — said something which disturbs me very much. As you know, I am a bachelor, and he said that you could be going around with a girl for years, but you couldn't tell what kind of a wife she would make until you married her. Well, I would like to say to Delegate Ostrow that that is no excuse for not trying; for not trying to get a plan which has the best chance of getting judges for Michigan, the kind of judges to which the people are entitled.

Now, Professor Joiner, in the con con research study 9, with which we are all familiar, stated,

> Two special qualifications distinguish competent judges from other state officials. One, reasonable legal ability, and, two, independence of thought and action.

Now I know we all agree with the problem of having a judge with reasonable legal ability, but I would like to dwell just briefly on the subject of what we mean by "independence of thought and action," and not in my words but in the words of our chief justice, John Dethmers, when last November he stated publicly as follows:

> Now, one judge appearing recently before the judicial committee of the constitutional convention said we should keep our present system because then it is possible for the people to change the membership on a court and change its philosophy, so that they can get the philosophy that the majority wants at the moment.
> To that I would like to respond that justices of the supreme court would do well to put most of the philosophy books back on the shelves and take down a few more of the law books and decide cases according to the law rather than philosophy.
> In the other 2 branches of the government, the executive and the legislative, officials should be representing the views and wishes of the majority of the people at the moment, but the judicial office is entirely different. We have constitutional guarantee, a bill of rights to protect the rights of individuals and of minorities, against the power and will of the majority.
> Now, how do these constitutional guarantees become effective? Just one way — through the decisions of supreme courts.
> And so time and again, when a constitutional right of an individual or a small minority, or any minority, comes up before the court, the court in upholding such a right has to defy or go against the will of the majority. That is their constitutional duty. So the partisan or political views of a judge are not those that are calculated to qualify him for performing that important function, but rather his legal skill, his devotion to the constitution and his understanding of law and its application.

Now, I do not come here to speak in favor of the pure appointment system for supreme court judges, and I realize, as did John Dethmers and the rest of us, that any human system is going to have some defects, and the elective system of choosing judges has some defects in it because you can't have your cake and eat it, too. Two important defects in the elective process are, first, that it forces an incumbent judge to run against political opportunists, and frankly we know that that makes the incumbent judge subject to the political pressure of the hustings of the stump and of political pressure groups who will seek to support or defeat him in the elective process, and, secondly, we also know that another defect of the elective system in choosing or retaining judges is that the people, unfortunately, do not know the legal qualifications of a candidate, especially before he has served a term upon the bench.

Appearing before the constitutional convention judiciary committee was the director of the American judicature society, who stated as follows: "There have been elections when the voters of Wayne county had the job of choosing among literally hundreds of candidates for the 18 circuit judgeships. Even if—"

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Wanger, the Chair is very reluctant to interrupt, but will ask you please to confine yourself more closely to the amendment currently before the house.

MR. WANGER: The amendment currently before the house is whether or not we should scrap the elective process proposed in the district plan and go along with the amendment which is to make no reference, whatsoever, to the specific type of plan for electing judges. Presumably some other plan than we have now or the status quo. My point is, quite simply and directly, that there are defects in the elective system, and, secondly, that under the district plan those evils are intensified rather than alleviated. It seems to me I am expressly on the point.

Now the basic question here which Mr. Winters presented was that even if the number of candidates were within reason, a fair choice among them involves knowledge of their acquaintance with the law and how they handle themselves in court matters that only another lawyer or judge can evaluate, and other things that can be found out only by an investigation that no voter is going to make.

How does the district plan help the situation? Well, it gives us one advantage. The one advantage that the district plan gives us is that it makes it easier for more lawyers to run to be a judge on the supreme court. However, it seems to me that its disadvantages are, first of all, that it intensifies the evil of having an incumbent judge having to run against a political opportunist. We talk about the danger of having a candidate today with money run on a statewide basis. That same candidate with the same amount of money would be twice as powerful financially, or, rather, 7 times as powerful financially under the district plan. Secondly, on a district basis, where the average population is just under 900,000 people for all of the districts except, of course, the one of Wayne, it would make it very difficult, indeed, for the people to go out and find out the qualifications of any of the judges or the candidates even in the district. Third, the district plan would deny to Michigan men of the highest caliber for the bench for the very simple reason that the best candidate available from one district may often be less well qualified than the second best available in any or every other district. Fourth, as has been pointed out, this district plan provides an opportunity for sectional pressures upon the supreme court bench, although the word "balkanization" perhaps over emphasizes this point. Fifth, because of the district, and the way the plan is set up, it presents the legislature with the problem of reapportioning and gerrymandering in the future, which they have a difficult time enough with at the present. And, sixth, it assumes that the lawyer population of the state will remain constant with the rest of the population, something which we have absolutely no guarantee of at all.

Therefore, it seems to me that the district system gives very little in return for the evils which it presents and that we should vote in favor of the minority report amendment, hoping to find a better plan in the future, but realizing that even the minority report amendment would place the state in a better position than does the district plan of the committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the honorary barrister from Allegan, Mr. Farnsworth.

MR. FARNSWORTH: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, members of the committee. So that I will not be called out of order, Mr. Chairman, I am going to address my remarks to this one problem of a single "g", because that is what we are discussing at the moment. I am going to speak in favor of the committee report and against the adoption of the minority report amendment.

Now, this matter of g's: the latest national hero last week, I believe, was blasted off from Florida. Newspaper reports indicated that he absorbed 8 g's. Out of that he got 81,000 miles, went into orbit and 3 times around the earth. I submit that this constitutional convention today is getting more mileage per g than did Colonel Glenn.

Everything has been said, possibly, that could be said about the proposal. We have heard about districts and lines and people and Democrats and Republicans and split decisions, but it seems that everyone has overlooked the important fact, the very important fact to me—and this speech is going to be short—that 7 lawyers on a committee got together on a single proposition, and all agreed that it was good. I submit to you that that is the first time in the history of this convention that 7 lawyers have agreed on any 1 point. I further submit to you that that was 35 per cent of the lawyers on that particular committee. At any time, ladies and gentlemen, we can get 7 of these people together, or 35 per cent of them, that is good enough for me. Let's turn down the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: For the benefit of our visitors, the question before the committee of the whole is section g of Committee Proposal 91. The Chair will read to the committee a communication which has been received from an anonymous author, "I wish to move that we cause the bell to ring every 5 minutes, so that anyone speaking will know how he monopolizes the time and will wake us all up."

At this point the Chair will recognize the delegate from Detroit, Mr. T. S. Brown. Mr. Brown passes. Mr. Habermehl.

MR. HABERMEHL: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak briefly in support of the committee report and against the amendment offered by the minority.

It would seem to me here we may be a little misled by the worry about politics in a particular judge. I am afraid if we seek the judicial candidate that has no politics, no political views, we wouldn't have a very good candidate for anything. It is not a judge who has no political views or politics that we seek here. It is a judge who will judge cases on the basis of law, without worry or without pressure as to the political effect of his decisions.

The recent examples before us indicate, I think, that political consideration may cause a judge to adopt certain views. I think what causes a great deal of difficulty among lawyers and among laymen, is how we go about judging the qualifications of a candidate for judicial office. I don't believe that he need be the outstanding legal light of the state or of the nation, but I believe that a couple of requirements, a couple of qualifications are essential. I think, first of all, he must consider any litigant or any person that comes before him primarily as a citizen and as an individual, without any concern whatsoever, for that person's politics, that person's race, color, creed, or any other qualification or characteristic that that person might have. I think he must accept, too, a fundamental of our political system; that we are a government of laws and not of men. I don't believe that any judge can do what some judges have been accused of doing; of following the election returns, of trying to cater to the wishes of the majority at a particular time. I think that idea has been carried, as we have seen in our time in parts of the world, to the extreme that we have people's courts in China, we have people's courts in Cuba, where the only consideration the judge has is pleasing the majority of the people.

We are a government of laws. All cases must be judged in that manner. If a judge has those characteristics, I believe he will be a good judge. How can we best get such judges?

Certainly not under the present plan, which would appear to be what the minority seeks to achieve here. The present plan, as has been pointed out, is largely an appointive system and not an elective system at all. The appointment, whether in the state or on the federal level, is made by the chief executive officer of the state. I think it has been pointed out to us here that the executive officer of the state is a politican. He not only holds the office of chief executive, he holds the position as head of his party, and I think it is a complete and human impossibility to expect any such person to consider or to fail to consider the political effect that any appointment that he might make would have on his own individual affairs, his own individual chances of being elected, or upon his party's chances of retaining power. I think that is inherent in the makeup of any chief executive.

If we consider the elective aspect of the present plan, we have these candidates running on a statewide basis, nominated by political parties and running on a nonpartisan ballot. I submit to you here that such a candidate cannot possibly avoid the matter of politics. In order to be elected in a state of approximately 8 million people, he must be a political figure. He must have had some publicity of a political nature or he must have attracted the support of political organizations. In doing so he incurs some obligations of a political nature.

I think in our own delegation here we have the best possible example of that. This may be embarrassing to some of the people that form a part of our delegation, but we have among us retired circuit judges who have a statewide reputation for competence and ability as judges. I point out to you that at least several of these people have had ambitions of becoming candidates of the supreme court, and in several instances were, in fact, candidates. I would point out to you, too, that despite the recognized capability and competence, they never had a prayer of a chance of being elected to the supreme bench.

If, then, we have found candidates of proven judicial ability, somewhere in this system that we devise there ought to be opportunity to promote these individuals. Our present system simply does not do that. A competent and adequate judge is not a politician. He takes no particular interest or part in politics because, of course, of the canons of judicial ethics. He makes no political name for himself. If he were to try to run on a statewide basis he would find it impossible to attract the number of votes that would assure an election. Any system we provide here ought to provide a way of recognition of these judicial capabilities, and an opportunity to promote such an individual to a high judicial post.

Six former circuit judges serve with our delegation; 6 men of proven judicial capabilities, and I very much doubt that a single 1 of the 6, barring some political accident, would have had much opportunity for the promotion to the supreme court.

Obviously, then, we have a job of adopting a system, a plan, that would insure the promotion of such individuals. Certainly the minority plan could not do this. I believe the majority plan could, because each of these 6 men we have with us would have been the logical candidate for election from his district, and most likely could have succeeded in being promoted from his district to the highest court; something that at least several of them found impossible on a statewide basis.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Hodges.

MR. HODGES: Mr. Chairman, to the delight of the members of the majority party and to the relief of some of the members of the minority party, I haven't taken the floor in about 3 weeks. At this time I would just like to ask for a division.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hodges requests a division on the Ford minority amendment. Is the demand supported? It is supported.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Stevens.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, all I want to do is call to your attention, if there is any question about it, that this system is not an innovation. Back as far as I can remember it has been the practice and custom and tradition of the nominating conventions of the 2 parties to pay a great deal of attention to the place of residence of candidates whom they nominated. So we would be merely continuing a practice which the conventions have followed whether the election was to be partisan or nonpartisan. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Yeager.

MR. YEAGER: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I want to bring up just 2 points. One, questions coming before the supreme court are not district questions but statewide questions for decision; and 2, we are providing for a court of appeals later on in the judicial section on a district basis, and this should answer the need for district representation at the higher court level. I therefore urge the adoption of the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hatch.

MR. HATCH: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to Mr. Prettie, if I may.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. HATCH: Concerning page 3 of the district proposal, starting on line 14, which has to do with the reapportionment every 10 years, Mr. Prettie, is my assumption correct that under the district plan Wayne county would at all times be entitled to 3 justices?

MR. PRETTIE: That is the basis of the plan, Mr. Hatch. It seems to be the key county upon which the apportioning of population for the other areas must necessarily depend.

MR. HATCH: I notice, also, that the other districts may not have more than ½ of the population of Wayne county.

MR. PRETTIE: The plan so provides.

MR. HATCH: Does this mean that if a given county has more than ½ of the population of Wayne county, then it would be entitled to 2 justices?

MR. PRETTIE: That, I think, would be within the discretion of the legislature in making the reapportionment should such situation ever arise, and I think if they had more than ½ of the population of Wayne county they should equitably, but in the judgment of the legislature, be entitled to additional membership on the court with a proportionment readjustment elsewhere. Which, perhaps, raises a further question that you have: what happens to the rest of the districts? Frankly, I hadn't thought that far.

MR. HATCH: I would merely like to comment on this aspect of it. It seems to me that the system provided here for reapportionment and freezing in 3 justices in Wayne county may have a short term advantage for the outstate area, but could conceivably, in the next 30 years, have an adverse effect for the outstate area. In other words, I think we all know that in Wayne county, in proportion to the rest of the state, the tendency is that its population, as compared to the rest of the state, is going down, and that conceivably in the next 30 years we might have 1 or 2 other counties which do have more than ½ the population of Wayne county. If this means that these counties must then have 2 justices, this would be 3 in Wayne, 2 in another county, 2 in another county — there are 7 justices. Does that mean, then, that the other 2 justices would be divided between the remainder of the state?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Do you direct your question to Mr. Prettie, or is your question rhetorical?

MR. HATCH: Rhetorical.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is rhetorical. Mr. Gust.

MR. GUST: I come here to praise nothing that is now before us, and I'm going to be brief. I reached this conclusion by way of logistic syllogism: 1, I will have to vote with Delegates Ford and Nord; 2, this makes me feel very uncomfortable; 3, a fortiori, something must be amiss. There is no good place to go at present. I agree with Dr. Nord that the present system is not a great solution. I disagree with him that there is no good solution, and I am forced to do so until and unless I can see the remainder of these plans that I know will be ultimately presented before the convention. And so, ladies and gentlemen, let's get on with the business at hand and vote with brothers Ford and Nord; get rid of both of these plans and get on to a plan we can accept. Mr. Chairman, I would like to move the previous question.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Ford and others to strike section g of Committee Proposal 91. Those in favor of the amendment will vote aye, those opposed to the amendment will vote no. The question, for any late arrivals, is on the Ford amendment to strike section g, on which those who are in favor will vote aye, and those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and total the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Ford and others, the yeas are 69 and the nays are 58.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The minority report amendment is adopted. The secretary will read the next amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Kuhn offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, following line 24, by inserting section g, to read as follows:

"Sec. g. The supreme court shall consist of 9 justices. They shall be elected for 8 year terms, and not more than 3 justices shall go out of office at the same time.

Justices shall be nominated and elected at nonpartisan elections, conducted as provided by law. The legislature may provide for nomination and election by districts. Incumbent justices may secure their nomination by filing an affidavit of intention to run as shall be provided by law.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment the Chair recognizes its mover, Mr. Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman, I wish to withdraw that amendment at this time, and yield to Mr. Lawrence.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Kuhn withdraws his amendment, and without objection it will be withdrawn. The secretary advises that Mr. Kuhn has the absolute right to withdraw his amendment. It is withdrawn. The secretary will read the next amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The next amendment on file is by Messrs. Lawrence, Tubbs and Mrs. Judd:

1. Amend page 2, following line 24, by inserting section g, to read as follows:

"Sec. g. For all courts of record for which a judicial nominating commission is provided, a vacancy in the office of justice or judge shall be filled by the governor from a list of 3 nominees presented to him by a judicial nominating commission. If the governor should fail to make an appointment from the list within 60 days from the day it is presented to him, the appointment shall be made by the chief justice or the acting chief justice from the same list.

At the next general election following the expiration of 3 years from the date of appointment, and every 10 years thereafter so long as he retains his office, every justice and judge so appointed shall be subject to approval or rejection by the electorate. In the case of a justice of the supreme court and of a judge of the court of appeals the electorate of the entire state shall vote on the question of approval or rejection. In the case of a judge of the circuit court or of the probate court the electorate of the county or circuit in which the court to which he was appointed is located shall vote on the question of approval or rejection.

There shall be a judicial nominating commission for the supreme court and the court of appeals. There shall be a judicial nominating commission for each circuit court and each probate court, in each county or circuit which has by a referendum vote of the electors therein authorized the creation of such a judicial nominating commission. Each judicial nominating commission shall consist of 7 members, one of whom shall be the chief justice of the state, who shall act as chairman. The members of the bar of the state residing in the geographical area for which the court sits shall elect 3 of their number to serve as members of said commission, and the governor shall appoint 3 citizens, not admitted to practice law before the courts of the state, from among the residents of the geographical area for which the court sits. The terms of office and compensation for members of a judicial nominating commission shall be fixed by the legislature, provided that not more than 1/3 of a commission shall be elected in any 3 year period. No member of a judicial nominating commission shall hold any other public office or office in a political party or organization and he shall not be eligible for appointment to a state judicial office so long as he is a member of a judicial nominating commission and for a period of 5 years thereafter.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Lawrence, Tubbs and Mrs. Judd, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, due to a gross failure in communications, I believe, I still do not have a stand in front of my microphone.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair would suggest, Mr. Lawrence—

MR. LAWRENCE: I just wanted to say I will appreciate it if you will be kind enough, if I go back and forth.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will point out to you, Mr. Lawrence, that Mr. Spitler has offered you the use of his microphone which does have the equipment which you desire.

MR. LAWRENCE: I appreciate that. I just feel at home here by my friend, Judge Leibrand.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman will proceed.

MR. LAWRENCE: This is the American bar association plan for selection of the judiciary. It is also known as the Missouri plan. I would like to go into it in some detail with you, assuming that everybody by this time is not a fully qualified attorney. The plan, although it is called the Missouri plan, actually was first used in California, and is now used for the selection of the judges of the supreme court and the appellate courts in that state. Because of a situation that existed in Missouri due to the Prendergast machine, it received additional adoption there because not only was it put into effect in the supreme court of Missouri, but also in the trial courts or the equivalent of the circuit courts in St. Louis and Kansas City. And I might add at this time that, in spite of 2 attempts to have a change of that in the Missouri constitution, both times those attempts were defeated, and the plan is in operation in those states.

The other day we caused to be placed on your desks the proposed amendment attached to which are the reasons. I would first like to go into the situation regarding the election system. As I assume you all know by now, we have only had the elective system in the United States for a little over 100 years. It was not until Patrick Henry came forth with the idea that everybody should be elected to everything that the elective system went into effect. Originally, in the 13 colonies, although they fought the revolution, although they were for a system such as we have in our country at large, judges initially were appointed, and in some of those original 13 states the appointive system is in effect. In other words, just because we elect throughout the country our executive and legislative officers, do not make the mistake in thinking that throughout the country, throughout the United States, the elective system in the judicial system is universal.

As a matter of fact, and I think this is of some importance, the last 3 constitutions adopted do not provide for an elective system, and I refer to Alaska, Hawaii and the one recently adopted by Puerto Rico. Not all of them have adopted the ABA plan. Many of the states still appoint through the system of appointment with advice and consent. The other day, however, Mr. Ostrow showed you a slip of paper on which the New York system was written out, and which, as he pointed out, I think contained more than we hope our entire constitution will contain. I do have in my hand, however, so that you can see the size of it, the provision as to the judicial system in Alaska, which adopted the American bar association plan. It is very brief, it is very concise and very clear, and if any of you would be interested in reading it, while I don't have any extra copies, you would be welcome to this one.

As was pointed out in the reasons, on the first page, there are a number of states using the appointive system in one form or another. Alabama at the present time has put this plan in effect in Birmingham, its largest city, or the largest metropolitan court area. At the present time Iowa, Nebraska and Illinois are submitting certain aspects of this plan. Arizona, Colorado, Montana, Nevada, Minnesota, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin have drafted the plan for consideration and study. I believe I am entirely correct on this, that no state having an appointive plan for the judiciary is contemplating going to an elective system, and the reasons for this are simple. Only in the United States and in Russia, among the big governments of the civilized world, is there election of judges. The system of appointment has been found to be the proper system for the nature of the judicial office, because one of the things that we strive for in getting judges is to have them free from political influence and pressures. The objective we should strive for, of course, contrary to one of the statements that was made, is to have the initial selection a proper, good selection, and the best that can be obtained. If that is done, the emphasis on removal becomes less important, and I certainly do not agree it is necessary and it is the purpose of this plan, this ABA plan, that the initial selection will be the best to me.

This plan contemplates a judicial commission composed of 3 attorneys elected by the bar. If it is statewide, by the state bar, if it is in a circuit or a county, by the bar in that county. It contemplates the appointment of 3 laymen in the same area, the appointment to be made by the governor; and the seventh man being the chief justice of the supreme court of the state. This judicial commission serves without pay, and in the event of a vacancy it submits to the governor 3 — the names of 3 candidates. Within 60 days after the submission of those names the governor selects 1 from the 3. In the event he does not exercise that power, it then becomes the duty of the chief justice of the supreme court to make the appointment.

You will find, on the second page of the plan, that it is designed primarily for the supreme court, but it is made optional in the lower courts, that is, the circuit court, the probate court, for instance, if adopted by the county or by the circuit to be affected; and since one of our major problems is the situation in Wayne county, it is entirely conceivable that — the same as in Missouri, where only St. Louis and Kansas City have found it advisable or necessary to adopt the plan — it could be adopted in Wayne county, and in Wayne county alone, until the need for the plan arises in other counties.

In the July or in the January, 1962, issue of the Journal of the American Judicature Society it refers to an international conference — it actually was — that was held in Chicago, at which the matter of selection of judges was gone into in some detail. I would like to read to you the statement from page 9 of the consensus of the opinion. Now you understand there were people from all of the 50 states, from Canada, from Mexico and from England present.

> The objective of any method of selection should be to obtain judges free of political bias and possessed of qualities that would lead to the highest performance of their judicial duties. It is indispensable to the proper functioning of the judicial system that men who are to be elevated to the bench be selected solely on merit, on the basis of their qualifications for judicial office.
> In the process of their selection, as well as in their work and tenure, they must be free of all collateral influence and partisan political pressures.

Each of the panelists examined the method of selection in use in the various states. Some conferees from states having an appointive system reported that with an enlightened and cooperative governor the appointment of judges of consistently high quality has resulted. This method has the merit of focusing direct responsibility upon the appointing authorities. Even under elective systems most judges have been appointed initially, because in those states the governor has the power to fill the vacancies by appointment.

Criticism was directed mainly at the partisan elective system, and particularly with reference to the metropolitan centers where its defects appear in their most aggravated form. Although the nonpartisan elective system lessens party dominance in the selection of judges, it is not a method to be recommended for securing the best qualified men. The nonpartisan system dissipates the responsibility. Furthermore, it does not prevent interim appointments on a partisan basis. A judge so appointed may be difficult to remove even though unqualified.

The American bar association's plan affords the means of avoiding the weaknesses in other existing methods, while retaining their desirable features. It provides for the filling of judicial vacancies by appointment by the governor from nominations submitted by a nonpartisan commission composed of lawyers, judges and laymen. Tenure of judges so appointed is subject only to vote of the people at a noncompetitive election. This relieves the judge from the necessity of campaigning for office against opposing candidates, but still requires him to answer to the electorate. These 2 distinctive features tend to assure selection and retention of the best qualified judges. In the plan that is submitted here, at the end of the term of the judge, the judge would run at a nonpartisan election solely on this question, which would be very simple for the people to answer, "Shall Judge Blank be retained or shall he not be retained?"

I think the results that we have had in Michigan regarding the ABA plan are particularly significant. I have been unable to lay my hand on the one paper I wished, but at the annual bar association meetings, whenever the ABA plan has been brought for vote to the membership it has been defeated. At our annual conference there are at the most about 500 attorneys present, and it is very easy for organized groups to control the action at the annual conventions. But on 2 occasions the state bar has been polled at secret elections, their ballots are secret. The first of these was in 1953, and somewhere in that pile of papers on my desk is the results of that poll. My recollection is that it was 2407 in favor of the ABA plan and 2057 in favor of the present system.

On December 20, 1961, in an effort to cooperate with the constitutional convention, another poll was taken of the members of the bar in Michigan. In this poll the Missouri plan, the ABA plan, was preferred by 2,577 attorneys, as against 1,795 in favor of the present plan, and 531 for lifetime appointment by the governor with advice and consent of the senate. In other words, the ABA plan was preferred by more of the attorneys than the other 2 plans together.

In spite of the fact that the results of that poll were made known to the committee in this case, it gave no consideration to this plan. Quite recently a letter was received from the president of the Detroit bar association, was sent to Delegate Prettie. The letter was dated February 15, 1962. In this vote that was taken by the state bar, the ballots that were sent to Wayne, Oakland and Macomb counties were of a different color than those throughout the state. So it was possible to determine what the vote in the metropolitan area was. It is interesting to note — and, incidentally, the Detroit bar is the largest bar by far in the state — I noticed that, for instance, it must compose at least ½ of the bar, and perhaps more. The metropolitan area vote was as follows: appointment by the governor under ABA or Missouri plan, 1,731 against 1,056 to retain the present system and 354 for lifetime appointment by the governor with advice and consent of the senate.

Again among the attorneys who should know the situation as it exists in the courts, the majority were for the American bar association plan over the 2 others combined, and in the — as it applied to the circuit court, the vote in the metropolitan area was 1,592 over 1,397 and 110 for those 3 plans. Now, it shows that the attorneys, when they are called upon to vote in a manner that is consistent with our American experience, in other words, in a secret ballot, and in the area that is most vitally concerned, namely, in the southeastern portion of the state and the metropolitan area, not only did they favor this plan for the supreme court, but also for their lower courts.

Now, I believe that that concludes the presentation I wish to make. You have the material that was distributed. You have not only that for but against, and if we are to take in this convention a forward step to correct not only the present system with its defects — which, after all, you know has the worse features of both the appointive and elective systems — you have heard expressions that our system is the best, but, after all, we have under the present system an appointment made by the governor without any responsibility to anybody; no advice and consent. He doesn't have to explain the appointment; he can use it for any purposes he pleases. That is why in the appointment system it is one of the bad features, and in the elective system we now have that where the candidates go to the polls, and one of them, even though he may only have recently been appointed by the governor, is entitled to the incumbency label, which, as one of the witnesses before the committee stated, in his opinion, one of the judges, it was worth 25 per cent of the votes.

We ask that this committee seriously study, consider and discuss the merits of this plan.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Messrs. Lawrence, Tubbs and Mrs. Judd, do the other cosponsors of the amendment seek recognition? Mr. Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. Chairman, I just want to second everything that Mr. Lawrence has said, and add that if you are looking for an ideal plan for a constitution for the selection of judges, this is it. Nobody in the country has ever adopted or come up with any plan that approaches it so far as assuring the independence of the judiciary is concerned, and it seems to me that should be our principal concern. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mrs. Judd, do you seek recognition on your amendment?

MRS. JUDD: Only to say, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, that in backing this proposition I feel that I am representing my fellow laymen throughout the state. There are others besides lawyers who are concerned with this matter. As you know, the Michigan league of women voters appeared before the judiciary committee and made a strong appeal for this type of system. The committee for a sound constitution has also come out for a similar plan, and my own Republican party in the county of Kent, in its discussions and in the polls that it took last summer, also favored an appointive plan.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Lawrence and others, the Chair will recognize Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, I would request that the matter in front of us be divided, as it presents a manner of selecting both supreme court justices and a permissive manner of selecting circuit and probate judges. Really it can be divided, and seems to me should be.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if this might make any difference? Mr. Everett, there are 3 amendments in together. The first one is the one you refer to. The second one limits the plan to the supreme court and the appellate court, and the third to the supreme court alone.

MR. EVERETT: Well, it appears to me, Mr. Chairman, that it should be divided for this reason: the first plan simply allows a county or circuit by referendum of the people to select this plan. Now, the county from which I come, I don't think they would select it, but I see no harm in the constitution giving the people that right, and I wouldn't bother that right. In fact, I would be willing to vote that it be in the constitution so that if some day the people want that system they can have it. But this is an entirely separate question from the mandatory provisions that the supreme court and the court of appeals must be selected this way.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett, if you persist in your request the question will be divided. The secretary advises the Chair it would be somewhat easier to proceed in the order suggested by Mr. Lawrence, but the decision is in your hands.

MR. EVERETT: If we are going to go from the third proposition forward I can see doing it that way, but if we are going to have to vote on the first, I don't see how I can vote upon it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett requests a division of the question, and when it is presented it will be divided. As the Chair understands it, Mr. Everett, you request it to be divided as to the supreme court, the intermediate appellate court and the inferior courts?

MR. EVERETT: I was only thinking in terms of dividing it beginning with the second sentence of the third paragraph on page 4. If it requires further division, somebody else would have to suggest that.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair's pagination is not identical to yours, Mr. Everett. Would you state the substance of what you seek to have divided?

MR. EVERETT: Yes. We were given a collection of the pending amendments to Committee Proposal 91. Page 4 of this collection is the amendment proposed by Messrs. Lawrence, Tubbs and Mrs. Judd, which includes reference to the circuit court, probate court, and while there is some reference to them in the earlier paragraph, this could be reinstated very easily, and it seems to me the division which I would like to see, at least, begins with the second sentence of the last paragraph of that page, starting "There shall be a judicial nominating commission for each circuit court", and so forth.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question will be so divided when it is presented, Mr. Everett. For what purpose does the gentleman rise, Mr. Yeager?

MR. YEAGER: Mr. Chairman, I request a division vote.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Yeager requests a division. Is the request supported? It is supported.

On the amendment offered by Messrs. Lawrence and Tubbs and Mrs. Judd, the Chair will recognize Mr. Norris. Mr. Norris not being present, the Chair will recognize Mr. Iverson.

MR. IVERSON: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I rise to oppose this proposed amendment, which proposes that Michigan adopt the form of the Missouri plan or the ABA plan for selection of justices of the Supreme Court of the state of Michigan. In the first place, the testimony of Mr. Glen Winters, executive secretary of the American judicature society, was presented before the committee on judicial branch of this convention, and he urged the adoption of some such plan most strongly. He pointed out that the American judicature society, for which he speaks, had been urging the adoption of this plan for almost 50 years. While it has received the appellation of the Missouri plan, it has actually been adopted for the trial courts in only 2 counties of that state. It was adopted there because of the corruption of the courts and their control by lawless elements in Missouri's largest cities.

No such situation has existed in Michigan. We hope it never will. Our nonpartisan method of selection of our judiciary has been firmly established as a part of our court structure ever since 1939. The principle of nonpartisan election has overwhelming support among the voters of this state. It negatives the need for the ABA or Missouri plan.

The cynicism of the proponents of the ABA plan is demonstrated in an article appearing in the December, 1944, Journal of the American Judicature Society, volume 28, page 108, wherein an article offered by Glen Winters states:

> Once a good judge has been put on the bench he ought to be able to keep his seat indefinitely, until death, retirement or resignation. The vote on retention in office is intended and expected hardly ever to interfere with the operation of that rule. It remains to be proven whether the voters can exercise any better judgment on the issue of reelection than on the original election. There surely are few people who believe that very many voters will go to the polls with more information about the average judge than as if they had the job of selecting him in the first place.

Mr. Winters pointed out in his address before the Genesee county bar association, November 6, 1961, and in his testimony before the committee on judicial branch of this convention, that despite the efforts of his society to promote this plan, it has been accepted in full or in part in only 5 of the 50 states. In 1934, it was adopted as to appellate courts, and only as to certain features, in California. In 1940 it was adopted in Missouri as to appellate courts and as to trial courts only in 2 counties of the state where the corruption of the judiciary shocked the conscience of the public.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is a lot of talking. I don't know whether they want to hear me. If they don't, I would like to have them step out in the hall.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will be in order.

MR. IVERSON: In 1950 it was adopted only in part in Alabama. In 1958 it was adopted in Kansas as to the supreme court only. In 1958, in the new constitution of Alaska, it was adopted in the absence of any precedent such as we have in Michigan for nonpartisan election of the judiciary.

Mr. Winters asked and answered a question in the minds of most delegates in the following language:

> Some people have asked why, if the combination plan is so meritorious, it has not won wider acceptance during the half century the American judicature society and others have been promoting it. The answer is, in part, that it strikes at the heart of our system where changes will never come easily, and, in part, it takes an important segment of political patronage out of the hands of political organizations.

Very early in the deliberations of the committee on judicial branch the question was raised as to whether there was anything so sacrosanct about our courts that the voters of this state should be deprived of their franchise in selecting the judiciary. The same question was posed to Mr. Winters before our committee, and in his presentation on December 14, 1961, Mr. Winters had this to say:

> I suppose it is a natural inquiry to ask if there is safety in numbers, is there not the greatest safety in the greatest number, namely, the entire electorate of the state? Well, that does not follow at all, and it runs into conflict with the third principle which I offer for your consideration; that it is undemocratic to impose upon the democratic processes burdens it is not equipped to bear. There are things the voters have a fair chance of passing judgment on, and these should be left to them. There are many more as to which they do not have adequate opportunity to form an intelligent judgment, and these a well planned governmental system puts in the hands of smaller groups or individuals who, in turn, are responsible to the people for the way they exercise that delegated power.
> Although others of the witnesses you have heard would disagree, I suggest to you that the determination of the qualifications of a candidate for judicial office is in the latter group.

These statements indicate the continued attitude of the American judicature society toward the intelligence of the voters. But despite this fact, we must keep in mind the very heart of the ABA plan is that after nomination by a blue ribbon commission, and appointment by the governor, the voters are then called upon to determine whether a judge shall be continued in office on the basis of his record.

I agree with Mr. Winters that if the voters cannot intelligently choose the man who shall judge them in the first place, they are certainly not better equipped to pass upon their records after they have been upon the bench. But I submit that under a nonpartisan system the voters can and do act intelligently. I submit, further, that the whole argument for this plan falls when one considers that the state is fortunately possessed of a huge reservoir of retired judicial manpower available to fill vacancies on our courts as they occur until the next general and nonpartisan election. Such persons under the plan submitted in the majority report would be ineligible to run for election for the unexpired term, and thus the people are left free to select competent judges to fill vacancies, and must retain this basic right of free citizens, in a free society, to a freely elected judiciary.

The committee on judicial branch was privileged to have before it the testimony of several members of the supreme court of this state. Of those who so appeared, only Justice Dethmers favored the adoption of the ABA or Missouri plan. Justice Edwards, then on the bench of our supreme court, in his prepared statement to the committee on November 1, 1961, made statements which I will not repeat, but which were stated to you this morning, and Justice Black, as early as May 24, 1961, presented to the members of the judicial selection and tenure committee his draft of a new judicial article. He made no provision for adoption of the ABA plan, but continued the principle of nonpartisan election. Later in July, 1961, he subscribed to the principle of a nonpartisan election on the district basis, and he has continued his support of this plan. Again earlier this morning his questions and answers were given to you by Mr. Prettie, and I will not repeat them. Justice Adams stated before our committee on January 17, and I don't recall that this was brought to your attention:

> With reference to the present system of nomination and election of judges, and particularly supreme court justices, I believe that the present system is the best of any now advocated. If the statewide primaries and their attendant expenses are to be avoided, some responsible group must carry out the nomination of the justices of the supreme court, and under the Missouri plan, or any possible modification thereof the group proposed, in my opinion, is far too restricted. On the other hand, the delegates of our 2 major political parties constitute a sufficient wide cross section of the electorate to assure the selection of reasonably good candidates, who then must submit themselves to the people for the final test.

He strongly advocated the election of judges and justices.

Justice Souris appeared also, and that testimony was repeated this morning, and I will not again repeat it.

Justice Kavanagh appeared before our committee on judicial branch November 2, 1961, and expressed his total lack of agreement with the Missouri ABA plan. He said:

> Advocates of the so called Missouri plan and other similar plans forget that this was the method of selecting judges both in England and on the continent of Europe for centuries. They have a system in Russia and Cuba today where a small clique selects the judges and influences their decisions. Russia provides in its constitution for the same freedoms and liberties we have here in the United States of America. The reason we enjoy those liberties and they do not is that we have a free judiciary, elected by the people and subject only to the people to preserve them and protect those rights and liberties.

He further said:

> How many know that Michigan, in establishing its judiciary, was one of the pioneers in leading the way that was eventually followed by all states of our nation in electing on party tickets the members of the judiciary. Most states followed shortly thereafter.

He also said:

> The Missouri plan includes only supreme court justices, 3 appellate courts, 2 circuits in the cities of Kansas City and St. Louis. Others, although having the option, have not seen fit to adopt it. Independence of the judiciary is not obtained under the Missouri plan. The select committee, being few in number, is easily subject to pressures from all sources, political and otherwise. Under it the commission of attorneys and laymen would name a list of judicial nominees, and the governor would pick from this sacred list. If the committee was composed of friends of the governor and knew whom the governor desired to appoint, quite naturally they would put that individual on the list. What happens if the governor refuses to appoint a man to the vacancy until such time as the list is changed to include someone he could in good conscience appoint to such a sacred trust? After the appointment, in place of being independent, the judge chosen would naturally be beholden to the members of the committee.
> In my opinion a good judge, a competent judge, a judge who is conscientious in carrying out the responsibilities of his office need not fear election by the people.

The state of Illinois has for many years elected justices of its supreme court by districts, and I will not again burden you with that because it was given to you this morning; the testimony given before our committee. It is further significant that the committee on court administration of the state bar of Michigan, in its 1961 report published in the Michigan State Bar Journal for September, 1961, at page 48, recommended:

> . . . that the present system of nominating and electing supreme court justices be retained; the same provisions to apply to judges of the intermediate court of appeals, if the latter court be established by a new constitution.

This committee was chaired by Circuit Judge Noel Fox, and included among its membership, Court Administrator Doyle, Justices Edwards, Kavanagh, Souris, along with many other circuit judges and eminent attorneys. No place in the report did they favor an adoption of the ABA plan. Our committee also had the benefit of the testimony of Judge Michael Carland, and I believe that was referred to this morning.

Other witnesses before the committee on judicial branch echoed the sentiments of the eminent witnesses I have quoted. But let us look to another source, the testimony of those who use our courts. As you all know, the state bar of Michigan, in its efforts to be of service to this committee on judicial branch of this convention, presented a questionnaire to its membership. With reference to circuit judges, the bar voted to retain the present Michigan system by a vote of 2461, and for the ABA plan, 2237. With reference to the supreme court justices, 1,795 favored the present Michigan method, 531 favored lifetime appointment by the governor, and 2,577 favored the ABA plan. In evaluating these results, however, it must be kept in mind that simultaneously, as was pointed out this morning, strong argument was independently sent to the members of the bar urging adoption or approval of the ABA plan.

With these facts before you, fellow delegates, I submit, 1, that the nonpartisan principle of election is well established and strongly favored by the voters of this state; 2, that there is no such judicial corruption as would require the discarding of this established system, and the institution of a blue ribbon committee with subsequent appointment; 3, that the justices of our supreme court, representatives of the association of judges, and committees of the state bar of Michigan which have had this subject under study, do not favor the adoption of the ABA or any other appointive plan; 4, that the committee on judicial branch of this convention early in its deliberations voted 18 to 3 against any plan for appointment of the judges of our courts; and 5, that this convention should confirm the decision of this committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Messrs. Lawrence, Tubbs and Mrs. Judd, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Saginaw, Mr. Shackleton. Before Mr. Shackleton begins, the Chair will advise that pursuant to the request of Mr. Everett the question has been divided in the following fashion: the first question which will be presented is the question of the use of the ABA plan for the supreme court and intermediate appellate courts, which is the language found on page 5 of your sheets. The second question presented will be the use of this plan on a referendum in counties, where it is used on a referendum basis for circuit and probate courts only, which will be the amendment proposed on page 4, from which certain words will be stricken; those words being "any reference to justices of the supreme court or judges of the court of appeals." When we get to that point, the secretary will read the amendment, but the Chair thought it may be helpful to you to know in advance in what fashion the question will be presented.

Mr. Shackleton.

MR. SHACKLETON: Mr. Chairman, a short statement, if I may, and a question through the Chair to Mr. Lawrence. We have been told there are less than 8,000 lawyers in the state. That is less than 1/1000 per cent of the state population. Mrs. Judd has told us that there are 2 organizations which support the proposed amendment now, each of which combined, or the 2 combined, do not have as many members in their membership as the bar association. My question to Mr. Lawrence, please: what evidence do you have from within Michigan that the average citizen, or particularly the average voter, has in the least, an interest in what the bar association thinks or what their polls indicate?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Shackleton, either I misunderstood you or you misunderstood some figures. It is my understanding there are in the neighborhood of 9200 attorneys in the state. I don't know whether it makes too much difference in your percentages, but I will say that there are considerably more than 1,000 attorneys.

MR. SHACKLETON: No. I think I said 8,000.

MR. LAWRENCE: It sounded like a thousand here.

MR. SHACKLETON: One-thousandth of one per cent of the population.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Shackleton, you have asked a difficult question to answer. I will try to answer it. It is difficult to answer because some of this is not documented. Over a period of about 12 years I have received a number of letters. My file contains numerous editorials, particularly shortly after judicial elections, not confined entirely to Wayne county, but primarily from Wayne county. Those letters, received by the state bar in many cases and forwarded to me, indicate an interest on the most part of the people who do not come into court all the time or frequently, the way attorneys do, and who aren't familiar with the court, but have been perturbed at the fact that they have been asked to vote for candidates of whom they have no knowledge.

The situation could be compared to that which we faced when we ran for office where, in spite of the efforts of our 2 major political parties, it seemed impossible to get a large segment of the voters out to vote, and yet I have felt, really have felt — and I think others agree with me — that the people were interested in this constitutional convention. I think that they felt one way or the other about it. But they were asked to vote on something that they didn't understand and, as a result, they felt that way about the candidates.

I have 2 ballots here, 2 sample ballots. One is this ballot in Wayne county, the Democratic primary in 1935, that brought about much of the change. I don't know that it is possible to see it around this room, but there were 18 candidates to be selected, and on that list — that is, they were to run in the finals. This was just the preliminary heat, so to speak. On that page there are 181 candidates. You can go down through the list of those candidates, you see similar names. If anybody presented a thing like that to me in the ballot box when I went to vote, I think I would walk out. After that ballot there were numerous letters received. There were numerous editorials and articles in the papers. As a result of that an effort was made to correct it by making the election nonpartisan, and by putting in the incumbency designation. However, in the biennial spring election of April 6, 1959, the last general judicial election in Wayne county at which there were candidates for the supreme court, circuit court, recorders and common pleas, the voters who went into the voting booth — and I believe in Detroit now it is all by machine — were faced with a ballot that had 63 candidates on it for the positions. Now, it is when the voters have received these that — when these situations have arisen — the letters have come into the bar and the editorials have appeared in the papers.

That is all I can tell you about it.

MR. SHACKLETON: One further question, Mr. Chairman, please. You have indicated you have had letters or editorials indicating dissatisfaction. Did any of them indicate a preference for appointments?

MR. LAWRENCE: I would say not. That is, that wasn't the objection.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, in response to some statements made by Mr. Lawrence, I think Mr. Iverson covered some of them, but I should say for the members of this committee that this plan was seriously considered. It was not only expounded by the several justices of this state, but by the national spokesman for the plan, Mr. Glen Winters. I do not know how they could have had further or more detailed or forceful spokesmen than those 2.

As Mr. Iverson stated, the committee not only rejected an appointment system, but took a particular ballot on the ABA plan, and it was the overwhelming vote of the majority of the committee that there was no real need for a change, and that the people should have the voice in selecting the justices of the supreme court. It was pointed out, and rightly so, that the courts are not necessarily just for the attorneys, but that they are for the people, and that Michigan historically has taken a lead in the nonpartisan election of judges, be it on a local trial level or the justices of the supreme court. We considered the plan, and we had numerous spokesmen for it, and I say Mr. Lawrence is being completely consistent, and he advised me very early that this was the only plan he would vote for, and regardless of what the committee came out with he would not approve it, and if we did not come out with the ABA plan he would present this as either an amendment, as a minority or, as he has, an amendment by getting 2 cosponsors. The same is true of Mr. Tubbs.

I can only state that the committee considered it. We believe the people should have the right to vote upon the election of supreme court justices. Therefore, I would urge the rejection of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, the Chair will recognize Judge Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: Mr. Chairman and delegates, every day we are reminded that a lot depends upon the point of view, and that reminded me of a story a friend of mine recently told me. He said last summer he overheard a conversation between 2 house flies. They were discussing the idiosyncrasies of these creatures that call themselves people. Said one fly to the other, "Look at those crazy people. Here they spend all that money building ceilings and then they walk on the floor." (laughter)

I would like to emphasize just one point that I think is important in connection with the proposal. The clinching argument in favor of this plan is supposed to be that it will take the selection of judges out of politics. I think on analysis this is the very thing it does not do, because it leaves the appointment eventually and ultimately to the governor, where under the current practice politics becomes the controlling consideration. It starts with a nominating committee. Here we have a nominating committee called upon to select 3 nominees, and the first thing they say to each other is, "We have got to take at least one from the governor's party or else we will be accused of playing politics." And, of course, that particular nominee automatically becomes assured of the appointment. The choice is limited? Is it in fact? The governor cannot be compelled to name any of the nominees. He can hold it up and refuse to act until a new list is submitted which eventually contains the name of the person he wanted in the first place. That is exactly what happened at least once in the state of Missouri.

I wonder, as I have said to you privately before, whether we're not making a mistake in concentrating all of our thinking on lawyers and judges, and forgetting about the jury. To me this is the least acceptable of the so called appointive plans. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I made inquiry regarding the number of people asking to speak. I had hoped that we might get a vote on this particular amendment before I requested the committee to rise. I understand there are 3 on the list.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair would advise that he has at the moment Messrs. Hodges, Ford, Leibrand and Lawrence seeking recognition.

MR. DANHOF: If these people could make it short and if we could get on, I would like, if possible, to take a vote, but if we will be here too long, why, we would have the committee rise. Shall we try for another 2 minutes?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes Mr. Hodges.

MR. HODGES: Mr. Chairman, I am going to address my remarks to the laymen in the audience, since it seems to be the popular thing for attorneys to do. As an attorney I vote in the bar polls along with the rest of the attorneys, and seldom do I seem to win. Yet when I go to the polls and vote with the rest of the people, I seem to do pretty well. So for that reason I would be, out of hand, opposed to the present plan that is being proposed.

I think what we have got to realize here is that attorneys, besides being experts in the legal field, are also individuals with biases and prejudices the same as anyone else, and that a majority of attorneys, by the very reason they are professional men, are of a certain economic status, and even, to a certain degree, a majority with the same philosophical sense, and it seems to me you can never divorce your philosophy and your economics from your expertise, and for this very reason I think that all the people, since it is all the people who are being judged in the last analysis by our judiciary, should have a voice in selecting their judiciary. For that reason I stand opposed to this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Taylor, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I rise to oppose the amendment. I want to say that Don Lawrence has been honest and straight forward in his preparation. He makes no bones about the fact that this is the culmination of 12 years of work on his part, as a member of the very influential committee of the state bar to bring the Missouri plan to Michigan. He has consistently maintained his position from the beginning, and although we disagree with him, we know him, respect him for his integrity and for the sincerity with which he presents his plan to us.

However, I think it is a misnomer to call it the Missouri plan, because it really isn't. In Missouri, when they adopted this, they discovered that they had so worded it — and Mr. Winters indicated to us that this was done by mistake — that it was found to be a local option provision. In other words, each county has the option of continuing to elect its judges or accepting the so called Missouri plan for selection. In those 2 counties where they had very vicious situations arising out of machine politics and a lot of scandal the people were ready for almost anything that offered relief from it, and they accepted it. As a matter of fact, I don't think it is quite correct to say it is in 2 counties, because I understand in St. Louis county it applies within the city of St. Louis but not with respect to the county at large. I am not positive of that, but this is my understanding. It has been in effect in those 2 places in Missouri for 20 years, and no other part of the state has seen fit to adopt it.

Mr. Winters, the foremost exponent of this plan, admits that they have tried consistently and they have never ceased to urge upon the people of Missouri that this is working so wonderfully in Kansas City and St. Louis that everybody ought to have it, but the people of that state have not seen it as any great improvement; at least they haven't seen it as a great improvement to the extent where they have been willing to vote to give up their right to select the judges at the ballot box.

This matter has been debated by lawyers and nonlawyers for many years, and I think every lawyer goes through a metamorphosis on this question, at least the younger ones of us here. We get brainwashed about this in law school, and you don't realize to what extent until you get out and get involved ever so slightly in politics by becoming a con con delegate. I think that if you take a poll of college professors, law school professors, that you would come up with almost a 99 per cent yes vote for the Missouri plan. I am getting chuckles from one back here now.

College professors have a strange and almost morbid fascination for the appointment of judges, because very frankly they just don't have very much confidence in the average voter. Now, for many reasons they don't go out and openly say it, but what they really are motivated by is the strong opinion that the citizens are not smart enough to determine their own affairs. In other words, strange as it may seem, the professors charged with the duty of teaching the young people of this country to support the constitution do not really believe in democracy in its pure sense because they feel there are some things you ought to take away from the people because they are not smart enough to handle them. One of them is the selection of judges. By the same token, college professors and law students, not having been continually exposed to the courts as litigants and practicing attorneys interested in the outcome of a case, have a tendency to pick at the courts, perhaps a little bit more than the rest of us, and they become dissatisfied with what they consider to be less than 100 per cent efficiency, and they point with terrible disdain at the occasional judge who doesn't measure up to their standards. But when you talk to the attorneys who are actually fighting it out from day to day in the practice of their profession, I don't think you will find a lot of attorneys criticizing the quality of our bench. Quite the contrary. I find that in my area, at least, in talking with my contemporaries, they are pretty generally satisfied across the board. There are exceptions, of course.

To finish this up, I would like to read from the Rotarian magazine for June of 1961, where this matter was debated by 2 prominent attorneys, this very brief paragraph:

> Recent authoritative views on this question voiced by some members of the bar may be reduced to 3 basic goals which they allege are wanting in the elective system — namely, how to select the best qualified men for the position of judge, how to get them on the bench, and how to keep them there. These authorities simply beg the question when they gratuitously conclude and assume that the first goal — the selection of qualified men — cannot possibly be attained through the elective method, and thus, inferentially and without proof, sanctimoniously attack the integrity and fidelity to their trust of the leaders of both political parties who nominate judicial candidates.

There is one other observation which should cheer the nonlawyers up just a little bit, because this fellow writing the article is a prominent attorney with more than 20 years practice before the appellate courts in Illinois, and since he is taking a little jibe at the lawyers I thought it was too good to pass up for the benefit of my nonlawyer friends. He is discussing the Missouri plan and the selection commission which consists of eminent members of the bar, who, perish the thought, have no prejudices and I assume no emotions, and are perhaps even neutral about the taste of food and sex, I suppose.

> The contingent from the bar association does not reflect the sentiment of the lawyers in the state, let alone the people . . . .

And this is important, and this is something that you have to realize as nonlawyers, because occasionally I have nonlawyer friends who assume that because I am a member of the bar I subscribe to the philosophy enunciated by the very small minority that Mr. Lawrence, himself, alluded to.

> Most bar associations are controlled by powerful minorities, usually aligned with large firms and vested interests . . . .

Excuse me, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Guilty on both counts, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I will try to be more careful and edit this a little.

> . . . who guide the policy of the association in conformity with their respective philosophies. Secondly, the vast majority of lawyers are informed of the qualifications of judges purely through heresay, similar to the laymen, for the reason that comparatively very few members of the bar are ever involved in courtroom litigation.

You might get an interesting reaction if you took a poll of the first 200 lawyers that you find in the phonebook to find out when was the last time they appeared in front of a jury or in an actual trial before a judge in a court. It might be quite surprising to the laymen just what statistics you will discover. This is particularly true in the big cities.

> Also, the values of the bar are not necessarily identical with the values of the people whom courts must serve. This is only to suggest that what lawyers value in each other and in judges may not be the same as what a layman values in his judge.

And he finally concludes this by saying:

> This is not to say that bar associations do not serve the legal profession, the courts, and the communities in many other areas; but just as students should not have the right to vote concerning the selection or retention of their teachers, so also the lawyers should not have the right to turn the selection or retention of judges into a popularity contest.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Bay City, Mr. Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman, the debate is going to my satisfaction, so I will yield to the next speaker.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Ypsilanti, Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: I will make this as brief as possible. Let me tell you, there is an axiom that if you advocate judicial reform you must not be shortwinded. It takes a long time. Judicial reforms have been and should be done deliberately, and changes should not be made without full discussion and consideration. I do, however, want to speak to the laymen. I want you to know that I say this sincerely, in view of some remarks that were made by Judge Dehnke, that the courts were not solely for the lawyers, and we have forgotten the jury. Please believe me when I say this to you, that it is in an effort to see that our clients get justice that the bar as a whole is interested in seeing the best possible courts. The bar is not interested in running the courts. At least I have not found that to be the case. But the members of the bar are concerned when they feel that their clients do not receive the best treatment, the best considered opinions; and I think that the bar of Michigan would have been remiss in its duty to the people of this state and to this convention, if it were not interested in doing what it can to improve the system, and I think you people, as laymen, have a right to look to the members of the bar, because of their familiarity with the courts, to advise and recommend to you. I don't think it is presumptuous on the part of the bar. I think you have a right to expect the bar to do it.

But don't be fooled into thinking that you have an elected bench in Michigan. As you people who come from throughout the state think of your judges, both probate and circuit, and how many of them in your counties originally got on the bench by election, I'll venture that there are very few of you who know of judges in your circuits who, in your own counties, came on the bench originally by election. We have an appointment system without any responsibility whatsoever, followed by an election, which is, of course, the situation with the ABA plan. And let me call to your attention again that 5 out of 8 members of our present supreme court originally came on the bench by appointment. Thirteen out of 18 of the Wayne county circuit judges originally came on the bench by appointment; 8 out of 10 of the recorders judges, the same way, and 7 out of 9 of the common pleas judges. So don't believe it when you are told you have an elective system.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Bad Axe, Mr. McAllister. The Chair would advise there are just 2 speakers seeking recognition, of whom Mr. McAllister is the first.

MR. McALLISTER: I oppose this amendment first, because the people of my area are opposed to it 5 to 1. Second, I am opposed to this amendment because it is based on the fact that the people are too ignorant to make a determination themselves. I am also against it because it is an appointive trend. It seems that a considerable number of people seem to think that everybody should be appointed. We won't have any political system if this continues. In fact, everybody will be appointed, and we will have no political party at all. I recommend that the amendment be defeated.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Following the path of solicitor Farnsworth here, I have heard so many fine appeals from the lawyers to the nonlawyers in the convention that I am much moved by all this talk to at least make one comment. I am sorry that we already concluded the educational article, because I think that if we could have generated such a strong feeling among the members of the teaching profession here for the selection of teaching officers in the state we might get something different in that line. I should think that the teachers might like to select their superintendent.

A DELEGATE: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Faxon, a point of order has been raised —

MR. FAXON: Yes, I just want to comment on one thing, if you will forgive me. I have kept quiet on this judicial article for several days, and Mr. Hoxie has been needling me all the time on this, but the argument has been advanced on this argument that we have had judges appointed, and what we have now is political consideration in the selection of the judges. I was sitting here thinking that it is unfortunate that this has to occur; that perhaps it might be in line for judges when they take office to sign an oath that during the next 8 years they will not get sick, they will not die, they will not leave office for any reason. I can't understand why the objection to appointment of a judge if he can't finish out his term of office. I fail to see that this represents any valid argument for changing the system insofar as this method of selection is concerned.

And I wish to make one final comment, and I think this is the impression that has been given me here. Under this plan a blue ribbon committee consisting of members of the professions are going to make the selection. I think our experience in this country has been largely that of respect for the people to make these decisions and not turning it over to any private group. I, for one, wouldn't want to see the educational function turned over to teachers, even though I am a teacher, and I wouldn't want to see the judicial function turned over to lawyers. I feel that the ultimate judgment and the wisdom of the people has in our past proved the best.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Lawrence, Tubbs and Mrs. Judd. Pursuant to the request of Mr. Everett the amendment has been divided. We will put first the portion of the amendment, which is most easily found by turning to page 5 of your list of amendments under item 2 dealing with the use of a method of selection for justices of the supreme court and judges of the court of appeals. The secretary will read the portion of the question on which the vote is now to be taken.

SECRETARY CHASE: This is on page 5 of the pending amendments to Committee Proposal 91, item 2 on the page. This portion of the amendment reads as follows:

1. Amend page 2, following line 24, by inserting section g, to read as follows:

"Sec. g. A vacancy in the office of justice of the supreme court or judge of the court of appeals shall be filled by the governor from a list of 3 nominees presented to him by a judicial nominating commission. If the governor should fail to make an appointment from the list within 60 days from the day it is presented to him, the appointment shall be made by the chief justice or the acting chief justice from the same list.

At the next general election following the expiration of 3 years from the date of appointment, and every 10 years thereafter so long as he retains his office, every justice and judge so appointed shall be subject to approval or rejection by the electorate. The electorate of the entire state shall vote on the question of approval or rejection.

There shall be a judicial nominating commission for the supreme court and the court of appeals. Each judicial nominating commission shall consist of 7 members, one of whom shall be the chief justice of the state, who shall act as chairman. The members of the bar of the state shall elect 3 of their number to serve as members of said commission, and the governor shall appoint 3 citizens, not admitted to practice law before the courts of the state. The terms of office and compensation for members of a judicial nominating commission shall be fixed by the legislature, provided that not more than 1/3 of a commission shall be elected in any 3 year period. No member of a judicial nominating commission shall hold any other public office or office in a political party or organization and he shall not be eligible for appointment to a state judicial office so long as he is a member of a judicial nominating commission and for a period of 5 years thereafter.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment as read. Division has been requested and the demand supported. Those in favor of the amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. The question, for the benefit of the late comers, is that portion of the amendment offered by Mr. Lawrence dealing with the appointment of justices of the supreme court and judges of the court of appeals. All those in favor of the amendment will vote aye; those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment, the yeas are 25, the nays are 91.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: That portion of the amendment is not adopted. The question now is upon the second portion of the amendment offered by Messrs. Lawrence, Tubbs and Mrs. Judd, which you will find on page 4 of your pending amendments. The portion of the question is that dealing with the method of selection of judges of the circuit court and of the probate court in counties voting to adopt the system. On that question, do you seek recognition, Mr. Everett?

MR. DANHOF: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Is there anything before this committee which yields itself to the consideration of selection of circuit court judges? To my knowledge the only matter before us is the selection of supreme court judges. We have not yet reached that point.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment which was offered by Messrs. Lawrence, Tubbs and Mrs. Judd dealt with both the selection of justices of the supreme court and judges of the court of appeals, and with the permissive use of the same system for the selection of judges of the circuit court and the probate court. The question was, pursuant to the request of Mr. Everett, divided, and we therefore have before us at this time the second portion of the amendment offered by Mr. Lawrence and his associates.

MR. DANHOF: You would rule that it is germane, then, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: In its original form it was clearly germane, and the Chair doesn't think the division of the question would suffice to rule the remaining portion out of order at this time, Mr. Danhof. Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, I asked to have this divided because it seems to me 2 separate, distinct questions were presented. On page 4, the last paragraph on that page, the second line of the paragraph reads thus:

> There shall be a judicial nominating commission for each circuit court and each probate court, in each county or circuit which has by a referendum vote of the electors therein authorized the creation of such a judicial nominating commission.

The other section, of course, relates to the supreme court and the intermediate court of appeals. To my mind, if such a referendum were held in my county I would vote against it and oppose it, but I still think it ought to be in the constitution.

We have had a great deal of talk here about the people want this and the people don't want that, and all this says is that the people can get exactly what they do want by voting for it. I think it gives a degree of flexibility to the constitution which it should have. I think it gives to local governmental units the right to select for themselves how they will select their judges. I would hope that they wouldn't use it, but I don't think this convention should deprive them of the right to have it if they want to use it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on this portion of the Lawrence amendment, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment has now been, by the division, revised so that it reads as follows:

1. Amend page 2, following line 24, by inserting section g, to read as follows:

"Sec. g. For all courts of record for which a judicial nominating commission is provided, a vacancy in the office of judge shall be filled by the governor from a list of 3 nominees presented to him by a judicial nominating commission. If the governor should fail to make an appointment from the list within 60 days from the day it is presented to him, the appointment shall be made by the chief justice or the acting chief justice from the same list.

At the next general election following the expiration of 3 years from the date of appointment, and every 10 years thereafter so long as he retains his office, every judge so appointed shall be subject to approval or rejection by the electorate. In the case of a judge of the circuit court or of the probate court the electorate of the county or circuit in which the court to which he was appointed is located shall vote on the question of approval or rejection.

There shall be a judicial nominating commission for each circuit court and each probate court, in each county or circuit which has by a referendum vote of the electors therein authorized the creation of such a judicial nominating commission. Each judicial nominating commission shall consist of 7 members, one of whom shall be the chief justice of the state, who shall act as chairman. The members of the bar of the state residing in the geographical area for which the court sits shall elect 3 of their number to serve as members of said commission, and the governor shall appoint 3 citizens, not admitted to practice law before the courts of the state, from among the residents of the geographical area for which the court sits. The terms of office and compensation for members of a judicial nominating commission shall be fixed by the legislature, provided that not more than 1/3 of a commission shall be elected in any 3 year period. No member of a judicial nominating commission shall hold any other public office or office in a political party or organization and he shall not be eligible for appointment to a state judicial office so long as he is a member of a judicial nominating commission and for a period of 5 years thereafter.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment as read. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Point of order, Mr. Chairman. Before this committee at this time is a proposal pertaining to the supreme court, Committee Proposal 91. That is all that is before this committee at this time. That is all that we have been discussing. The circuit court is dealt with in Committee Proposal 93, A proposal pertaining to the circuit court. I therefore state that the matter for consideration at this time, Mr. Chairman, is out of order.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, your point of order would be very well taken if the amendment had been offered separately. Because it was offered as a part of an amendment dealing with the supreme court and the court of appeals, the Chair will rule it is germane. However, the Chair might suggest that since its consideration might more appropriately be deferred until we are dealing with the circuit court and probate court, Mr. Lawrence might be willing to withdraw it. If Mr. Lawrence does not choose to withdraw it, however, the Chair will rule it is in order.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman, I have a motion to make if it is in order.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: State your motion, Mr. Downs.

MR. DOWNS: I move that consideration of this matter be postponed until Committee Proposal 93 is before the committee of the whole.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Secretary, is the motion in order? The motion is in order. The question is on the motion of Mr. Downs that further consideration of the second half of the Lawrence amendment, the portion which was just read, be deferred until Committee Proposal 93 is before the committee of the whole.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman, the purpose for this, I think, is rather obvious. I think in discussing the circuit court and the probate court we should have the advantage of hearing the report of the committee and then discuss this at the more appropriate juncture.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Any further discussion on the motion? Mr. Danhof?

MR. DANHOF: I think that is entirely proper.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: All in favor of the motion will say aye. Opposed, no.

The motion prevails. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves that the committee do now rise. Those in favor say aye. Those opposed, no.

The motion prevails, and the committee will now rise.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, President Nisbet resumed the Chair.]

PRESIDENT NISBET: Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration one section of one proposal, of which the secretary will give a more detailed report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 91, has considered certain amendments thereto, and has come to no final resolution thereon. This completes the report of the committee of the whole.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Announcements.

SECRETARY CHASE: The committee on style and drafting will meet in room K this evening at 8:00 o'clock. William B. Cudlip, chairman.

We have the following requests for leave: Mr. Norris wishes to be excused from tomorrow morning's session and Mr. Marshall wishes to be excused from the sessions of Thursday and Friday of this week as his wife is going into the hospital for surgery.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Without objection, the leaves are granted.

The Chair recognizes Mr. Hoxie.

MR. HOXIE: Mr. President, point of information. Relative to the time for reconsideration of a provision defeated in the committee of the whole, my question is, does the time start to run presently — and I am referring to the Prettie provision — or does the time start to run following the completion of the consideration of the entire proposal?

PRESIDENT NISBET: Mr. Chase, do you want to answer that question?

Mr. Hoxie, the opinion is that the motion for reconsideration must be made today or tomorrow. Mr. Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. President, under what rule is that ruling you made?

PRESIDENT NISBET: Rule 53, Mr. Leibrand. The Chair recognizes Mr. Lundgren.

MR. LUNDGREN: Mr. President, I move that the Webster debating society adjourn.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on adjournment. Those in favor say aye, opposed, no.

We are adjourned until tomorrow morning at 9:30.

[Whereupon, at 5:15 o'clock p.m., the convention adjourned until 9:30 o'clock a.m., Wednesday, February 28, 1962.]

EIGHTY-NINTH DAY

REVEREND BROWNELL: Let us pray. Most gracious God, we humbly beseech Thee, as for the people of the state of Michigan in general, so especially for this constitutional convention in meeting assembled; that Thou wouldst be pleased to direct and prosper all their consultations, to the advancement of Thy glory, the good of Thy church, the safety, honor and welfare of all Thy people in the state of Michigan; that all things may be so ordered and settled by their endeavors, upon the best and surest foundations; that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us for all generations. These and all other necessaries, for them, for us, and Thy whole church, we humbly beg in the name and mediation of Jesus Christ, our most blessed Lord and Savior. Amen.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The roll call will be taken by the secretary. All present please vote aye. Have you all recorded your presence? If so, the secretary will take the roll.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Without objection, the requests are granted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Absent with leave: Mr. Davis, Miss Hart, Messrs. Heideman, Marshall, Mosier, Norris and Perras.

Absent without leave: None.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Report of standing committees.
SECRETARY CHASE: None.
PRESIDENT NISBET: Select committees.
SECRETARY CHASE: None.
PRESIDENT NISBET: Communications.
SECRETARY CHASE: No communications.
PRESIDENT NISBET: Second reading.
SECRETARY CHASE: Nothing on that calendar for today.
PRESIDENT NISBET: Motions and resolutions.
SECRETARY CHASE: No resolutions on file.
PRESIDENT NISBET: Unfinished business.
SECRETARY CHASE: None.
PRESIDENT NISBET: Special orders.
SECRETARY CHASE: None.
PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. President, may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

PRESIDENT NISBET: You may.

MR. LEIBRAND: Yesterday afternoon in the committee of the whole there was under consideration section g of Committee Proposal 91 relating to the district plan for the selection of supreme court and appellate judges. The committee of the whole passed the Ford amendment which deleted section g. As I understood the ruling of the chairman of the committee of the whole, the action in passing the Ford amendment would preclude direct consideration in the committee of the whole of the district plan as contained in section g. What I inquire about at this time, Mr. President, is what effect that action of the committee of the whole will have on section g when Committee Proposal 91 reaches the whole convention. Will we still, then, be precluded from considering the merits of section g, the district plan?

PRESIDENT NISBET: Mr. Leibrand, when the committee of the whole rises, the question will be then on agreeing to the amendment as adopted by the committee of the whole yesterday.

MR. LEIBRAND: And if the convention agrees upon the Ford amendment, then the convention will be precluded from considering the merits of section g of the majority report; is that the ruling?

PRESIDENT NISBET: If the Ford amendment is voted down, then the judicial branch committee's report is the report of the committee of the whole.

Also, in addition to that, Mr. Hoxie asked for an interpretation yesterday on reconsidering. That is given further explanation on page 683 of today's journal.

MR. LEIBRAND: I saw that, Mr. President. But let's take the converse of that. Let us assume that the Ford amendment is approved by the convention. Then do I understand the ruling will be that this convention cannot consider section g of the majority report?

PRESIDENT NISBET: If the Ford amendment is approved by the convention as reported from the committee of the whole, then the only way the district plan could be presented again would be to have some revision of that plan offered as an amendment.

MR. LEIBRAND: It could not, then, be considered in its present form by the convention as a whole?

PRESIDENT NISBET: No, it could not, because it has already been defeated by the Ford amendment.

MR. LEIBRAND: Thank you, Mr. President.

PRESIDENT NISBET: General orders. The Chair recognizes Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the purpose of consideration of matters on the general orders calendar.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on the motion of Mr. Van Dusen. Those in favor say aye, opposed, no.

The motion prevails.

[Whereupon, Mr. Van Dusen assumed the Chair to preside as chairman of the committee of the whole.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will be in order. When the committee last sat, we were considering section g of Committee Proposal 91. The section as originally presented had been stricken, but there are amendments as substitutes for that section on the secretary's desk.

For last previous action by the committee of the whole on Committee Proposal 91, see above, page 1325.

The next amendment in order of consideration would be the amendment found on page 6 of your list of pending amendments, offered by Mr. Lawrence. The Chair would ask Mr. Lawrence at this time, in view of the fact that most of the substance of the amendment found on page 6 was presented and rejected by the convention yesterday, does Mr. Lawrence desire at this time to insist upon offering his amendment?

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Chairman, I have consulted with the 2 other sponsors, and it is agreeable to withdraw the 2 amendments, if there are 2 left.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair believes, Mr. Lawrence, there is only 1 left, and it will be withdrawn?

MR. LAWRENCE: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Therefore, the secretary will read the next pending amendment to section g of Committee Proposal 91 if any there be.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. King offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, following line 24, by inserting a new section g to read:

"Sec. g. There is hereby created a committee on judicial selection consisting of 6 members, 1 attorney and 1 layman appointed by the governor, 1 attorney and 1 layman appointed by the senate, and 1 attorney and 1 layman appointed by the house. The committee on judicial selection shall fill all vacancies on the supreme court which shall result in unexpired terms. At the expiration of such term, the appointee shall stand for reelection and shall be entitled to ballot designation as an incumbent. The secretary of state shall provide for a nonpartisan statewide primary election to determine 1 other candidate to run against the incumbent. When a full term vacancy occurs, the nominee of the committee on judicial selection may be opposed by the winner of a nonpartisan statewide primary. Any supreme court justice may nominate himself for reelection at the end of his term.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. King, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. King.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, at this time I would like to withdraw this amendment with the proviso that I can resubmit it at a later time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. King's amendment is withdrawn. Are there further amendments to section g? Mr. Danhof, do you desire to be recognized on section g? Mr. Secretary, are there further amendments to section g?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Kuhn has an amendment—

MR. KUHN: I am going to let that go to the body of the proposal. I am waiting for the other appointive measures to take their course, and then I will come in with this one.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Kuhn's amendment is temporarily withdrawn. Is there anything further pertaining to section g? Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, according to the list previously furnished, there was an amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett. What has happened to that particular one which is on the list that I have?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: According to the list in the hands of the Chair, that is an amendment to section a, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Was that to section a? Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett amends section a, page 1, line 6, and so forth.

MR. DANHOF: In that case, Mr. Chairman, there being no further amendment, I would move that further consideration of Committee Proposal 91 be deferred, that it be passed subject to recall at the pleasure of the chairman, and further, that we delay consideration of Committee Proposal 92 and at this time pass to consideration of Committee Proposal 93.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves that the committee proceed to consideration of Committee Proposal 93. Mr. Brown, on that motion.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, I would not like to speak on this motion. If it is going to be passed without objection, I do not wish to speak.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford, do you desire to speak on the motion?

MR. FORD: No, parliamentary inquiry. Is it my understanding that what we are doing is passing on from section g and we are not passing section g by?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: That is the purport of Mr. Danhof's motion as the Chair understands it, Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: We will return to this at the status when the floor is open for amendments to section g?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: That is correct, Mr. Ford. Mr. Yeager, do you desire to be recognized on the motion of Mr. Danhof?

MR. YEAGER: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Danhof if he would have any serious objection if we considered the federal plan amendment under section a at this time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: No, Mr. Chairman, I would be perfectly willing. If the sponsors of that wish to consider it at this time, I have no particular objection.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Do you withdraw your motion, Mr. Danhof?

MR. DANHOF: In favor of Mr. Yeager's request, I do.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof's motion is withdrawn. Mr. Brown, for what purpose do you rise?

MR. G. E. BROWN: Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. In the event there is an amendment which relates to both sections a and g as they appear in the committee proposal, but which may in prior constitutions relate only to one section, is it to be the ruling of the Chair that any portion that would have been covered by the subject matter of Committee Proposal 91, section g, would be out of order in consideration of Committee Proposal 91, section a?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will not rule in advance on amendments which may be offered, Mr. Brown. The Chair would advise that if you have an amendment to section a which you would like to offer, the Chair would be glad to rule at that time, and that amendments, of course, will always be in order to the body of the proposal when consideration of the several sections have been completed.

MR. G. E. BROWN: Thank you, sir.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will advise that, pursuant to the action previously taken in committee of the whole, consideration of section a had been postponed until completion of consideration of section g. Section g being temporarily passed, without objection, we will now proceed to section a.

SECRETARY CHASE: Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett have offered the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 6, after "justices" by striking out the comma and "to be elected by the electors of the state. The term of office shall be 8 years. Not more than 3 terms of office shall expire at the same time.", and inserting a period and, "The governor shall, with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint the justices of the supreme court who shall hold office during their good behavior. Justices in office on the effective date of this constitution shall hold office for good behavior.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Yeager.

MR. YEAGER: Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I would like to make a short statement on this amendment and then yield the floor to Mr. Stamm for some further remarks. It seems to me that in writing this section we have 2 desirable goals. They are 1, that we provide a system which will provide the most capable individuals to serve in the highest court of the state; and 2, that we provide a system which will permit the decisions of this court to be influenced as little as possible by political considerations. Please note that I said, as little as possible.

This amendment which is before us now provides that when a vacancy occurs on the bench of the supreme court, that vacancy will be filled by appointment of the governor, subject to advice and consent of the senate, and such appointee shall hold office during his good behavior. "Good behavior" is the term used in the federal constitution and means, in effect, until impeachment. This section applies, incidentally, only to the selection of supreme court justices and not of any of the lesser court judges. As a layman, my concept of what a supreme court of the state—or of our nation, for that matter—should do is that it should make final statements on the interpretations on questions of law; to make such statements based on law, not other considerations. I believe this court should be as far removed as possible from political influence. I don't believe this can be done by using the elective process.

When a judge runs for office, on what platform should he run? I am going to make a fairer judgment than my opponent? Or I am going to act in a way to please my political supporters? Or, in essence, why should I be supported politically for this office?

Now the question comes up, if a judge is appointed for life does this take political considerations out of his decisions? I think much more so than any system which requires him to come up for election. If he is to come up and answer the question, how did I support my political position?, isn't it logical that the answer to that question may reflect itself in his work on the bench? I think this is a possibility. Even if it were not so, there might be some feeling among people that it might be so, and the confidence that people need to have in the highest court of this state is a strong consideration.

We talk about election of judges but we really don't mean election because we stick on the proposition of the ballot designation. What we are saying in effect is that we are to have elections, but we provide guidance in the form of the designation so that the voter will cast an enlightened vote and so he will know who the incumbent is and so, in effect, will trust the position of incumbency. To me this designation is a poor form of reappointment in the form of a gimmick.

One of the common statements I find in the mail coming to me here in the constitutional convention relating to the judiciary is that most voters feel that they have no way of knowing the qualifications of men running for judicial office to be able to make a good sound judgment. They have to rely on name identification and other things — and ballot designations.

We have had much discussion in the convention on the question of trusting the legislature. I think at this point we not only need to trust the legislature, but I think we should think in terms of trusting a governor. I honestly believe that any governor with this responsibility will choose highly competent people for this highest judicial post. You now have the appointive system without any advice or consent of anyone. Most judges are appointed by one man only, the governor, to fill vacancies. The appointive confirmation procedure has worked very well at the federal level. At the federal level we have had a vacancy occur on the average of every 8 or 9 years. This procedure also provides continuity and stability at this court level. Now, some have said these appointees, because they have no election, are not answerable to the people and therefore become unresponsive. I for one am not interested in having the members of this court politically responsive. I only want them to make judicial decisions on the basis of law and not political considerations.

In the interest of supreme court decisions as far removed as possible from politics, I urge that you vote yes on this amendment for the federal system for the selection of state supreme court justices in the state of Michigan.

I would like, Mr. Chairman, at this time to yield to Mr. Stamm.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Yeager, would you yield first to Mr. Lawrence for a question?

MR. YEAGER: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Yeager, I wonder if any consideration was given to reducing the number of justices to 7 in view of the fact that it appears at this time that there will be an intermediate appellate court. Rather than increasing, I wonder if any consideration was given to decreasing the court by one?

MR. YEAGER: Well, speaking personally — I haven't talked to the other sponsors of the amendment — we, I am sure, would have no objections to decreasing the number. We accepted the number 9 because that was in the committee report as it came out, and for no other reason. Our amendment started after that figure was given in the report.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Yeager now yields to Mr. Stamm.

MR. STAMM: It is with a certain amount of hesitancy that I want to talk on a thing that is as important as the supreme court. I, too, am a layman in this convention, but I think I have had the happy experience of having been associated with a section of our judicial system where I may sit as an observer and watch the barristers and the jurists as they tangle with the problems of law. I feel, too, that possibly our judicial committee was weighted too much in favor of the barristers and the jurists. I feel, too, that the people should have been entitled to some representation as the courts were being retooled and redesigned for all of Michigan, and I think it is unfortunate sometimes that we in our profession or in our business definitely have to represent that point of view because that is a thing that we know the most about. That is the thing that we work with.

Now, I feel that here in this particular system we have a system that has been tried and has been found to be a good operation. We find generally very little criticism with the operation of the federal system. In the federal system we do take attorneys usually from general law practice and assign them to our federal courts, and they know that once they have received the appointment to the court, they are free from outside political interference or influence. They are men who have been tried, and we have found very few situations where they have had to be removed from the bench. I think possibly our judicial committee in their study of this particular problem have been too much influenced by a contemporary situation which may not become a problem for the future. It seems to me that through this system we are providing a system that has been proven and should work within the state of Michigan.

In this convention we hear the old cliche of the people's choice. You and I who have been active in a political party know that when it comes to selection of candidates for the judicial system in our state, the people's choice is not considered as much as it is a matter of finding a candidate that is expedient and that possibly can win an election rather than someone who has the legal training and the legal mind that can fit into the position of a justice of our supreme court. I would like to feel that here we are going to represent the people who have entrusted us to work out a document in this convention that will provide a court in this state that will truly be a supreme court.

I did not come here with a prepared speech. I hastily scribbled some notes this morning because I didn't realize that we were going back to section a as soon as we were. But I do feel that our fear of political interference would be lessened if we realized that this court was going to be established through appointment by the governor with the approval of the legislature. I feel then that we would have a bench which would be made up of men who knew that they would have to have no fear of personal prejudices or influences in their decision. And there is one other thing I would like to leave with the committee: this fear of ours of party politics is no greater or no worse than the fear of bar politics.

I want to urge you to at least give some consideration to this proposition. It has worked for the United States of America, and I feel that there is no reason why it should not work for the great state of Michigan.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Yeager, do you desire at this time to yield to Mr. Everett?

MR. YEAGER: Mr. Everett may want to make some remarks later, but we yield the floor at this time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, as I stated to you yesterday, the committee considered a plan of appointment such as this. Mr. Yeager appeared before our committee, having introduced a delegate proposal, and very eloquently and forcefully argued his point of view as he has today. The committee, after due consideration, as I advised you, overwhelmingly defeated any type of appointive plan, not only the ABA plan, but a plan such as is put forth at this time.

It was the considered opinion of the majority of the committee that the voters of this state are not willing at this time to give away their right to choose the justices of the supreme court, or at least to have a say in their selection or retention, and as a consequence this type of plan wherein they are appointed for a lifetime appointment was rejected by an overwhelming vote. I will not necessarily get into the numbers. There seems to be some conflict.

It is the opinion of the committee that the elective system and retention has served well the people of this state and that there is not the requirement nor the need that we switch to this type of system. I will agree with Mr. Yeager that this has worked in the federal system, but again the size of the country and the very operation of the system requires the appointment. Therefore, I will have to at this time respectfully oppose the amendment and would urge that it be defeated.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ford wishes to take the floor, and I will so yield.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I rise to oppose the proposed amendment. I assume that this wouldn't be the end of it. I am waiting for somebody to take the floor and put the real clincher into this one, and that would be to add advice and consent, and then we will get right around to the position where we have both of the other departments of government deciding who is going to be on the supreme court instead of the people.

One thing that we seem to lose sight of when we get bogged down in the detail of devising a foolproof system of picking insulated judges that are free from all sorts of pressure and responsibility is the fact that we have 3 independent branches of government, and no place is this more important than at the very top, at the supreme court level. It would be unfortunate if the governor, and conceivably the legislature — because I can't see this delegation sitting still for this one without throwing advice and consent into it before we get through — sitting still for any governor to put people on our bench for life, and that is what this is. Nobody has used it yet but this is a lifetime appointment.

Tony Stamm says that he hadn't heard of very many cases of federal judges being removed. Well, Tony, there is a great deal said about the number of cases where federal judges should be removed and aren't removed because to impeach a man is a pretty serious matter and a very difficult thing. What sometimes has happened in our federal system is that they just keep him out of the way, keep him where he can do the least amount of damage until he finally expires or retires. This is a system that has worked rather well in the federal system, but there are a lot of distinctions between their system and ours, and I don't think that the majority of lawyers who practice in both courts are going to agree with you that the judges, at the trial level, at least, in the federal system are superior to the trial judges that we get in Michigan by the elective process. As a matter of fact, there is some evidence to the contrary. I am not talking about individuals, but I am talking about straight across the board.

The real bad part about this from our point of view is that, as Sam Ostrow said yesterday, no one has devised a yardstick by which you can measure a person before he goes on the bench and tell what kind of a judge he is going to be. You can take a man who has had an otherwise perfect record. He may be an excellent trial lawyer. He may be a lousy judge at the same time. He may have been a very mediocre trial lawyer or no trial lawyer at all and turn out to be one of the best judges that went on the bench. So this doesn't work. He may be a very personable fellow, well thought of and a member of all the proper clubs and organizations and not be a good judge; and he may be a fellow that just doesn't seem to get along with anybody and he becomes a superior judge. The way you find out is to put him on the bench and then see what he does.

Now, unfortunately you can't impeach a man because he is a bad judge. You can only impeach him if he does something dishonest. However, you can at the ballot box remove a man from office without the indignity of impeachment, reject him by simply saying, "You are not the best. You are not the quality that we want. We want Joe Doaks because he seems to have what we want."

This system goes further away from the elective system than anything that has been proposed, and I think that it would strike at the very heart of an independent judiciary and remove from the Michigan court system one of the essentials that makes it a superior system in the United States.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett, the Chair will recognize Dr. Nord.

MR. NORD: Mr. Chairman, I would, first of all like to state that this plan offered by Mr. Yeager and others is by no means a terrible plan. It certainly has a great deal to be said in favor of it. And I might say further that when I came to the convention, this is the plan I favored. I am still not convinced that it is wrong in every respect, but I would like to analyze it into parts to see to what extent it does have some defects. Of course, as far as I know, it has worked very well in the federal system, but I speak only as a professor rather than as a man with a great deal of practical experience. I have been advised by attorneys that they think otherwise as to the inability to remove a judge.

In any event, there are 3 different parts, as I see it, to this proposition, and it seems to me that some of them are good and others are not as good and maybe others are bad, and it might be that these could be considered separately. For example, the governor shall appoint. In my opinion that is the least objectionable and the most advantageous part of this system. The governor, in fact, has been appointing judges in this state for quite a long time. I have no objection to the people who have been appointed. I think they have been good judges. As far as I know, most people feel the same. And one of the advantages of that system of the governor appointing is that the governor is elected by all the people, so the people indirectly have selected the judges, and these judges have been selected in a manner that is responsive to the will of the people at large, so that particular part of it doesn't disturb me, that the governor shall appoint. I think that whether the governor appoints or whether the judges are elected in the first place is not particularly crucial, and as a matter of fact, this might be the best way to get a judge on the bench.

The next part of it, however, is with the advice and consent of the senate, and to that I would say there is a very serious objection, extremely serious. It has worked well in the United States. There is no question about it. But we have a different experience in Michigan with advice and consent of the senate. It has worked very poorly in Michigan. It has been highly political, and we would have to expect the same thing here. We also have to consider the fact that the senate in this state has been malapportioned for quite a long time, and we have no assurance, at this time at least, that it will not be malapportioned in the future. On that basis there will be a veto by the senate, and if the senate does not represent the majority of the people, then we can see that the people who will be selected, because of the advice and consent, will be screened by a minority, and the people who will become judges will really not be responsive to the majority of the people as such. I therefore feel that, considering the nature of the senate and the experience with the senate, that feature is very inadvisable in Michigan.

As to the third feature, the retention of judges or the tenure of judges, that they shall remain in office forever, there is certainly no question in my mind that that makes them as independent as possible and, as I said yesterday, independence is a very important part of being a judge, in my opinion. But, as I also stated, that is not the only thing. There must be some way to get rid of a judge who, let's say, stops being human. He must be independent, but at the same time there must be some humility left in him. He must not get the feeling that he is in a postion of a monarch of some sort, and it seems to me all of the other plans are superior to this one on this point. In every other plan there is some way to get rid of a judge. I don't think it should be very easy to get rid of a judge, and actually none of the other ways are very easy to get rid of a judge. They are all very hard in this respect, but you can do it, whereas with the present amendment there is no way, basically, except by impeachment, and it seems to me that does go too far.

Therefore, although I feel that the first part, the appointment by the governor, is not bad, in fact is good, I believe the other 2 parts are bad and, on balance, I think we should oppose the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Yeager and others, the Chair will recognize Mr. Woolfenden.

MR. WOOLFENDEN: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I welcome an opportunity to speak on this amendment and to vote on it. It is my first choice of a method of removing a judge from political considerations. I think it has worked very effectively in the federal system, and I believe that we have ample evidence as to the distinction between the federal system and any form of elective system which is available. That evidence is available to every delegate here and to every citizen of Michigan irrespective of whether he is a member of the bar or whether he is not.

As a lawyer of 31 years, active practice in Michigan in both the federal and the state courts, I will admit that it is not, at least in my experience and view, clearly demonstrable from the evidence available to us that you get a better man on the bench initially. I know outstanding jurists that have gone on the bench by unqualified gubernatorial appointment to fill a vacancy originally, who have gone on the bench in a nonpartisan primary and then a general nonpartisan election, and who had gone on the bench by the federal system. And I will readily admit that it is not provable that you can get a demonstrably superior judge through the federal system, but I think it is clearly demonstrable from the evidence available to every citizen in Michigan that once on the bench, the federal judge is completely divorced from all other considerations, political, social or other considerations which may tend to affect his ability to give his complete and undivided attention and abilities to the work of judging the causes that come before him.

That evidence to me is in part drawn from the fact that we have all observed within the last 6 months or year that 2 outstanding judges of our state courts — and I refer specifically to Wade McCree of the Wayne county circuit court and Talbot Smith of the Michigan supreme court — have accepted appointment to the federal bench. Certainly their actions speak much louder than any words of mine as to the distinction between the 2 systems, because those men having accepted federal appointment are now free to devote themselves unqualifiedly and in the dedicated way that they both work solely at the job of being judge. I think it is vitally important to the preservation of our American institutions that we have judges who are judges and who are only expected to be judges and not men who are attractive political personalities as well as judges. The 2 do not go hand in hand necessarily.

I specifically invite the attention of the outstanding advocates of civil rights to what I am going to say now. We have finished in this convention the adoption of a bill of civil rights which I think is monumental in the history of civil rights in the United States. It is one of the things, when we are finished, that I am going to be proudest of as having been a delegate to this convention and having written the civil rights provisions that we have written into this constitution. It is clearly evident to the delegates who sincerely believe in the preservation of our civil rights that south of the Mason Dixon line there is not a single judge who took office by election who has carried out the crystal clear mandate of the United States supreme court in the field of civil rights. It is not a matter of personal courage. If he did render a decision, as he is constitutionally obliged to do, carrying out the United States supreme court mandate in the civil rights field, he would not be a judge beyond the next election — if in fact he were not ridden out of town on a rail before the election. The only judges who have measured up to their oath to support the United States constitution — and I submit the only judges who could measure up to that oath — are appointed federal judges. And I invite every delegate here to read a recent book published in November under the title of Fifty-Eight Lonely Men. It is the story in detail, case by case, instance by instance, of the progress of the cause of civil rights in the south. And the 58 lonely men who furnish the title to the book are the 58 federal judges at the district court level and the circuit court of appeals level who, thank God, have had the judicial independence and the courage to carry forward the civil rights cause for the benefit of all Americans. I think that evidence clearly distinguishes the ability of a man once on the bench to be absolutely free to devote himself to carrying out the law of the land, and I earnestly invite your consideration of this fact in your vote upon this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Martin has offered an amendment to the amendment, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Martin offers the following amendment to the amendment:

1. Amend the amendment, first sentence, after "office" by striking out the balance of the first sentence and inserting "for a period of 5 years and then and each 10 years thereafter shall run on their record and with an incumbency designation."; and in the second sentence, after "office" by striking out the balance of the second sentence and inserting "for the balance of their term and then and each 10 years thereafter shall run on their record and with an incumbency designation.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Martin to the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett. On the Martin amendment the Chair will recognize Mr. Martin.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Chairman, I offer these amendments because I think the principal objection in many people's minds to the federal system is the lifetime appointment. This is a recommendation to some people, but I think many people feel that, as far as the state courts are concerned, there should be an opportunity for the people to pass upon a judge's record at periodic intervals and for that reason the amendment strikes out the words "during good behavior" and provides that after a period of years from the date of appointment, the incumbent shall then run on his record, the question being shall he be approved or not, and he would carry an incumbency designation on the ballot. Now, the purpose of this is to give the people a look at the record. If it has been particularly bad, if the judge has done something which has been brought to the attention of the people and they really want to get rid of him, they can do it. Otherwise, with the incumbency designation, he would have a reasonable chance, perhaps a more than reasonable chance of being continued in office.

It seems to me that this method of appointment, subject to advice and consent of the senate, gives the people an opportunity to have the appointment procedure used, gives the people an opportunity also to look at the appointment through the eyes of part of the legislative body, which is a salutary check, and then gives the people a chance at a later date to pass upon the question of whether the judge has conducted himself in a proper judicial manner. I think the wording of both the Yeager amendment and of the amendment to the amendment are self explanatory and I have no further comment to make on it. But this is the federal system with a modification which would give the people an opportunity to look at the matter from time to time thereafter.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the Martin amendment, the Chair recognizes Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Martin a question through the Chair.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Martin, on this question of after 10 years when the person comes up for rejection or approval, does this remove from consideration the placement of other names with regard to the office, or is this simply a rejection or approval, or is there still some opening for people to be nominated and still run?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Martin.

MR. MARTIN: If I understand the question, this would not give an opportunity for additional nominations, no. This would be the judge running on his record. He would not be running against opponents. Now, I personally think that is the best way to do it, but I would certainly be agreeable, if the committee so felt, to see the possibility of his running against opponents. But in that case, of course, I would want to see him run with an incumbency designation.

MR. FAXON: You said both having an incumbency designation and then running on his record, and when you said "incumbency designation" I thought you meant that there might be another person running but I see not.

MR. MARTIN: Not as it is now drafted, no.

MR. FAXON: I just want to state for my own record that I oppose a person running simply against his name. I think that our tradition has been one where there has been some degree of competition in office, and the only place where I know that this is done in any widespread area is in elections conducted in the soviet union where a person runs and there is either a rejection or approval and you can't lose because there always seems to be more approvals. I would very much like to see our consideration of having people running against other people and not simply a rejection or approval.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Martin, the Chair will recognize Mr. Farnsworth.

MR. FARNSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I would speak in favor of the Martin amendment. I believe this will get the amendment before us in the form that many of us can vote for. It seems to me that now we are throwing some safeguards around the selection of justices of the supreme court that are desirable, the first one being that it will be reviewed by the senate because it is with the consent of that body. Secondly, you get a crack at them at the end of 5 years. If they haven't proven out, certainly there is an opportunity for the people to turn down that man, which I assume would make a vacancy and you could go through the same process again. If it develops at the end of 10 years that you want to turn this man down, the voters are at liberty to do so. I am very much in favor of adopting the Martin amendment to this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the Martin amendment, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Bay City, Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, there is no doubt in my mind but that the motives and aims of Delegate Martin in offering this amendment are most lofty. However, in my considered opinion, the people of the state of Michigan are opposed, and violently opposed, to any system providing for the appointment of their judges. They want to vote for them. For that reason I would vote against the Martin amendment and any appointive plan, and I urge my fellow delegates to do likewise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Speaking on the Martin amendment, the Chair will recognize Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I have been practicing law for 33 years and have been in most of the counties of this state and many other states. I am not for any soviet plan of electing judges. That is what we have here. I am surprised that such an amendment has been offered. I concur with the views of Delegate Ford on this and the other amendment which is before this committee. A judge has to have much more than legal ability; he has to be a human being. He has to be able to get along with people. He has to love people. He has to have a very humane attitude at all times.

I have observed the appointive system in many countries of Spanish speaking origin, and the arrogance that is evident in those courts and the consideration that I have seen given people has been so repugnant to me that I never could vote for an appointive system. We are in a country where the government is supposed to be by and for the people and we should go forward by giving the people greater power in electing those that judge them rather than to go backward by using the appointment system. I am against both amendments and ask that they be defeated.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the Martin amendment, Mr. Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, as I said the day before yesterday, I occasionally agree with Mr. Farnsworth. I noted that yesterday he got up and talked about the g's. I hope that, as I told him yesterday, he wouldn't go off into orbit again, and I noted that he did again today.

I certainly am opposed — though my voice may not show it, I am vehemently opposed — to such a thing as appointments of judges except in cases of vacancies or emergencies, if you so wish. I believe the people ought to elect their own judges. I don't want the same thing to happen here that happens in Europe, not just in communism, as Mr. McAllister states it, but in conservative England where they create classes in society. That is the one thing we certainly don't want. We are a democracy here. I hope we keep it that way. And I hope that the delegates here before we leave, whether it be March 31 or July 31, will take the incumbent designation away from any office unless we have a similarity of names. Outside of that, incumbency designations don't belong. The system smells.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Martin to the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the committee, I would again state that we considered this variation of the plan, many variations. It was the considered opinion of the majority of the committee that, at least as the plan stands now, the idea of running against a nonexistant opponent was not desirable. Consequently the majority of the committee rejected both the original amendment and the amendment thereto. I would urge the defeat thereof.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford, do you desire recognition on the Martin amendment?

MR. FORD: Yes. I wish to oppose the Martin amendment. It doesn't do anything to cure the problems that we have talked about for 2 days here. It merely attempts to put a very thin gloss of varnish over something that is a rose by any other name. I also oppose the principal amendment itself.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Martin to the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett. The secretary will read the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Martin's amendment is:

[The amendment to the amendment was again read by the secretary. For text, see above, page 1347.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: I would ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister requests a division on the Martin amendment. Is the request supported? It is supported.

Mrs. Judd.

MRS. JUDD: Just speaking on the Martin amendment, 2 points: I think we are talking as though we were trying to institute a new kind of plan when talking about appointment by the governor. I think we forget that we already have actually an appointive plan, as was indicated yesterday; that probably a majority of our judges are appointed by the governor, but without any restriction, and this is simply an effort to face up realistically to this fact and to improve the method of appointment.

Secondly, I would like to ask Delegate McAllister if he would be willing in his previous speech to substitute for his words Spain and soviet the words federal government, because this is not a Spanish or a soviet plan. This was the plan instituted in 1787 in America, and I think we can hardly think of George Washington as being a communist.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister

MR. McALLISTER: This plan is a little different, I think, than your federal plan. I don't think the people of Michigan want it. I do say that we do have a federal court appointment plan. It has been in effect, and very definitely the reason for that is that it would be impossible or almost prohibitive for any individual to run for a federal job in a state the size of Michigan. The cost would be too great. And I think that is the reason that it is based on. But as for this plan in the state of Michigan, I don't change my mind a great deal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Faxon, do you desire further recognition on the Martin amendment?

MR. FAXON: Just a comment to the previous speaker — not Mr. McAllister, but the lady from Grand Rapids. I believe you will notice that in the 1787 constitution the people who wrote that document had not at all envisioned the kind of courts and federal court system that later developed, and as a matter of fact the language in the 1787 document is quite clear as not having any such powers as the courts later claimed they did have.

I think that the record of constitutional history in our country reveals that there was no such intent on the part of the framers to give to the courts the power of judicial review or reviewing the actions of the legislatures in the respective states, and that the question didn't really come around to the point where we think of the courts today until after the civil war period.

I would, furthermore, like to point out that much analogy is made here. Reference has been made to appointment and to the English system. I think in this regard we have a system of checks and balances of supposedly separate branches. In the English system it is all supposedly in one area. The ultimate court of high appeal in England, of course, is the house of lords which is supposed to be representative of the nation. We don't have an appeal from our supreme court to the legislature as you might find in the English system. I think that our safeguard in this country, at least in our state, has been through some form of election by the people, and this has proved fairly effective in the states. I think that one could justifiably argue that at times the federal bench has not been responsive because of its appointive features and good behavior, and that in many periods of history following the civil war, the federal courts acted in a way to deter or prevent states from effectuating their functions and carrying out their responsibilities through their declaring of state acts unconstitutional.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the Martin amendment to the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett. Is there any delegate who would desire to have the amendment read again?

DELEGATES: Division.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: A division has been called for. Is there support? Sufficient number up. Those in favor of the amendment — Mr. Ostrow, the Chair had understood that you desired recognition on the main question. Mr. Ostrow seeks recognition on the Martin amendment.

MR. OSTROW: I oppose the amendment and the amendment which it amends. Everyone is speaking about removing judges from political pressures. I asked you yesterday to look at the Michigan Supreme Court Reports and try to see how many cases you could possibly find that had any political implications or where there could possibly be any political pressures.

Now, how either this or the federal system divorces a man from political pressures I don't know. I want to remind you of a judge who was in the papers for quite some time. His name is Feikens. Two attorneys general, 2 presidents of the United States wanted him to continue to be a judge; 1 senator said no. Now, in spite of anything you say, a federal judge is appointed for political reasons. It is a matter of senatorial patronage. They call it senatorial privilege or courtesy. You cannot be appointed to a federal district court without the blessing of your senator. Now you are going to remove a judge from politics by having him appointed by the governor. How do you get an appointment from the governor?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ostrow, the Chair will request that you confine your remarks, if you would, at this time to the Martin amendment.

MR. OSTROW: The Martin amendment is part of that, because first he is appointed and second he runs.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The only question currently before the committee is the Martin amendment dealing with the election subsequent to appointment.

MR. OSTROW: All right. Here is this man whom you have divorced from politics. He has to run. He has to be elected. Now, how does he get elected? He has to go to the voters just the way the judges do now. He has to campaign. He has to have campaign funds. He has to have campaign workers. I submit that a judge will be a good judge whether he is elected under the present system or has to run under Mr. Martin's system. Take a look at the judges that we have had in Michigan. I practiced law for 37 years legally. For 3 years before that it was our practice while going to law school to try justice court cases. I wouldn't admit it until I was admitted. (laughter) Take our Michigan judges and take our Michigan federal judges; our state judges compare favorably with any federal judge we ever had, with one exception, my favorite, my former boss, Raymond Starr. Of course, to my mind, nobody was as great as he was or is. But this system will no more remove a judge from politics than the present system will, and if a judge is going to be influenced, he will be influenced under either system.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Martin. A division has been ordered. Those in favor will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the Martin amendment, the yeas are 35; the nays are 90.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is not adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mrs. Judd offers the following amendment to the pending amendment:

1. Amend the amendment, first sentence, after "consent of the" by striking out "senate" and inserting "legislature in joint session"; so that the language will then read, "The governor shall, with the advice and consent of the legislature in joint session, appoint the justices of the supreme court . . . ."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mrs. Judd to the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett. On her amendment the Chair will recognize the lady from Grand Rapids, Mrs. Judd.

MRS. JUDD: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, this is an effort at trying to find a consensus of the committee as a whole on the problem of selecting judges, and possibly this is somewhat more palatable to a good many members of this committee than simply advice and consent of the senate. Incidentally, it happens to be the proposal in the model state constitution in its present form. Therefore, it seemed to me worth a try.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mrs. Judd. Mr. Downs.

MR. DOWNS: Mr. Chairman, I am not yielding my opportunity to speak on the original amendment. I would just like to compliment Mrs. Judd. She is getting closer (laughter) but not quite close enough. I think if you read the model constitution —and I yield to her; I am sure she has read it more recently— when they talk about advice and consent of the legislature, it is a legislature based on the one man, one vote concept. I assume this is a preface to our discussion on the executive branch, so I will not belabor the point or be out of order, but say that I compliment the delegate from Grand Rapids on her progress, and I hope it continues so we can see eye to eye when we get to the heart of advice and consent. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mrs. Judd, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Bay City, Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Well, Mr. Chairman and delegates, if the lady from Grand Rapids would amend her amendment to provide for the appointment of judges on the advice and consent of the people, I would support it. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the Judd amendment, the Chair recognizes Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, I cannot speak for the other 2 gentlemen who joined with me in offering the original amendment, but for myself I certainly have no objection to this being a matter for the legislature to pass upon. What they are interested in is a review of the governor's appointment which does not exist under the present system, and this certainly would be, in my own mind at least, a very acceptable review. We have contemplated the fact that even if the governor and the senate, or in this case the legislature, were of the same party—and there are quite a few of us in this room who assume that this situation will come into existence—there still would be a minority group which would look very carefully at this man, and in the spotlight of public opinion would determine whether or not he had qualifications to sit upon the bench. As I say, individually I would accept this as an appropriate amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: It seems to me that this amendment does leave the advice and consent to the duly elected representatives of the people who should be informed and able to determine whether or not the appointment is proper and if the nominee has the proper qualifications, and for that reason I would support this amendment wholeheartedly.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mrs. Judd to strike out of the Yeager-Stamm-Everett amendment "senate" and insert "legislature in joint session." Those in favor of the amendment will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is not adopted. The question is now on the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett, on which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Sterrett.

MR. STERRETT: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I have heard various arguments here today for and against the appointive system of supreme court justices and, unlike Dr. Nord, when I came up here I didn't have any particular plan in mind. I had an open mind. However, I feel that in inserting all of these various amendments to this amendment, we are doing nothing but trying to set up something that is in between, and in this situation I don't think we can be in between. I feel that we either have to go along with an appointive system the same as we have in our federal courts or definitely go the other way. The appointive system we have in our federal courts has been tried for years. It has been good for the United States, as has already been pointed out. I see no reason why this couldn't be good for the state of Michigan. I would like to point out to you that all but Justices Black and Kelly have been appointed by the governor of the state of Michigan at one time or another, all of our present justices.

Now, if we are not going to accept this plan — this plan is an attempt to make this a nonpartisan situation — then I think we should definitely go the other way and have a nomination by the party, a partisan election of the justices, and permit them to be elected through the party. But I would prefer to see this plan in force because I would like to keep it as much as possible on a nonpartisan basis. In this plan there is no reference to partisan or nonpartisan. We will never know in the future whether it will be a governor of one party or the other.

If we have reapportionment, the complexion of our senate and our legislature in general could change and we will definitely not have any idea in the future which party would be ruling this situation. Therefore, I feel that this would be the best for the people of the state of Michigan.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ostrow, do you now seek recognition on the main question? Mr. Ostrow passes. Judge Leibrand. Judge Leibrand passes. Mr. Martin, do you seek recognition on the main question? Mr. Martin passes. Mr. Downs, do you seek recognition on the main question?

MR. DOWNS: Yes. Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I hope that the oncoming cold will keep me shorter than usual. I would like to speak to one point that was raised by Delegate Woolfenden this morning, and I believe Delegate Farnsworth raised it yesterday in the memorandum attached to his recommendation for the so called Missouri plan. This was the point on the matter of civil rights — and I think I summarize them correctly — where they both pointed out that the 58 lonely federal judges in the deep south carried out the decisions of the United States supreme court where the elected state judges there did not necessarily do so. That statement on the surface is perfectly accurate. I only wish to point out that when those of us speak of elected judges, we mean elections in which all the citizens have a right to vote. My own feeling is that if there were elections in the deep south where every citizen had the right to vote, we would find that the state justices of those state courts would be just as vigilant if not more so in supporting the principles of the United States constitution. I did not bring that up, but since that question had been raised, I thought the answer should be made.

I do think that the question here is probably one of the most basic ones in our whole judicial system; that is, whether judges should be elected by the people or whether they should be appointed some way, whether it is the Missouri plan or some other form, for an indefinite period. And this one is one where it has been pointed out there can be and have been arguments on both sides of the question. My own feeling is that as far as state courts go, we do have judges with more compassion and more understanding when periodically they must go back to the people as the final judge. Now, this is often called politics. I assume the definition of "politics" is what the other fellow does. What we do is "statesmanship."

But judges aren't like other people. They are not IBM machines that have powers put around them. We talk about the federal system, and I think largely it has been pointed out it depends on which person was making the evaluation and which time in American history. We can go back to Thomas Jefferson's vigorous support of an elective system and opposition to an appointive system. I feel that history shows certainly in Michigan our elective system has worked. I am the first to concede that it is a combination with the appointive, with the governor having the appointive power, but the very fact that there is to be an election would, it seems to me, require either the party conventions currently making nominations or the governor making an appointment to keep in mind the ultimate wishes of the people. I therefore oppose the amendment that has been introduced. Thank you very much.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The lady from Livonia, Mrs. Conklin.

MRS. CONKLIN: Not being an attorney, I hesitated to even get into the discussion of the supreme court or any other facet of our judicial system. I am even at the point where I have to write down my thoughts so I don't get up here and forget them. I am frank to admit that I have been torn one way and then another by all the discussions that we have had here the last 2 days. My only hope was that we could present to the people of this state a better plan than that which is now in effect. The real problem before us, if we are honest with ourselves, is how to free our supreme court justices from political pressures. You know and I know only too well that if a man is supported by a particular element of our society, he needs those votes if he is going to run for office again next time, and some of his decisions are going to be made with that thought in mind.

Judge Leibrand has said the people in the state are violently opposed to appointment of their judges. I would say that I have no indication of this from the people in my district. I honestly believe all that the people want on their bench is an uncontrolled, unbiased judge, not a politician with a vote-getting personality.

I would like to point out to the laymen, if there are any left in the room, that this amendment is offered by 2 laymen and one attorney, which fact alone, I think, warrants our consideration. I urge the support of the Stamm-Yeager-Everett amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Sterrett.

MR. STERRETT: Mr. Chairman, delegates, this is the last time I will speak on this; it's a promise. (laughter) We just heard Delegate Downs say that the election of the judges should be the right of the people. I just wonder if it is left to the people or to the party which can persuade them the most. I remember in the 1960 election these 2 supreme court justices were supposed to be nonpartisan, but Souris' name was on the Democratic ticket at the polls and Breakey's name was on the Republican ticket at the polls.

There is a lot of pressure put on the voter. And I am sorry that Delegate Hart is not here today, because I recall that when we gave a talk in a group prior to the election to con con, I raised the question to this group, "How many can name just by last name your present supreme court judges?" Not one could. I asked another question, "How many can name one and give me his legal background and qualifications as a supreme court judge?" Not one could. Now, what I would like to ask you is, in the election of supreme court justices, are we really doing the people a favor? Are we giving them a right? I don't feel we are. I feel we would be doing them more justice by appointing the supreme court judges, as this amendment to the committee proposal provides. Therefore, I would like to support this and I hope that I will have all of your support.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I think everything has been said that could be said about the contrast between election and appointment, but Mrs. Conklin strikes a note of concern in me when she suggests that what the people really want from this constitutional convention is a better system than we have and then she goes on to add, a system with unbossed and uncontrolled judges. I think that is substantially her language. I hope that she doesn't really seriously mean for one moment that the people of this state are dissatisfied with their present judicial system or with the quality of our judiciary. This discussion about unbossed judges and politics with respect to judges would be proper, in my mind, in the convention in Alaska where they had no precedent to go by, or it would have been proper in a state like New Jersey where they had a terrible scandal in their courts and were primarily concerned during their constitutional convention with the reform of a bad system because of bad people in the system as well, but it certainly has no place in Michigan where we have a long history of a clean, unbossed, independent judiciary.

I want to say once more that throughout the United States they hold our system up as an example of a good system. This is one of the places where we can be proud and hold our head up above all of the other states. As recently as December of this last year, Fortune magazine, in an article which is a scathing criticism of the judiciary throughout the United States, held up Michigan as one of the 3 best states in the union as far as its judicial system is concerned; and this is not based on a guess, this is based on a long period of study of the actual history of the court and our court's freedom, all the way from the bottom of the system up through the supreme court, from anything remotely resembling a controlled or machine politics type judiciary. And this goes back, if you will, long before we were electing judges nonpartisan, because we have only been electing judges on a nonpartisan basis since 1939, some of them since 1937. And even when we had the judges directly in politics with direct partisan nomination and partisan election, we have no history that would substantiate any accusation that the system has produced a bossed judiciary. This has never happened in Michigan. We had absolutely no evidence upon which to predicate the assumption that it could happen in the future.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I am prompted to make a few remarks at this point because of what was said by Mr. Downs and by Mr. Ostrow. We have heard it said here rather often this morning that the federal system of appointments has turned out to be in every respect satisfactory. I don't want my silence to be construed as an agreement with that statement. Do we have to be blind to the extent to which judicial appointments have become political wares the same as any other kind of appointment?

In conclusion I want to read you something, and I feel it necessary in self defense to ask that you do not rise to express resentment over this sentiment until I have told you who said it:

> To consider the judges as the ultimate arbiters of all constitutional questions is a very dangerous doctrine indeed and one which would place us under the despotism of an oligarchy.
> Our judges are as honest as other men and no more so. They have with others the same passions for party, for power and the privileges of their courts. The judiciary is the subtle core of sappers and miners constantly working underground to undermine the foundations of our confederated fabric.

He is talking about the federal judiciary.

> They are construing our constitution from a coordination of a general and special government to a general and supreme one alone. This will lay all things at their feet. We shall see if they are bold enough to take the daring strides that 5 lawyers have lately taken. If they do, then I will say that against this every man should raise his voice and more, should uplift his arm. Having found from experience that impeachment is an impracticable thing, a mere scarecrow, they consider themselves secure for life.

That was written in 1820 by Thomas Jefferson.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Detroit, Mr. Binkowski.

MR. BINKOWSKI: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I think Judge Dehnke has expressed some of my thoughts certainly better than I could. However, I would like to go on record for the election of judges.

Basically, I feel that judges are a bit more human if they have to come back to the people every 6 or 8 years, and I think that perhaps some of the dreamers in this convention are out of step in thinking that either judges live in a vacuum or that their decisions are made in a vacuum. Judges are human; they have prejudices; they have likes; they have dislikes.

These people who are hollering about nonpartisanship — I really don't understand nonpartisanship and perhaps somebody can explain it to me off the floor of this convention. Every one of us to the convention was elected on a partisan ticket. I think if you go through the biographies of most of us, you will find that in most cases we have a rich history of political activity, and I think this is very good and this is very sound. I for one believe in a vigorous 2 party system and will speak more upon that at a different time.

If it is necessary, I would be very happy to have partisan election of judges. However, I wonder if, according to Mr. Sterrett's comment, he is kind of fearful of this and whether some of the people here fear that perhaps they don't have a chance. I don't know. But I certainly am against this amendment and for the election of our judges.

Also I would like to raise another point that perhaps has been lost in all of our discussions, and that is this old item of flexibility. I submit that under the present language we have the greatest amount of flexibility. I think this is one of the standards that any of the proponents of a new plan have to bear the burden of proof in showing to this convention where their plan has more flexibility in the language for the future.

I think that Mr. Barthwell and Mr. Garvin have brought out the fact that our present method of electing judges is all spelled out by legislation. It is not in the constitution. I raise the question, "Why do you have to have it in the constitution?"

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Dr. DeVries.

MR. DeVRIES: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I really don't know what the people want. I can't intuit these things. Basically, I guess I am a social scientist, so I like to measure what people's attitudes are. We did this in Kent county last year, and I can only generalize about Kent county and how some of the people there who were polled felt about the supreme court. When you ask them about the present system, 7 per cent of them tell you that they want to keep it, which indicates to me some apparent satisfaction. You ask them about a partisan-nonpartisan arrangement like we have now and you get a 7 per cent return. You ask them if they want an all partisan primary and general election; 20 per cent of the people favor this kind of system. You ask them about an all nonpartisan arrangement; about 20 per cent. You ask them if they want the supreme court appointed; 54 per cent of the people in my county polled want an appointed supreme court. Now, for this and many other good reasons already cited, I support the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hoxie.

MR. HOXIE: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I rise to oppose the amendment that is before us for consideration. We have heard considerable discussion this morning about the federal plan. You have heard statements from various delegates why they do not believe it is practical for a state to adopt such a system, with which I wholeheartedly agree. I have in my hand a list of the methods of selection of justices throughout this country. Under the plan as proposed, we find 4 states: Delaware, New Jersey, Puerto Rico and Hawaii. I ask you, is this an experiment that we are going to enter into? Why, through the 175 years that we have had our federal system, if it is good for states, haven't more states adopted this type of selection of our supreme court justices?

I think when you consider that, you must realize that this system has not been adopted by the states because they felt it was not good. And in looking at the 4 states that have adopted it — and I guess Alaska can be included because this is a report from the Book of the States for 1960-61 — I think you cannot help but realize that it has its fallacies and that it should not be adopted in Michigan as a basis of selection of our justices of the supreme court.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the mover of the amendment, Mr. Yeager.

MR. YEAGER: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, we have had considerable discussion now at this point on this question of the federal system. I understand there are some other amendments up there a little different in character, and if possible I would like to see us take a vote at this time, and I request a division, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Yeager requests a division on the amendment. Those in favor of a division will rise. The demand is supported. The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett. Does any delegate desire to have it read? A division has been ordered. Those who favor the Yeager-Stamm-Everett amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett, the yeas are 30; the nays are 95.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is not adopted. Are there further amendments to section a?

SECRETARY CHASE: Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett now offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 6, after "justices" by changing the comma to a period and striking out the balance of the section and inserting "The governor shall, with the advice and consent of the legislature, appoint the justices of the supreme court who shall hold office for a term of 8 years. At the end of such 8 year term, such justices desiring to succeed themselves may nominate themselves for reelection. Other candidates may be nominated on a nonpartisan basis as provided by law. Justices in office on the effective date of this constitution shall hold office as if appointed on the date of their last election.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment now offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Yeager.

MR. YEAGER: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, this amendment is an attempt to answer the objections of those who favor election of judges and those who think appointment is the best initial means of selection in a combination plan. The plan allows the governor to make appointment subject to advice and consent of the total legislature for the initial 8 year term. This means in effect that we will not have an appointment by just one man as we now have, but that in effect, if it were the present lgeislature constituted, it would be 145 people — that is 144 legislators and 1 governor. After the initial 8 year period, each justice can run for reelection upon his own nomination, and there is a provision for having other people in the race. It provides for staggering of terms by confirming the balance of the elective term of the incumbents.

To those who are interested in a plan for election by zones, I would simply point out that we are making provision for an appellate court to be elected on the zone basis which is going to take a considerable amount of work off the present supreme court. I therefore urge the adoption of this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, I would like to second the remarks of Mr. Yeager and recall to your attention some of the material we covered yesterday, not all of it by any means, but some of it. Yesterday we tried to determine for ourselves whether there was a satisfactory elective system available for this constitution, and the majority of the members of this convention have indicated quite clearly that they cannot find an acceptable elective system. I am not going to rehash all of the pros or cons for those which have been offered, but a majority of this convention will not accept them. So we have to look elsewhere.

Mr. Yeager, Mr. Stamm and some 27 other people in this convention agreed that the federal system was the best. But 30 is not enough. We have to find a system which will do what all of us want to do, 2 things: first, provide a means of getting to the bench the best possible men; and second, providing a means which is going to command a majority support in this convention. It must accomplish both purposes, and nobody has yet suggested any elective plan which can do either.

Now, this system will certainly have a strong tendency to get to the bench the type of man who is not now reached. At the very outset of this debate today Mr. Yeager pointed out that we don't suggest that all politics will be eliminated by an appointive system. As a matter of fact, for myself, I am not so sure I would want to eliminate all politics if it were possible, and concededly it is not possible. But what we can do is attract to the bench by gubernatorial appointment men who are not now considered either because they are not now going to go to a partisan convention and seek support of that partisan convention, whatever their politics may be, or are overlooked simply because they don't have enough adherents within a patronage committee to suggest their names to the governor. And remember again that if the legislature must review these appointments, the governor is on notice that whoever he appoints is going to have to bear scrutiny. His appointment is going to be reviewed in public by legislators, yes, but also by the press and by the people, and he has to be able to defend that choice. The man is going to have to have stature. He is going to have to have experience and ability.

I am not suggesting that all of the men being appointed today don't qualify under these terms. Many of them, I am sure, would. But what we are getting away from is the uncontrolled appointment by a governor of anybody who suits the patronage committee of his party — and I am not particularly concerned which party, because to me the Supreme Court of the state of Michigan has to rise above patronage committees, and if it doesn't we as a group have failed in our task. I submit to you also, suggestions have been made here that the people want this kind of a system or they want some other kind of a system. I think we should keep it in mind that the people want leadership from this convention. They are not simply suggesting that we write in their prejudices or their beliefs; they are demanding of us that we as a group determine for ourselves what in our best judgment would provide the best framework for government that this state can have, and if we constantly are fearful that we will offend somebody, we might as well close up shop and go home because we cannot make improvement unless we do offend some people.

In the final analysis, though, the vast bulk of people are represented here by 144 of us, not by lobbyists, not by paid letters or telegrams, but by us, and, unless we assume our responsibilities right here and now, we will have failed them. I don't think there is any member of this committee who is ready now to admit failure.

This is a method which is a distinct improvement over the present system, which is an improvement over any elective system which has been suggested, and if it is acceptable to a majority of us, we can turn to it with pride and say we have done for the state of Michigan what we were sent here to do.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett, Mr. Young.

MR. YOUNG: Mr. Chairman, this committee has decisively rejected first the district plan, then the Missouri plan and more recently the federal plan. This plan which is now presented to us is an amalgamation of all 3 plans. And for all the very good reasons that have been presented here in opposition first to the district plan, then to the Missouri plan and finally to the federal plan, I oppose this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Dr. Nord.

MR. NORD: Mr. Chairman, speaking on any proposal on the judiciary apparently is a very difficult problem because you can hardly ever find 2 or 3 people who do agree with you and you are bound to make enemies of your friends. But in any event, I would like to commend the sponsors of this amendment for continuing to work toward a suitable solution to the problem. I don't believe that they have quite made it, and I would like to suggest what I think is wrong with it and what I think is right with it and ask them whether they would consider making certain changes in it.

As to the appointment by the governor, as I said before, I have no objection to it. That is basically what happens now. I am in favor of that. As to the reelection system which they have provided now in which the candidate or the incumbent judge can nominate himself and run against other candidates, I believe that is a step in the right direction too. As a matter of compromise I think that combines the best features of both plans that we have had before us.

The objection I have to the plan as it now is submitted is that there is to be advise and consent of the legislature, and the objection is based on 2 things: one, that the legislature will not be properly apportioned. It will not be the will of the people. The governor will be the will of the people. The legislature will not. That being the case, I don't want the will of the people to be affected or diluted in any way. Further, I see no reason why the legislature should have anything to do with the selection of judges if we can avoid it. I believe Judge Leibrand was absolutely correct when he stated that the only people who should give advice and consent are the people themselves, the people at large, the people of the entire state. They should give advice and consent.

Now, the question is how can they do it? They can't do it 8 years later as is suggested here. I believe they could do it if it was a very short time afterwards. In other words, what I am suggesting to the sponsors of this amendment is that they strike the advice and consent of the legislature entirely and shorten the first term to, say 2 years so that the people could give their advice and consent after a brief period, but a period long enough so that they can have a basis for their judgment. Let them have a short term, say 2 years. Then let the people vote in exactly the way that was suggested by the sponsors of the amendment. If the judge is elected, then the next term would not be for 2 years but it would be possibly for 8 years or maybe 6 years. That could be worked out. But the point is I think that, as Judge Leibrand has indicated, if there is to be advice and consent at all on an appointive system, I believe most of us feel that the advice and consent must be by the people and only by the people, not by some other body such as the legislature. That could be done — at least I think it could — with a short first term.

As the amendment now stands, I am opposed to it. If the sponsors wish to make changes in the direction I have mentioned, possibly they could work out something I could favor.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly has offered an amendment to the amendment, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Miss Donnelly's amendment to the amendment is as follows:

1. Amend the amendment after "a term of" by striking out "8" and inserting "2"; and after "end of such" by striking out "8" and inserting "2"; and after "law.", by inserting "The elected justice shall hold office for a term of 8 years."; so the language will then read:

> The governor shall, with the advice and consent of the legislature, appoint the justices of the supreme court who shall hold office for a term of 2 years. At the end of such 2 year term, such justices desiring to succeed themselves may nominate themselves for reelection. Other candidates may be nominated on a nonpartisan basis as provided by law. The elected justice shall hold office for a term of 8 years. Justices in office on the effective date of this constitution shall hold office as if appointed on the date of their last election.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the lady from Highland Park, Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: I think the purpose of this amendment is fairly clear. We are besieged with difficulties, as everybody knows, on how best to select our supreme court justices. I basically prefer nonpartisan statewide elections throughout, but I know that it is apparently financially an idealistic situation and would allow only the most wealthy to seek this because otherwise people must have financial support. This selection by the governor is not unknown. That is what we basically have now. They basically hold office until the next time for election. All this provision does, in my opinion, is limit the time they shall be there by taking it from an 8 year and putting it back to a 2 year term. Thus the governor has the check publicly on his appointment and would have to, as the other movers on this believe, go through a certain spotlight.

At the moment the governor appoints under the advice of those who are very, very close to this governor. The people of the state, I believe, have a right to act. At this moment they only act against an incumbent who the governor has appointed without much aid from the people. This provision would allow the legislature in joint session to act, but their provision would be for a 2 year term. The individual then would run. Then the people, after the 2 year term, would have had an opportunity to judge their performance in office. Instead of sealing them in for 8 years, which the main amendment does, this seals them in for only 2 years. Then they must run for election. They do run against someone, as the other amendment has. The only thing this amendment does is cut down the amount of time. These judges appointed by the governor and cleared by both houses hold this office for a 2 year term, and from then on they are out against the public like anybody else. They have the incumbency designation. They have had the 2 years. They have had the appointment screening process. They probably would never be defeated. But the people have a chance to move within this 2 year period, and the original appointment has been thoroughly screened. I therefore move the support of this amendment to the amendment and move the main amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly, would you yield to Mrs. Conklin for a question?

MISS DONNELLY: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mrs. Conklin.

MRS. CONKLIN: Miss Donnelly — Ann — I just want to ask a question. I know we haven't debated the executive article yet but it seems the general intent around here is that the governor should serve a 4 year term so that he has a better chance to present his plans and become better known, perhaps, to the public, and I just wondered in a 2 year period how many of the average citizens of the state are going to know anything more about their judge than they do at the beginning of the 2 year term, and why not make it 4 years? Is there any particular reason for picking 2 years?

MISS DONNELLY: The reason I picked 2 years is because I believe the term of office of 8 years for the supreme court justice is proper. Taking a 4 year, it is 50 per cent. This advice and consent and nomination by the governor then would run for the length of the term of the governor, but they are sealed in for a 4 year term. The people cannot act.

I put it on the basis of a 2 year term on the theory that you shouldn't hold them in for 50 per cent of the time. On this amendment they will have 25 per cent of their time there. The people, in my opinion, will have an opportunity to observe how these individuals have conducted themselves. The fact that the governor is in for a 4 year term — let's assume he is and that provision passes — I do not believe there is necessarily any reason to make the supreme court go on a corollary. In other words, I go back to my first thought: this is 25 per cent of the time. I think 50 per cent of the time is too long for the people not to have a chance to act.

MRS. CONKLIN: I just feel they aren't related with the term of the governor. If you understand my question, I don't think they are related, except that you have felt that a 4 year term would allow the people to begin to know something about the person involved, and I just wonder what could a supreme court justice do that maybe wouldn't be something pretty terrible where he would hit the front page of the paper that the average citizen in a 2 year period would ever know anything about him, and it seems to me they ought to serve a little bit longer where something at least might come up before the public's attention.

MISS DONNELLY: Well, I see your point. I don't think it takes a 2 year term for the people to know what the governor is doing. I don't agree with your premise in the first instance. I think there are other good reasons for the governor to act for 4 years. Your basic premise, I think, is false to me as to why the governor should have a 4 year term. The people can know before that, in my opinion. I think he should have more time to get a job done, perhaps. But it still goes back to how long should these appointees be sealed in. They would be sealed in, under my amendment, for 2 years. This is ¼ of their term.

I could see the 4 year argument. I just believe that 50 per cent is maybe too long to seal them in. The people should have a right to act before that time if they wish to act. I would say that 99 per cent of the time the people will not act. The incumbent will not be defeated. But the incumbent has originally been thoroughly screened, we like to think, in a public spot. They have had the 2 years. They would run with the incumbency designation. They thus have a great deal of protection, but they are not sealed in. The people may do something else. Someone may oppose them. And this is just an attempt to give more control to the people over the present system than we basically have now. They don't have it now. There is no airing of the appointment now.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will advise that he has 5 speakers seeking recognition on the Donnelly amendment, one speaker seeking recognition on the main question. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, in view of the hour and the number of speakers just stated, I move the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves the committee do now rise. Those in favor will say aye; opposed, contrary.

The motion prevails and the committee will rise.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, President Nisbet resumed the Chair.]

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration several matters of which the secretary will give a detailed report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 91, A proposal pertaining to the supreme court; has considered several amendments thereto; has come to no final resolution thereon. This completes the report of the committee of the whole.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Are there any announcements?

SECRETARY CHASE: I have the following announcements:

The motion prevails. Mr. Van Dusen.

[Whereupon, Mr. Van Dusen assumed the Chair to preside as chairman of the committee of the whole.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will be in order.

The question before the committee is the Donnelly amendment to the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett to Committee Proposal 91. For the benefit of our visitors, the committee of the whole is considering the matter of selecting justices of the supreme court of this state. On the Donnelly amendment, the Chair will recognize Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: At this time I wish to withdraw that amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly withdraws her amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett. On that amendment the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Saginaw, Mr. Shackleton. Excuse me. Mr. Yeager, did you seek recognition?

MR. YEAGER: I didn't know that you were going to call on another speaker, Mr. Chairman. I simply wanted to request a division if the vote was to be taken.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Shackleton, if you could defer your point for just a moment, Mr. Yeager requests a division. Is the demand supported? It is supported. Mr. Shackleton, you may proceed.

MR. SHACKLETON: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, we have heard a lot on this floor about discrimination. I have heard no good, sane, sound reason against discrimination. But that works 2 ways. One of the biggest minorities in the state is lawyers, and so long as there is a provision for incumbent after the name of a supreme court justice or a justice of the peace running, or any other officer, or the provision for self nomination, unless I can find someone that can give me a good, sane reason, I would be highly opposed to it. I don't see why they should have that advantage over a sheriff, a county clerk or a dog catcher if he is running for office. It certainly would be a distinct advantage.

Dr. DeVries pointed out this morning in his area no one knew who the justices were anyway. So they should not have that particular advantage, and I would be opposed to either one of those designations in any provision in the constitution until we can get a sane reason for it.

The reason they are on a pedestal, apparently, is because they themselves and the attorneys have placed them there, not the general public or the voting public.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Yeager, Stamm and Everett. Mr. Danhof, do you seek recognition?

MR. DANHOF: We would like to have it read before we vote on it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The secretary will read the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment offered is as follows:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment as so read. A division has been ordered. Those in favor of the amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment, the yeas are 32; the nays are 89.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is not adopted. Are there further amendments to section a of Committee Proposal 91?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Kuhn offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 6, after "Sec. a.", by striking out the balance of the section and inserting "The supreme court shall consist of 9 justices. They shall be elected for 8 year terms, and not more than 3 justices shall go out of office at the same time.

Justices shall be nominated and elected at nonpartisan elections, conducted as provided by law. The legislature may provide for nomination and election by districts. Incumbent justices may secure their nomination by filing an affidavit of intention to run as shall be provided by law.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Kuhn, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Kuhn.

MR. IVERSON: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

MR. IVERSON: I move at this time to pass further consideration of Committee Proposal 91 at least temporarily if not beyond the consideration of the balance of the judicial article.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Iverson moves to pass further consideration of Committee Proposal 91 until the remaining proposals of the judicial article have been considered by the committee of the whole. Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, I can't say that it is easy to form an opinion as to just what this will accomplish. I understand that there is considerable confusion among the delegates about just why this would be put over. There certainly is in this corner. However, if we are going to pass this, then we will have to pass the next proposal too, and if he wants to pass the proposals on both the supreme court and the intermediate court of appeals, we would have no objection.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Iverson?

MR. IVERSON: Yes, I will agree to that.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Iverson's motion is amended so that he now moves the further consideration of Committee Proposals 91 and 92 be deferred until following consideration of the remaining proposals relating to the judicial article. Those in favor of Mr. Iverson's motion will say aye; opposed, no.

The motion prevails. The secretary will read Committee Proposal 93.

SECRETARY CHASE: Item 4 on the calendar, from the committee on judicial branch, by Mr. Danhof, chairman, Committee Proposal 93, A proposal pertaining to the circuit court. A substitute for sections 8, 9, 10 and 11 of article VII.

Following is Committee Proposal 93 as read by the secretary, and the reasons submitted in support thereof:

The committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Sec. a. THE STATE SHALL BE DIVIDED INTO JUDICIAL CIRCUITS ALONG COUNTY LINES IN EACH OF WHICH THERE SHALL BE ELECTED ONE, OR WHEN PROVIDED BY LAW, MORE THAN ONE CIRCUIT JUDGE. A CIRCUIT COURT SHALL BE HELD AT LEAST 4 TIMES IN EACH YEAR IN EVERY COUNTY ORGANIZED FOR JUDICIAL PURPOSES. EACH CIRCUIT JUDGE SHALL HOLD COURT IN THE COUNTY OR COUNTIES WITHIN THE CIRCUIT IN WHICH HE IS ELECTED, AND IN OTHER CIRCUITS AS MAY BE PROVIDED BY SUPREME COURT RULE OR BY LAW. THE NUMBER OF JUDGES MAY BE CHANGED AND CIRCUITS MAY BE CREATED, ALTERED AND DISCONTINUED BY LAW AND THE NUMBER OF JUDGES SHALL BE CHANGED AND CIRCUITS SHALL BE CREATED, ALTERED AND DISCONTINUED ON RECOMMENDATION OF THE SUPREME COURT TO REFLECT CHANGES IN THE JUDICIAL BUSINESS. NO CHANGE IN THE NUMBER OF JUDGES NOR ALTERATION OR DISCONTINUANCE OF A CIRCUIT SHALL HAVE THE EFFECT OF REMOVING A JUDGE FROM OFFICE DURING HIS TERM.

Sec. b. CIRCUIT JUDGES SHALL BE NOMINATED AND ELECTED AT NONPARTISAN ELECTIONS AS PROVIDED BY LAW. THE TERM OF CIRCUIT JUDGES SHALL BE 6 YEARS. IN CIRCUITS HAVING MORE THAN ONE JUDGE THE TERMS OF OFFICE SHALL BE ARRANGED TO PROVIDE THAT THEY WILL EXPIRE ON A STAGGERED BASIS.

Sec. c. CIRCUIT COURTS SHALL HAVE: ORIGINAL JURISDICTION IN ALL MATTERS NOT PROHIBITED BY LAW; APPELLATE JURISDICTION FROM ALL INFERIOR COURTS AND TRIBUNALS AS PRESCRIBED BY SUPREME COURT RULE: TO ISSUE, HEAR, AND DETERMINE PREROGATIVE AND REMEDIAL WRITS; SUPERVISORY AND GENERAL CONTROL OVER INFERIOR COURTS AND TRIBUNALS WITHIN THEIR RESPECTIVE JURISDICTIONS, IN ACCORDANCE WITH SUPREME COURT RULES; AND JURISDICTION OF OTHER CASES AND MATTERS AS THE SUPREME COURT SHALL BY RULE PRESCRIBE.

Sec. d. THE CLERK OF EACH COUNTY ORGANIZED FOR JUDICIAL PURPOSES SHALL BE CLERK OF THE CIRCUIT COURT FOR SUCH COUNTY. THE JUDGES OF THE CIRCUIT COURTS MAY FILL ANY VACANCY IN THE OFFICE OF COUNTY CLERK OR PROSECUTING ATTORNEY WITHIN THEIR RESPECTIVE JURISDICTIONS, BUT SHALL NOT EXERCISE ANY OTHER POWER OF APPOINTMENT TO PUBLIC OFFICE.

Mr. Danhof, chairman of the committee on judicial branch, submits the following reasons in support of Committee Proposal 93:

During the first 3 months of our committee work we had the testimony and advice of all the members of the supreme court, of circuit and probate judges, state bar officers and lawyers and officers of local bar associations and members of the general public. The plan of operation of our circuit and probate courts, we found, met the approval generally of all persons and groups who appeared before us.

Sec. a. In order to keep the manpower in the circuit court system operating as efficiently as possible, the legislature may on recommendation of the supreme court increase or decrease the number of judges, create new circuits and alter or discontinue existing circuits. By this means the courts can better keep abreast of changing population and economic conditions and thus serve all sections of the state more efficiently.

Sec. b. Circuit judges are to be nominated and elected as at the present time at nonpartisan elections and for the same term as now, for 6 years. Where a circuit has more than one judge the legislature shall arrange a plan whereby the offices will expire on a staggered basis. In some circuits at this time, and others that may increase in size, it was thought that it would be better for the judiciary and much less confusing to the voters to have fewer judges on the ballot, rather than present a long list of candidates at one time, and staggered terms will accomplish this result.

Sec. c. The power of the circuit court to hear cases from courts of limited jurisdiction shall be as authorized by rule of the supreme court. As now provided in our present constitution, the circuit court will have a general control over courts and tribunals of limited jurisdiction in accordance with supreme court rules.

Sec. d. It will be seen that we have retained the section that states the county clerk shall be clerk of the circuit court and for the filling of a vacancy in that office. No change is made in this section and the committee on local government approves this action.

Following is minority report A to Committee Proposal 93 as offered (No reasons were submitted in support thereof):

Miss Donnelly, Messrs. Leibrand and McAllister, a minority of the committee on judicial branch, submit the following minority report to Committee Proposal 93:

A minority of the committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Sec. c. CIRCUIT COURTS SHALL HAVE: ORIGINAL JURISDICTION IN ALL MATTERS NOT PROHIBITED BY LAW; APPELLATE JURISDICTION FROM ALL INFERIOR COURTS AND TRIBUNALS AS PRESCRIBED BY SUPREME COURT RULE; TO ISSUE, HEAR, AND DETERMINE PREROGATIVE AND REMEDIAL WRITS; SUPERVISORY AND GENERAL SUPERINTENDING CONTROL OVER INFERIOR COURTS AND TRIBUNALS WITHIN THEIR RESPECTIVE JURISDICTIONS, IN ACCORDANCE WITH SUPREME COURT RULES; AND JURISDICTION OF OTHER CASES AND MATTERS AS THE SUPREME COURT SHALL BY RULE PRESCRIBE.

Following is minority report B to Committee Proposal 93 as offered and the reasons submitted in support thereof:

Messrs. Ford, Garvin, Bledsoe, Miss McGowan, Messrs. Ostrow and Barthwell, a minority of the committee on judicial branch, submit the following minority report to Committee Proposal 93:

A minority of the committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Amend Committee Proposal 93, page 2, line 1, by striking out "SHALL" and inserting "MAY".

Messrs. Ford, Garvin, Bledsoe, Miss McGowan, Messrs. Ostrow and Barthwell, a minority of the committee on judicial branch, submit the following reasons in support of the foregoing minority report which accompanied Committee Proposal 93:

The proponents of this minority report believe that the possibility of staggered terms in multiple judge circuits has merit. However, it is our feeling that this is a question better left to the legislature, to be resolved by it in a manner that does not disrupt the terms of office of the judges presently in office.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: For an explanation of section a of Committee Proposal 93, the Chair will recognize the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I assume it was the thinking of the majority when they passed over that we can return to something with which we are a little more familiar and perhaps we can come to some agreement thereon.

The proposal relating to the circuit courts is one composed of 4 sections. There has been no great change from the original section. If you will look at the resume which was furnished to you at the beginning of our considerations, this is basically section 8 of article VII of the Constitution of 1908 with some additions thereto.

I should like to state that originally Judge Mosier was to have made the explanation of the committee in this regard. As you know, he is ill. And I have also asked Judge Pugsley to make some remarks regarding that section. Accordingly, at this time, I should like to yield the floor to a man who has spent a great many years as a circuit judge and has had a great deal of experience thereon, the delegate from Hart, Judge Pugsley.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Hart, Judge Pugsley.

MR. PUGSLEY: Mr. Chairman, delegates of the convention, last week our deliberations were interrupted because of our interest in a great event. Astronaut Glenn absorbed our attention and we were very much interested in the outcome of that flight. It has occurred to me that he was not the only one who has been up in the air. (laughter) That seems to have been somewhat contagious in this convention. I am glad at this time that we are about to work on a lower level. As has been stated by the chairman of our committee, it has been my pleasure to operate for some time on this lower level.

In the Constitution of 1908 there was a provision which divided the state of Michigan into judicial circuits. I think that perhaps we will have a better understanding of the proposal which has just been read to you by the secretary if I preface the few remarks which I am about to make by reading the Constitution of 1908 and then you will better appreciate, I think, the changes that have been proposed, which are not many so far as the spirit and substance of the provision is contained. I read from the Constitution of 1908:

> The state shall be divided into judicial circuits in each of which there shall be elected 1 circuit judge. The legislature may provide by law for the election of more than 1 circuit judge in any judicial circuit. A circuit court shall be held at least 4 times in each year in every county organized for judicial purposes. Each circuit judge shall hold court in the county or counties within the circuit in which he is elected, and in other circuits as may be provided by law. The legislature may by law arrange the various circuits into judicial districts, and provide for the manner of holding courts therein. Circuits and districts may be created, altered or discontinued by law, but no such alteration or discontinuance shall have the effect to remove a judge from office.

At present there are 41 circuits in the state presided over by 81 circuit judges. The largest circuit is in Wayne with 18 judges. The next largest are Oakland, with 5; Genesee, with 4; Saginaw, Macomb, Kent and Ingham, with 3; Berrien, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Muskegon, Bay, St. Clair and Calhoun, with 2 each. In other words, 19 of the larger counties which I have mentioned are being served today by 53 judges of a total of 81. The balance of the state, with a total of 62 counties, is being served by a total of 28 judges, each with multiple circuits of from 2 to 5 counties each.

Without going too much into detail, it may be fairly stated that the average case load per judge is much heavier in the larger circuits. Especially is this true in the counties of Wayne, Washtenaw and a few of the others with the largest population. It has been emphatically brought to our attention that there is a present need for a more even distribution of the case load in the outstate counties.

Under the provisions of the foregoing section 8 which I read to you, the division of the state into judicial circuits, the number of judges to be elected therein and the manner of holding courts has been left to the legislature.

I became a circuit judge of the twenty-seventh judicial circuit on January 1, 1930, in which circuit I was pleased to serve continuously until January 1, 1960. Two other retired judges at the convention, Judges Dehnke and Gadola, also served during the same years, each with credit to himself and with distinction to the judiciary of the state of Michigan. I am sure they will concur with me in an observation that during all of these years there has been, I believe, only one change made in the boundaries of the circuits in the state. For many years there were only 40. A few years ago one of the circuits in the upper peninsula was divided, and the number now, as stated before, is 41 circuits in the state.

Explanation—Matter within [ ] is stricken, matter in capitals is new.

Notwithstanding, there has been, as we all know, a very great increase in the population and in the case load in the several districts throughout the state. During recent years the supreme court has been taking a more active and a commendable interest in the supervision of the work of the circuit courts. Through its influence and also its recommendations the office of court administrator has been established, who has given a very valuable contribution to the administration of justice throughout the state. It is through assignments from this office that many of we judges from smaller circuits have been called upon from time to time to preside in numerous other circuits throughout the state in an effort to relieve a heavy case load in many of the larger circuits and to fill in in many cases where local judges were either disqualified or for some other reason could not preside.

From time to time each of we judges among those who are delegates to this convention have been called upon to leave our own circuits and to give service in other places throughout the state. In the earlier days these assignments were made through the office of the state presiding circuit judge who is elected annually at a meeting of the circuit judges of the state. This practice continued, and during my early days I was assigned first by Judge Dingeman to a number of circuits in the state, spending much time in the city of Detroit, and also to other places. We were called upon occasionally to preside in circuits where for one reason or another the judge was incapable or disqualified from handling matters that were to be handled in his respective circuit. In other cases we were called upon to go into other circuits to preside during the illness of a judge. One of my first assignments was a very pleasant one in the circuit of my neighbor on the left, Delegate Prettie, and I presided down there and have had a very pleasant time working with the attorneys in that particular circuit during the latter days and illness of the esteemed Judge Chester. Later I was called upon to go into the circuit which had been presided over for many years by Judge Gilbert, who had rendered a very valuable service to the state of Michigan, but who became ill, so I was called upon to give a part of my time to that circuit and served in the counties of Leelanau, Grand Traverse and Antrim, which was another very pleasant experience.

The court administrator in recent years, since the creation of that office, has made the assignments which were previously made through the office of the state presiding circuit judge. It is my belief that the system that we have at the present time from the standpoint of making assignments of judges from one circuit to another has worked out quite satisfactorily. It has been very pleasant for us to have the experience of going from one circuit into another, to meet the attorneys in the various circuits and to preside and hear cases which were presented to us from various parts of the state. It has also given a service to the people of the state of Michigan which has been intended to and I think for a great part has overcome the inequality of the amount of work in the various circuits, and I believe has leveled off to a great extent a criticism that might prevail against the great unevenness in the distribution of the work.

It is the unanimous opinion of the judicial committee that the supervision of the circuit court should continue to be done by the supreme court, and that if and when changes are to be made in the circuits of the state, that this task can be most intelligently and effectively done by the supreme court with the aid of the court administrator. It is with this thought in mind and to this end that this committee recommends the adoption of section a of Committee Proposal 93 which was read to you by the secretary and, Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I move the adoption of this section.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, has the committee further presentation with respect to section a?

MR. DANHOF: If I could, I would like to have the delegate from Detroit, Mr. Iverson, add just a few words.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Iverson.

MR. IVERSON: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I hesitate to say that this is a noncontroversial section, but I still think it is. I would like to point out that our committee spent considerable time in what we thought was an attempt to improve the court system and particularly with reference to the circuit courts. You have on your desk the old section which clearly brings to you the changes that were made. I think perhaps the most significant change at least that I would like to point out to you is the fact that we have provided that the legislature shall make such changes in the circuits as may become necessary based upon judicial business rather than attempting to tie it to a population or any other method. I think this is very definitely an improvement. And since we now have a very efficient court administrator who follows very closely the case load of the various circuits throughout the state, I think he is in a very good position to make his recommendations to the supreme court, if any necessity arises, that judicial circuits need to be changed in any manner or additional judges need to be named.

Needless to say, I think it has been a long time since any of the circuits in the state have actually needed to be changed in their boundaries, but it was deemed advisable to set this out in the constitution or in this section on the circuit courts so that in case adjustments needed to be made in the circuits themselves, it could very well be done by the legislature.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Faxon, do you seek recognition at this time?

MR. FAXON: Just to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I think Mr. Iverson has answered it partly, but I just wondered why the language wouldn't have been more clear in section a where it says "The state shall be divided into judicial circuits . . . ." I take it that this is to be done by the legislature; is that correct, Mr. Danhof?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Yes, it is. This has been the policy in the past and it will continue. We provide that the state shall be divided into judicial circuits along county lines and have one judge or more, and this has been done by law. It was the considered opinion of the committee, after discussing this and figuring whether it should be left to the supreme court or the court administrator, that on this particular basis we would go with history. Inasmuch as there was probably appropriation involved and additional expense when circuits are created or additional judges added, we meant and we intended to continue the present practice where they would be set by the legislature.

MR. FAXON: My only comment there was that I thought the language was a little ambiguous. If it was meant to be the legislature, it might have stated such as "the legislature may by law divide the state." In that way there would be no question as to whether this is to be lodged with the legislature or with the supreme court. That was just my comment on reading the first sentence.

The second question I have, if I may direct this to you, too, Mr. Danhof, is with regard to the insertion on line 12 of this "by supreme court rule" with regard to the circuit court judges. It says here "be provided by supreme court rule or by law." And my question is: if the 2 conflict on the question of where the judges shall hold their court, what happens? I mean, could you see a situation develop where a supreme court rule might be different from that set by law, and if such an eventuality were to come about, what would resolve the problem?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Basically, I couldn't quite anticipate the problem that you raise. However, you have it in the constitution now as by law. It has been firmly established that the circuit judges are state officials; they are not local or county officials. They have had the practice of sitting in other circuits and the assignment of a particular judge has been made, as Judge Pugsley pointed out, previously by the presiding circuit judge and now by the court administrator acting pursuant to authority granted to him by the supreme court which is given the general superintending control over all of the courts, and the practice has been that there is a law and it has been implemented by the particular supreme court rule.

In this regard you would only have my own personal opinion and I doubt, there being 56 other lawyers, if that is worth too much since I am sure they would all dissent, but I would imagine that if there ever would be a conflict, the supreme court is going to have to decide it, and the supreme court might well say, if they have the superintending control, that the rule, this matter being a matter of practice and procedure, might possibly control. I have no way to predict what would happen, but this would be one lawyer's opinion, Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Well, would there be any need to, say, keep the language "or by law" there in light of the practice that has been followed? Does this serve any purpose?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Except that the legislature is the one which creates the circuits, which changes the circuits, which alters them or discontinues them. I think in that regard they should particularly have this. I have my own personal opinion on it. The committee was of the opinion that we should keep the present language but add "by supreme court rule." I have no personal thoughts on the matter. If you wanted to strike "or by law" then my own personal opinion would be by court rule. But in light of the fact that the legislature does have control over the circuits, their creation, their discontinuance and their altering, it was the opinion that this perhaps should be kept and retained in the constitution as it now is.

MR. FAXON: Well, my only comment there was that in the following sentence you do provide for the creation and alteration and discontinuance by law, so that I thought that this seemed to be specifically a matter which was dealt with by supreme court rule and that the additional words "or by law" just sort of made a little confusion there. But if you feel that it is clear, I don't intend to propose anything unless you felt there was some need to clear it up.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lundgren.

MR. LUNDGREN: Mr. Chairman, and probably to Judge Pugsley, who I think was just getting up to answer, my question was the same thing that Mr. Faxon just brought out. I was just wondering what supersedes the other, court rule or by law. I think you are getting yourself into sort of a bind here again. What is going to be the supervisory authority here, the circuit court or the judge's rule or the law of the legislature? Maybe it might be clearer to drop one. Maybe the judge has an answer to it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Do you desire to yield to Judge Pugsley, Mr. Lundgren?

MR. LUNDGREN: I do.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Pugsley.

MR. PUGSLEY: Delegate Lundgren, I don't think that there is any practical danger of any conflict between the law and the rule that may be made by the supreme court. Under the present practice a court administrator has been provided by an act of the legislature, and the court administrator acts under the authority and the instruction of the supreme court. The bulk of his work is in keeping an account of the case load and the progress that is being made in the various circuits throughout the state. He keeps a tabulated record of the number of those cases, the numbers that are tried, the number that remain without trial, and also in case there are more cases to be heard than there is available a judge to take care of that work, then he has the authority to assign a judge from another circuit to help out in that particular district. The law comes in there in that if it is necessary, for instance, to supplement or to amend the power and authority of the court administrator, it would then be in order to ask to have such a law enacted. Have I answered your question?

MR. LUNDGREN: I believe you might say one just complements the other.

MR. PUGSLEY: That is right.

MR. LUNDGREN: Thank you. That answers it.

MR. PUGSLEY: There was one thing I omitted, and that was that in the old law of 1908, in addition to dividing the state, as has been done, into judicial circuits, there is also included in the old language a provision by which the circuits might have been grouped into districts. But throughout the over 50 years that the Constitution of 1908 has been in existence, there has never been any attempt to do that, and so far as I know and so far as it has been called to our attention, there seems to be no need for leaving that in the constitution, and so that has been deleted.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Are there any amendments to section a? Mr. Pellow.

MR. PELLOW: I was just going to ask Mr. Danhof a question. In line 14, is "shall" being used in the sense of discretionary or mandatory in the event that the supreme court recommends a change in the reorganization of the circuits? I assume that it is used in the discretionary sense.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Pellow, in this regard we leave to the legislature the drawing of the circuits. And, as we say, the number of judges may be changed and the circuits may be created, altered and discontinued by law, and we go on in the same sentence. This is all by law. Now, we started out months ago realizing that nobody can mandamus the legislature. This we all agree to. But the committee debated quite seriously whether or not a provision should be inserted in this constitution making it mandatory for the legislature to add additional judges or create new circuits upon a shift in population.

Now, as you know, there are states in which, when particularly a circuit comprising but one county has a population increase of some arbitrary number, being 50,000, 75,000, there is automatically added to that circuit a new judge. This is in essence the Florida system. The question came before the committee as to whether or not we should write this type of a provision into this constitution. The committee decided we should not, for the reason that population alone does not necessarily raise or lower law business. It depends on the type of community that you have, whether it has a great deal of industry in it or whether it is more or less a residential county, and there are numerous factors which go to make additional legal business for the courts.

The office of the court administrator, as Judge Pugsley has pointed out, is charged and we hope will be charged with the responsibility of keeping track of the case load, the days spent in court, the days spent at the jury trial and these types of things. All circuits are not alike. A lot of them may have a lot of criminal trials and some may have a lot of civil trials, some may have all their civil trials before a jury, others may try them all before the judge. There are a great number of them. It varies.

But as these statistics become available, if it becomes apparent to the supreme court and, in effect, the court administrator that needs are rising, that a circuit now comprising 2 counties should be split and they should each become a separate circuit, or that a county now having 3 judges or 2 judges should have additional manpower, it would be recommended to the legislature that these changes be made. If the legislature doesn't take the recommendation, nobody can force it to act, Mr. Pellow. We realize that. The supreme court can't mandamus the legislature to do it. But it was solely our intention to endeavor to put as much responsibility and as much authority as we could in the legislature and give it the greatest direction possible that it should respond to the recommendations of, in essence, the court administrator and his staff.

Now, later on you will find in the probate article that we have done the same thing, and there is now presently employed a deputy court administrator, and you will see that we provide for the grouping of counties into probate districts. This is the same idea. We would hope that in the future there could develop a liaison between the legislature and the court administrator, and that the court administrator would be reasonable in his demands so that a mutual respect could develop so that when these recommendations are made, the legislature shall do in essence as requested by the recommendation. We fully understand the authority lies in the legislature. I think the wording leaves it there. There is no authority here that is granted to the supreme court, because it is only on a recommendation of the supreme court that this be done, a recommendation to the legislature. This is what we did. We did this in lieu of inserting perhaps a mandatory requirement for increasing judicial manpower or the splitting of districts when population would reach a certain size. I hope that answers your question.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Are there any amendments to section a?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Brake and Mr. Boothby offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 14, after "judges" and after "circuits" by striking out "shall" and inserting "may"; so the language will read, beginning in the sentence in line 12:

> The number of judges may be changed and circuits may be created, altered and discontinued by law and the number of judges may be changed and circuits may be created, altered and discontinued on recommendation of the supreme court to reflect changes in the judicial business.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Brake and Boothby, on which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Stanton, Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, this is, of course, following up the question that Mr. Pellow just asked, and personally I am not at all satisfied with Mr. Danhof's answer. He is saying we are saying to the legislature "you shall" but we are saying it knowing that the legislature may not choose to do so. I think that is bad drafting of a constitution.

If you mean "may", if you mean to leave the discretion with the legislature, you should make your language discretionary so that you are not forcing the legislature to disobey the constitution in exercising its judgment. If you take it to mean "shall" this is projecting the supreme court a long way into the legislative field. The dividing up of the state into circuits is certainly a legislative function. Not only that, but you are appropriating money by the supreme court. If the supreme court should say, for instance, Wayne county needs 30 judges instead of 18, you are appropriating $15,000 or $20,000 of state money for every one of those judges added, because their salaries and their expenses have got to be paid.

Certainly it is desirable that the supreme court should make the recommendation. Through the administrator they know more about the business than the circuit. He should certainly make the recommendation as to what ought to be done. But I think it is poor draftsmanship in a constitution to say "shall" when you don't really mean "shall." We therefore propose that we use the word "may" and have the constitution read just as Mr. Danhof says he thinks it will read.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the Brake amendment, do you desire recognition, Mr. Danhof? The Chair will recognize Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Brake, I don't think that it is quite correct that the committee intended that the word "shall" should mean "may" nor is it at all intended that we think that the supreme court would have any power to order the legislature to change the number of judges in a circuit. We do think that we are saying to the legislature that it should give great credence to a recommendation from the supreme court that the number of judges in a circuit or that the boundaries of a circuit should be changed.

I would like to point out for the members of the committee that in Wayne county we have the same number of circuit judges that we had in 1929. In 33 years — I don't have the figures at my fingertips — we have pretty close to doubled the population being served, and the case load has gone up in greater proportion than the population. Now every year it is a wrangle in front of the legislature about where new judges are going to be added to circuits. This was the thought of some members on the committee: at first, for example, some of us started out thinking that we would like to have a constitutional mandate that there should be a circuit judge for every 75,000 people in a circuit. Several states have provisions similar to this in their constitution. We were dissuaded from this position by reason of the fact that, as Mr. Danhof has indicated, there are factors other than population to consider in determining the amount of work and the volume of work within a judicial circuit.

A second method that can be used and is sometimes used to determine the number of judges is the case load method, and there you go on the basis of recommendations by the bar association and people studying judicial administration as to what the efficient case load maximum for a judge might be. It happens that at this particular time there is a considerable amount of material available on this subject because the legislature is right at this moment considering several new circuit judgeships.

In Wayne county the recorder's court has more or less concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court. If we use the recorder's court judges in the computation we find that, using either the accepted case load method or the population factor of 75,000, you come out with just about the same demand for additional judges.

Now, it is true that when you talk about adding judges, you are talking about appropriating money. But it has been said on this floor by many, many people that the people best able to promulgate changes within the judicial systems are the people sitting on the court, people who work with it every day. Unfortunately, the decision to add or not to add judges is most frequently made on political considerations and not on the basis of a real study of the need and a determination based upon anything remotely approaching an objective examination of the problem.

And what this proposal would do would be to make it possible for those persons living in a circuit where they felt that the people of that circuit were not being properly afforded justice, because of an overloading of the court, to present this problem to the supreme court for examination. The supreme court would make recommendations. The legislature might never act on the recommendation, but the legislature in failing to act on the recommendation would do so with public knowledge, knowing that the public was well aware of the fact that the supreme court had studied the matter and made this recommendation. It is our feeling that this would lend some impetus to a more serious consideration of the needs of the circuits throughout the state by the legislature when the problem comes up, and that instead of sending the circuit judges up to lobby the legislators, they would present in the first instance their facts and figures to the supreme court and have something close to an objective decision made upon which the recommendation would be based, rather than a horsetrading proposition of, well, we'll give this circuit 2 if you will vote to give this circuit 1. And everybody in here who has had any experience of trying to get judges out of the legislature knows that that is what happens.

As a supporter of the majority report, it was my opinion that this was a strong suggestion to the legislature that they should follow the lead of the supreme court, and the word "shall" means "shall" and doesn't mean that they have to, but it is used, Mr. Pellow, in its mandatory sense and not in its permissive sense.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Mr. Ford, the beginning of your speech is inconsistent with the end of your speech. You start out by saying you didn't mean the legislature would have to do it, and you finish up with an argument why the legislature should be compelled to do it because they don't give the judges the proper recognition and so forth. If you meant what you said at the beginning of your speech, all I can say to you is that that is what you ought to have said. You have said "you shall," and you rely upon that not meaning "you shall" because the legislature cannot be mandamused. I think that is bad draftsmanship in a constitution.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Brake and Mr. Boothby. Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Lest anybody be led astray as to what the word "shall" means when you tell the legislature it shall do something, if you look at section 5 of article VII, you will see language that says:

> The supreme court shall by general rules establish, modify and amend the practice in such court and in all other courts of record, and simplify the same. The legislature shall, as far as practicable, abolish distinctions between law and equity proceedings. . . .

I have said this before on the floor, but the legislature took that "shall" to mean, when it was adopted by the people in 1908, that it would be done when they got around to it, and they did get around to it in the 1961 session of the legislature. So it sometimes takes them a little while to follow the mandate of a word like "shall." "Shall" is a stronger direction to them than "may." It doesn't have a great deal different connotation in the law. It doesn't give any right to the court that it didn't have to make recommendations. But it does indicate our intention that the legislature ought to at least sit down with these fellows and talk it over.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Yeager.

MR. YEAGER: Mr. Chairman, would you ask the secretary to restate the amendment before we vote, please?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The secretary will read the amendment offered by Messrs. Brake and Boothby.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is:

[The amendment was again read by the secretary. For text, see above, page 1359.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, do you seek recognition?

MR. DANHOF: Only to emphasize what Mr. Ford said. And when I was referring back to Mr. Pellow, I had only been referring to what has been stated as a matter of practicality. We meant "shall". We meant it in the sense that the legislature should — would — follow the recommendations of the court because they, as Mr. Brake has said, are best known.

We also provided the legislature could act on its own. It must be done by law; it cannot be done by court rule or by any other type of enactment. And we meant "shall," but when I was referring to it, as Mr. Ford pointed out, it is a very practical matter, and we meant that if the legislature didn't do it, it could be pointed to this, if you want to call it, the mandatory requirement that they do it and perhaps we could get action faster than has been obtainable in the past. This is why we did it, in order to make it as strong as we possibly could without writing a mandatory requirement based on case load or population, which we did not want to do.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Brake anod Boothby. Mr. Hoxie.

MR. HOXIE: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Danhof a question.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. HOXIE: Under the provision that you presently have, would the supreme court be able to appropriate the money necessary for the creation of these new districts or new judges and so forth?

MR. DANHOF: Of course not, Mr. Hoxie. You read right in there this has to be done by law.

MR. HOXIE: Yes, but they shall do it, and in case they fail to do it, it is a mandatory provision within the constitution, and the question in my mind is, if the supreme court under such a situation wouldn't have the right to write drafts on the state treasurer because it is their mandatory right to pay for any of these circuits that they might create, new circuits and new judges. I think you ought to think of that a minute.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Brake and Boothby. Those in favor of the amendment will say aye. Those opposed will say no. The Chair is in doubt. Those in favor will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Messrs. Brake and Boothby, the yeas are 57; the nays are 51.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is adopted. Are there further amendments to section a of Committee Proposal 93?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Faxon offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 12, after "rule" by striking out "or by law".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Faxon. Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, this has already been discussed. I have spoken to Mr. Danhof about it. His answer seemed to indicate that his "or by law" really wasn't necessary, and so I would yield to him at this time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Faxon yields to Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I would have no objection to the amendment myself, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Faxon. Does any delegate desire to have it reread? The secretary will reread the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Faxon's amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 12, after "rule" by striking out "or by law"; so that the sentence beginning in line 10 will read, "Each circuit judge shall hold court in the county or counties within the circuit in which he is elected, and in other circuits as may be provided by supreme court rule."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Those in favor of the amendment will say aye; those opposed will say no. The Chair is in doubt. Those in favor of the amendment offered by Mr. Faxon will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the amendment offered by Mr. Faxon, the yeas are 56; the nays are 51.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is adopted. Are there further amendments to section a?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Lesinski offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, by striking out all of line 14 and the words "altered and discontinued" in line 15; so that the language will then read, "The number of judges may be changed and circuits may be created, altered and discontinued by law on recommendation of the supreme court to reflect changes in the judicial business."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Lesinski, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Lesinski.

MR. LESINSKI: Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been submitted to delete repetitious verbiage.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Lesinski. Mr. Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, I would observe if that was the reason that the gentleman offered the amendment, simply to strike out excess verbiage, he has certainly done more than that (laughter) because his amendment as submitted would leave the situation that the legislature could not on its own motion make any new circuits, increase the number of judges or change the boundaries of circuits. They could only act upon the recommendation of the supreme court. I wonder if the gentleman really intends it to have that effect. His amendment goes much further than to strike out excess verbiage. I oppose his amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Lesinski. Those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is not adopted. Mr. Hutchinson, your argument was ultimately persuasive. (laughter) Are there further amendments to section a?

SECRETARY CHASE: None on file, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If not, it will pass.

Section a, as amended, is passed. The secretary will read section b.

SECRETARY CHASE: Section b:

[Section b was read by the secretary. For text, see above, page 1355.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, there is on the secretary's desk an amendment on behalf of the committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The secretary will read the committee amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The committee amendment offered by Mr. Danhof:

1. Amend page 1, line 20, after "Sec. b.", by striking out the remainder of the section and inserting "Circuit judges shall be nominated and elected at nonpartisan elections in the county or the circuit in which they reside, and shall hold office for a period of 6 years and until their successors are elected and qualified.".

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is not as the secretary read it. It strikes out the section through the word "years". It leaves the last sentence in, Mr. Chase.

SECRETARY CHASE: I beg your pardon. Thank you, Mr. Danhof.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The secretary will reread the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Danhof, on behalf of the committee on judicial branch, offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 20, after "Sec. b.", by striking out the balance of the line, all of line 21, and line 22 through "years.", and inserting "Circuit judges shall be nominated and elected at nonpartisan elections in the county or the circuit in which they reside, and shall hold office for a period of 6 years and until their successors are elected and qualified.". Then resuming the reading in line 22, "In circuits having more than one judge the terms of office shall be arranged to provide that they will expire on a staggered basis."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Danhof on behalf of the committee on judicial branch, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, there is no great change in the amendment as offered by the committee. It provides for nomination and election on a nonpartisan basis, for a period of 6 years. The original sentences had left out the words "and until their successors are elected and qualified" which we inserted. We also made it consistent with what we had done in the probate article. The committee met and approved this particular language.

It provides, again, for the 6 year term. It has been brought to my attention and perhaps it is correct — and I will leave it to Mr. Cudlip's able committee if there is a conflict; I don't think so, but it is possible — it provides that "Circuit judges shall be nominated and elected at nonpartisan elections in the county or the circuit . . . ." It is possible that the words "the county or" might be stricken.

We intend it to cover the situation where the circuit comprised 1 county, or if it comprises more than 1 county, I would imagine we could have said "elections in the circuit . . . ." We certainly mean that he shall reside within the circuit, be it a 1 county or a multiple county circuit, and hold office for a 6 year term until a successor is elected and qualified.

I would ask for a favorable vote on the committee amendment, and then we can go into the body of the proposal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Do you desire recognition on the committee amendment, Mr. Yeager?

MR. YEAGER: Mr. Chairman, I had a question on the last sentence of the proposal, so if you want to vote on the committee amendment first, fine.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by the committee. Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I would like to support the amendment of the committee and mention that I think that it was an oversight on our part that it was left out in the first place. What it substantially does is bring in the language that presently is in the constitution in 2 different sections.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by the committee. Does any delegate desire to have it read further? If not, those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is adopted. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, at this time I would like to yield to the delegate from Detroit, Mr. Iverson, for an explanation of the entire section.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes Mr. Iverson.

MR. IVERSON: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, in case you have not read the rationale on this, it is in the journal. Circuit judges are to be nominated and elected as at the present time by nonpartisan elections and for the same term as now, for 6 years. Where a circuit has more than 1 judge the legislature shall arrange a plan whereby the offices will expire on a staggered basis. In some circuits at this time and others that may increase in size, it was thought that it would be better for the judiciary and much less confusing to the voters to have fewer judges on the ballot, rather than present a long list of candidates at one time, and staggered terms will accomplish this result. I think that you will find that this is perhaps the main change in the section. Needless to say, the nomination and election of circuit judges is now provided on a nonpartisan basis by law, but it was the feeling of the committee that this should be provided in the constitution. It has been very successful so far as the election of circuit judges is concerned, and we feel that it has justified its existence under law and it has a place in the constitution.

The other significant change, as I indicated, is the staggering of the terms, and I think there should be no objection to this because we have heard considerable from the delegates on the committee as well as other delegates that so called bedsheet ballots should be avoided as much as possible. I think staggered terms give the voters a much better opportunity to know whom they are voting for, and I recommend the passage of the committee report.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Yeager.

MR. YEAGER: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question of either Mr. Danhof or Mr. Iverson on this proposition here of the staggered basis. In Wayne county we have 18 circuit judges, I believe, and is the term "staggered basis" explicit enough? In other words, if you elect 1 at one election, 1 at the next and 16 at the next, is this considered staggered? And 2, if we have an odd number, how does this term fit in? Should this term "staggered basis" be more explicit or is it explicit enough as it reads?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Yeager, you get down to the question again of whether you want to spell out all of the details or leave some to the legislature. Now, I should point out that in Committee Proposal 96, section j, there is a requirement that the legislature shall implement this particular section by the passage of legislation which would provide that when the judges are next elected, they would have a varying length of term, no term of which could be shorter than 6 years. This is explicitly put in so you aren't going to have some circuit judge who normally has been thinking of a 6 year term suddenly winding up with a 2 year or a 4 year term. We will admit that this may mean in some instances an 8 year term or perhaps even a 10 year term. We do not spell out all of the details, but we think that the legislature in its wisdom would provide that if they had a 6 year term, as is a normal term, that you would eventually get on the basis where you would have 1/3 or as close to a 1/3 as possible elected every 2 years.

Now, the committee on elections has recommended that there be no spring elections and there be basically an election every 2 years, as I recall their recommendation. This would mean you would have a nonpartisan ballot every 2 years. Now, if there is action of this particular convention to change that or that we have more elections or we have an odd year election, we could perhaps fit this in there. But based upon those recommendations and the provisions that the legislature shall so provide, I would think and I would assume that they would provide that they would have 1/3 elected every 2 years or as close as you can come.

Now you say, "Well, what do you do where you don't have a nice number divisible by 3? Well, again I can only say you do it as closely as you can. We can't make it perfect. But the recommendations of the state bar that Mr. Lawrence has given to you, the testimony that we had was to the effect that if we are going to do something to bring the judges closer to the people, this was one particular thing that could be done.

I point out that this is in the present constitution as it relates to probate judges in those counties over 100,000 where they have more than 1 probate judge. They have been elected every 2 years. They serve a 4 year term, and if there are 2 of them, 1 comes up every 2 years. So this isn't anything radically new that we are proposing for the circuit judges. It is something that the probate judges have lived with on a 4 year term. We think it will cut down the number of judges on the ballot. If there is only 1 judge running out of 3, the people will at least know this judge and be familiar with his record.

Now, could we have made it more detailed? Yes, we could. But we felt that the legislature should have some discretion in this particular matter, Mr. Yeager.

MR. YEAGER: I simply raised the question, Mr. Danhof, to get your explanation in the record. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman, a question to Mr. Danhof. Was there any discussion with regard to the elections committee or the committee which is working on scheduling to make a proposal with regard to this matter? I had some recollection that there was a committee which would be implementing this provision. I think it was the elections committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: It was my understanding, Mr. Higgs, that the committee on miscellaneous provisions and schedule might have to meet after we have finally passed all of our articles at least to second reading and then begin to set up a scheduling process, but we provided in Committee Proposal 96 that there shall be implementing legislation to provide for this.

Now, it may be that provision we have is a little broad and it would have to work in with what miscellaneous provisions has provided. We didn't know what they had, but we provided for it in our own particular article. If there is a duplication, it is part of the job, again, of Mr. Cudlip's committee if it has to come out of 96 because it is provided elsewhere. I think that is what we discussed. But we did pass a provision that the legislature shall by legislation take care of the staggered term basis.

MR. HIGGS: I just raised this at this time because this has been in my mind as well as Delegate Yeager's.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Are there any further amendments to section b?

SECRETARY CHASE: Pursuant to minority report B of Messrs. Ford, Garvin, Bledsoe, Miss McGowan, Messrs. Ostrow and Barthwell,

Mr. Ford offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 1, after "office" by striking out "shall" and inserting "may"; so the language will then read, "In circuits having more than one judge the terms of office may be arranged to provide that they will expire on a staggered basis."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Ford and others, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: You see, your sins have a tendency to come home to roost. Mr. Brake is sitting here doing the best he can to control his laughter at the position I find myself in. (laughter) This is not one of the burning problems of the judiciary. (laughter) Actually, in order to consider the import of the difference between the word "shall" and "may" you have to look at Committee Proposal 96j as proposed by the committee, which reads as follows:

> The provisions of this constitution requiring the establishment of staggered terms of office in existence, shall be implemented at the next election for such offices by legislation providing for elections for terms of varying length, none of which shall be shorter than the basic term provided herein for the office.

Now what this does in effect is give a self executing situation where it says that the legislature has got to come up with the way to stagger the terms at the very next judicial election after this constitution is adopted, and it appeals to some of us that a more orderly transition might be made if the legislature were permitted to do this over a series of elections, maybe 2 or 3, rather than trying to do it all at once. And again we have to relate it to Wayne county which has the largest number of judges, 18 presently. But assuming for the moment that additional judges are added, it would be our thought that the legislature at the time that the judicial vacancies are created could start to implement the staggering in a manner that would not disturb the situation you have now with 18 judges whose terms of office are expiring simultaneously.

If the committee recommendation in 96j is adopted without taking out the words "at the next election" the legislature would have to provide for staggering of the 18 vacancies down there automatically — and I think there are 5 or 6 now in Oakland county — and it creates somewhat of a problem, because the only conceivable way that they could do it all in one election would be to decide that 1/3 of the judges would have a 6 year term, 1/3 would have an 8 year term, and 1/3 would have a 10 year term, because the language of the committee proposal would say that in staggering the terms, you cannot drop below 6 years with respect to circuit courts. In talking with members of our bench down there, I could see that this might precipitate a great deal of difficulty while, however, if it were possible to institute the staggering in the first instance with respect to vacancies and do it over a period of time, it might be possible for the legislature to implement this with a minimum amount of confusion.

We find ourselves in a position here of saying that we want to leave it to the legislature, but with respect to the word "may" or "shall" I am satisfied to leave it to Mr. Cudlip's committee to use the appropriate word depending upon what we do when we get to 96j. So really at this point we take the very generous attitude that you may vote for or against our amendment, recognizing that we will be back again if Mr. Cudlip doesn't solve our problem for us.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Those who are in favor of the minority report amendment offered by Mr. Ford and others will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment does not prevail. Are there further amendments to section b, Committee Proposal 93?

SECRETARY CHASE: Messrs. Kuhn and Krolikowski offer the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 22, after "than" by striking out "one judge and inserting "6 judges"; so the language will read, "In circuits having more than 6 judges the terms of office shall be arranged to provide that they will expire on a staggered basis."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Kuhn and Krolikowski, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, as you all know, today the circuit court is a nonpartisan court. We feel that if you use the number one, you might tend to do away with our real nonpartisan circuit court. We feel one is not a realistic number; that 6 would be a much more realistic number to have staggered terms. We also feel that it is very possible where we have a few judges and you have staggered terms that there are so many up for election all the time, and not being 1 or 2 possibly, that it tends to keep the court in a political campaign every 2 years, which might not be a good thing, especially where there are so few judges in the first place.

Our county, which is a strong Republican county, has a nonpartisan bench. We have 3 Republicans and 2 Democrats. And I would like to say at this time that our bench is 100 per cent in favor of not having to put 2 people out campaigning or 3 people every 2 years and let the others do the work. Our county has one of the highest case loads in the state of Michigan. I think one is not a realistic number, and I therefore move at this time that we support 6.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Kuhn, the Chair will recognize Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the chairman of the committee, if I may, and then have the floor.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs yields to Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Well, Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I don't mind Mr. Kuhn trying to protect the interest of his particular county. I think this is particularly laudable. I understand they have 5 judges. My only thought is that if we are going to do it, let's be consistent. We can write 4. Or my county has 2 judges and so does Kalamazoo, so I suppose we could start at 3. We could skip up and start at 8 and then all we would hit is Wayne county. I see no great harm. If there are 6 judges, I am sure the legislature would have 2 run every 2 years. I think perhaps they may feel there is a little more safety in numbers and this may be the objection that they have to it.

I think in this case if we do it, we should do it the way the committee recommended and not discriminate against some in favor of others. This convention has gone on record as opposing matters of discrimination. Maybe we should continue that practice. Thank you. I yield to Mr. Higgs, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Well, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I feel we definitely should support the majority report and oppose the amendment, and in particular there are several reasons why. I think the chairman of the committee has indicated that certainly if this is advisable for larger counties, it is advisable for all counties. But I particularly come from a 2 judge circuit. I think I can speak in this matter and demonstrate one of the problems in a 2 judge circuit where the terms are not staggered. Some years ago we had a vacancy and an appointment to serve until the next election at which time the incumbent ran with opposition for an unexpired term. Now, as a result of this contest in one office, a great deal of publicity and campaigning involved one incumbent and an opponent. It was only a very few months after this election and the 2 incumbents had to seek election for the full term. You can envisage the disadvantage of the incumbent who did not participate in any of the prior campaigns. He was sort of a lost man working quietly in the vineyards to do his work and he was beaten. Now, I don't know, and I don't know anyone who could say definitely that that was the reason why he was beaten. He is now deceased. But I always felt that he was at a disadvantage in that regular election running against 2 men, in effect, both of whom had participated in a very active, vigorous campaign just a few short months previously. I can envisage the same thing happening again, and I think it is quite disadvantageous. It also leads to the possibility of plunker votes, you see, just voting for one candidate and getting a double advantage. I think if this is good in any circuit, it is good in all circuits, and I would urge you to support the committee proposal.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Krolikowski.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I believe that committee action in this regard was inspired in the main by the bedsheet ballot that exists in the county of Wayne. Now, the bedsheet ballot in Wayne precludes an intelligent evaluation of judicial timber. This, however, is certainly not applicable in a district which contains 6 judges or less. I believe that the purpose for the committee proposal is devoid of merit where it is made applicable in a circuit wherein the electorate can intelligently evaluate the judicial manpower. For that reason I believe that although the committee proposal is designed to alleviate the situation in Wayne county, it exposes judges in the smaller districts to the thrust of party machinery, so for that reason I would urge you to adopt the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. King.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I am in agreement with Mr. Kuhn and Mr. Krolikowski. I appreciate the problem that exists in Wayne county and I think that this is a satisfactory compromise solution to that kind of a problem. Now, our bench in Oakland county would be involved continuously in politics. In the summer before the elections, when I suppose judges like other people have to take vacations, we would probably have 2 on vacation and 2 out campaigning and 1 left to carry the load.

The problem as I see it here is to come up with some solution which will take care of these long ballots, which does not present a problem in Oakland county or any of the other multidistrict counties. I sat down with all of the circuit judges in Oakland county as I thought it my responsibility to do and discussed the article in general, and in general they were satisfied. They mentioned this problem which the committee has taken care of by amendment regarding this being duly elected and qualified, and other than that they thought it was an excellent article except for this one provision. This creates a very, very serious problem in the multidistrict counties, and I hope that somehow we can maintain the freedom from continuous politics in these counties. It is extremely important to me.

We have an excellent bench, as Dick pointed out, and all 5 of them are excellent judges, and 2 of them are Democrats and 3 of them Republicans. If that gets my name on the bulletin board again, so be it. (laughter) But it is a fact. They are all excellent judges.

I would be very hopeful that we can work out something here which will not penalize the multijudge county circuits and still will solve a problem which truly does exist in the county of Wayne.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. King, the Chair might suggest that if the experience of Messrs. Brake, Buback and Baginski is any indication, Messrs. Kuhn, Krolikowski and King may wind up, not on the bulletin board but on the editorial page. (laughter) The Chair will recognize Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, the delegates from Wayne county were not the advocates of this plan. The delegates from Wayne county, at least the majority of the Democratic delegates, accepted it somewhat reluctantly. When we accepted it, we accepted it with the understanding that we were voting for a principle that was a principle that was good for state officials throughout the state of Michigan and not because we were convinced that the people of Wayne county were less able to pick 18 names than the people of Oakland county to pick 6 names.

I don't know how Mr. Kuhn, King and Krolikowski are going to guarantee that you won't have 150 people file for circuit court out there, and if you have 150 people, I suppose it is more difficult to pick out 18 than it is to pick out 6. But the bedsheet ballot, as it is referred to, doesn't come entirely from the number of offices to be filled. Yesterday Mr. Lawrence showed you a ballot that should be getting dog eared now because we have seen it so many times, with several hundred people running in 1935 in Wayne county, but something happened just before that election in Wayne county that explains it. It had nothing to do with the new vacancies because there weren't any new vacancies. What happened was a fellow named Roosevelt got elected in 1932, and all of a sudden Democrats started winning in Wayne county and all of the Democratic lawyers came out of the bushes and ran for circuit court. (laughter) Now, if Oakland county went through a similar metamorphosis, I suspect it did come up with a pretty good sized ballot out there.

The reasoning behind this thing involves more than political advantage to one party or another, and it is this. Mr. Iverson has touched on it. One of the advantages you get from the staggering judges — (laughter) staggering terms of judges —

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: A Freudian slip, Mr. Ford? (laughter)

MR. FORD: — one of the advantages that has nothing whatever to do with politics in the direct sense is the fact that the staggering of terms accomplishes this sort of an advantage: whether you have a circuit with 2, 10 or 20 judges, if you don't run them all for election at the same time, you have some continuity of court business. You don't have all of the occupants of the bench campaigning simultaneously and the ensuing confusion that results. And this is one of the principal benefits. Really some of us would have liked, if we thought we could have done it, to go to this much of the Illinois plan. Over in Illinois they have no circuit with less than 3 judges in it, and some of the experiences that have been related to me by lawyers from out of the state indicate that maybe this isn't a bad system.

But Mr. Kuhn thinks that he is protecting his county by saying 6, and I submit that at the rate that his county is growing, he is going to have to get a constitutional amendment before very long, because they might have 6 judges out there before very long and then the whole purpose that his amendment would serve is defeated. It is very obvious on its face that what he is attempting to do is say, "You people in Wayne county don't know what you are doing, so we are going to protect you from yourselves by not allowing you to elect 18 judges, but we feel that we can elect 6 out here and do it."

If it is the view of the committee that staggering of terms is justified solely because of election procedures and solely because Wayne county is large, then I would have to oppose the entire principle, because the principle is the same, as Mr. Higgs has indicated, whether we are talking about 2 judges or 10 judges. What the committee is asking you here to do is to subscribe to the principle of not having all of the members of the bench run at the same time. Now, this shouldn't be a very difficult thing for us to grasp, because it is already in the law with respect to probate judges, and I don't believe that both of Mr. King's probate judges in his county run at the same time for office and this doesn't cause the courthouse to fall in. They have had this for several years out there, I believe. Ever since they have had 2 probate judges they have staggered terms for them, and all we are trying to do is treat the circuit judges in his county the same way as they are now treating the probate judges, and he certainly wouldn't urge that we start electing them together until he gets 6 probate judges out there. The principle stays the same regardless of the number.

The committee proposal does not dally with a recommendation of 3, 4, 5 or 6 because we found we could have argued forever about where the magic number is. There isn't a magic number, and if there is a magic number, the legislature should set the magic number and then change it from time to time. We shouldn't do it in the constitution. And this ties itself in with the minority report that we just passed over a few minutes ago. We will bring it up again when we talk about allowing the legislature flexibility in this whole matter of providing for staggered terms. This demonstrates very quickly the kind of problems you get into when you try to write the details of staggered terms into the constitution. It shouldn't be done and the committee didn't attempt to do so and I recommend that you vote against the KKK amendment. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I think Mr. Ford's logic is still way off. He talks about a bedsheet ballot of 150 candidates, and I submit to you that if they are having an election of only 2 judges, there can still be a bedsheet ballot of 150 candidates. This does not stop bedsheet ballots. You cannot put a limitation on the number of people that can run for any particular office. And I understand Oakland county might have about 700 judges so we possibly could have 700 candidates.

But let's look at the fallacy of his argument. There is a runoff, a primary. Then we end up with only 6 candidates at the most to be elected. You have to make a choice at the very most, under our plan, of 12 people who are running for the office of circuit judge, where in Wayne county they have to decide between 36 people, and I submit that that is asking of the people too much. I will agree maybe 6 isn't the right number. And I'm not trying to protect only Oakland county. There are 83 counties in the state of Michigan, as I understand it. And as I understand it, this amendment would affect at least 81 counties, and therefore I am looking out for the total of the people of the state of Michigan in the great majority of our counties when I am looking out for the interest of 81 counties and not 1 county.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Barthwell.

MR. BARTHWELL: Mr. Chairman, delegates, I just want to say to Delegate Kuhn and the rest of them that are worried about us in Wayne county that we still don't want to become a state, as one of the agitators put in our mailbox, that maybe they should make us a state down there in Wayne county. We are kind of used to doing things in a big way. So don't worry about us. Treat us like you are going to treat the rest of the state.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Messrs. Kuhn and Krolikowski, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is as follows:

[The amendment was again read by the secretary. For text, see above, page 1362.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Just to emphasize what Mr. Ford said, the bar association recommended 4. We have an amendment here for 6. What is the magic number we felt could be a general proposition. There was no reason that we should discriminate in this way. I would urge the defeat of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Those in favor of the amendment offered by Messrs. Kuhn and Krolikowski will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is not adopted. Are there further amendments? Mr. Shanahan.

MR. SHANAHAN: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, in reading this last sentence, I am going to read it carefully as I see it anyway. It says "In circuits having more than one judge the terms of office shall be arranged to provide that they will expire on a staggered basis." We have 2 horrible examples, of course, Keweenaw and Wayne. Take Wayne county with 18 judges; my reading of that indicates that no 2 of the terms shall expire at the same time, which means 1 every 4 months. I have been advised that section j of 96 covers that. I can't see how it does. It would seem to me that a simple amendment would resolve all the confusion, if there is confusion in regard to this, by adding the words "as provided by law" after "basis". That will leave it up to the legislature to spell it out. I would like to be advised if I am wrong in regard to this.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Well, in essence that is what we have done when we tell the legislature in section j of Committee Proposal 96 that they shall provide the statutes for implementing this particular section, and wherever this is found in the judicial article, they shall be implemented by the legislature. I am sure the committee never intended they were going to have a judge's term expiring every 4 months because this has to be read in with the election laws, and this was not and will not and is not to be the intent.

I might state, somewhat humorously, that when Mr. Ford hit on this staggered judges, this occurred to the committee. I had privately been talking to Mr. Hutchinson who serves on the style and drafting committee, and advised him that if he could find words to express this by eliminating the word "staggered" which might have some social connotations which are not favorable, we would not object.

I might state that I personally endeavored to work this out and by the time you try to say that the legislature shall do it so that they shall alternately come due in the even numbered years on a 1/3 basis, you come out with a great number of words. And the committee worked on it too, quite seriously. We didn't particularly like the social connotation of the word but we finally felt that it represented our particular intent, what we meant to do, and if the eminent men on style and drafting can find a synonym that will express the intent, I am sure on second reading we will very willingly accept it.

The intent, Mr. Shanahan, is not to have them on an every 4 months basis. We do provide that the legislature shall have to implement this and it does not mean that they have to be on a 4 month basis. We think that the intent is there that if they provide for a reasonable breakup of the number of courts, they will have complied with the constitutional mandate. This does not say they have to be on an every 4 months. It does not say that they all have to be separate. It merely says that the terms, when there is more than one, shall be on a particular staggered basis.

I would think if they would provide for 1/3 every 2 years — maybe this is the way we should say it — that they will have complied with the mandate of the constitution. I am sure there is nobody who would say that they have not.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Are there further amendments to section b? Mr. Shanahan, did you wish to pursue the point further?

MR. SHANAHAN: Mr. Chairman and Mr. Danhof, if that term could be worked in there, it would entirely satisfy me. It is entirely academic in my area. I am sure that in the next few years we will not have more than 1 judge in our area. However, if there is any possibility of doubt and confusion, and if something could be put in along that line, I think it would be an improvement in the language of the constitution. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Are there further amendments to section b of Committee Proposal 93?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. King offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 22, after "in" by inserting "single county"; and after "than one" by striking out "judge" and inserting "but less than 10 judges, the board of supervisors may provide that"; so that the sentence will read:

> In single county circuits having more than one but less than 10 judges, the board of supervisors may provide that the term of office shall be arranged to provide that they will expire on a staggered basis.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. King, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. King.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, it looks like the KKK is dead, but before we turn in our bedsheets (laughter) I would like to have you consider one more short amendment here. Obviously Mr. Danhof is right. There is no magic number, and that includes the number 1. I think this is a local problem. And inasmuch as we have seen fit to let the board of supervisors supplement the pay of these men, I see no reason why we shouldn't let them decide this problem. I think that, without question, it is a serious problem in various parts of the state.

Miss Donnelly raises a point about knocking the whole thing out. I am sure that these distinguished 20 lawyers, along with the pharmacist to supply the aspirin (laughter) have thought very carefully about the problem of increasing the elected term of officials from 6 to 8 and from 6 to 10 years by way of constitutional mandate. I wouldn't conceive that they hadn't thought of that problem and I am sure that they decided this is proper so I won't get into that problem. I will just throw this amendment out and hope for somewhat more consideration than we got the last time around. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. King. Does any delegate desire to have it reread? If not, those in favor of the amendment will say aye; those opposed will say no.

The amendment is not adopted. Are there further amendments to section b of Committee Proposal 93?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Tubbs offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 22, after "than" by striking out "one judge" and inserting "3 judges"; so the language will then read, "In circuits having more than 3 judges the terms of office shall be arranged . . . ."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Tubbs. The Chair will recognize Mr. Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. Chairman, this is not an attempt to find the magic number. It happens that about 2 hours ago I was talking with one of the local circuit judges, and he said that Judge Carland, who had appeared before our committee on behalf of all the circuit judges, called him this morning and was quite concerned and felt that 3 would be a good number and that we ought to submit it. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Tubbs. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I can only say, Mr. Chairman, we have now switched from Oakland to Kent. We have gone from where there are 5 judges to 3. And I don't doubt what Judge Carland said, but again I think if it is good for one it is good for all. I think they are a little worried. They like safety in numbers. I don't think there is too much to worry about. I would urge the defeat of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I think if we took a private poll of all the incumbent judges in multiple judge circuits, without exception they would say that as incumbents they would rather run in a pack than run separated, and I think now the committee of the whole gets some idea of what happens with this multiple judge proposition. Mr. Tubbs wants to take care of his county. Mr. Kuhn is worried about his county. And everybody in a multiple judge county says, "This is a good thing but don't put it in my county."

Now, what we have here is a choice of supporting the committee and making it uniform throughout the state, or supporting the amendments which are obviously intended to give it to everybody else but us, meaning the people who propose the amendments. I urge that you vote no on the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Tubbs. Does anybody desire to have the amendment reread? The amendment is to strike the word "one" and insert the figure "3". Those in favor of the amendment will say aye; those opposed will say no.

The amendment is not adopted. Are there further amendments to section b?

SECRETARY CHASE: Yesterday, on motion of Mr. Downs, an amendment to Committee Proposal 91 was postponed to this particular proposal, Committee Proposal 93. The amendment is to add at the end of section b, page 2, following line 2, the following paragraph:

> For all courts of record for which a judicial nominating commission is provided, a vacancy in the office of judge shall be filled by the governor from a list of 3 nominees presented to him by a judicial nominating commission.

MR. FORD: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I notice Mr. Downs isn't on the floor and I object to this being presented as an amendment unless he is here.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is the second half of the amendment offered yesterday by Mr. Lawrence, Mr. Ford, and the committee yesterday adopted a motion by Mr. Downs to postpone consideration of Mr. Lawrence's amendment until this time.

MR. FORD: Excuse me. I understood it was Mr. Downs' amendment, not Mr. Lawrence's.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: No. We consider it at this time pursuant to Mr. Downs' motion. Unless Mr. Lawrence wishes to withdraw the amendment at this time, it is now in order.

MR. LAWRENCE: Two things: Since this is the first time I have been here since this has been acquired, I want to give due credit to the administration committee. [In his absence, a note-stand had been affixed to the microphone used by Mr. Lawrence.] Secondly, it is my understanding that this morning it was agreed with my 2 colleagues that this would not be brought up. Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mrs. Judd?

MR. LAWRENCE: Is that correct? Yes. It will not be brought up.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is withdrawn. Are there further amendments to section b? The Chair supposes the question should be, are there any more circuits to be heard from? (laughter) If not, it will pass.

Section b, as amended, is passed and the secretary will read section c.

SECRETARY CHASE: Section c.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair would in the ordinary course recognize Mr. Danhof. For what purpose does the gentleman rise, Mr. Leibrand?

MR. LIEBRAND: I rise to withdraw a minority report amendment with the consent of my cosponsors, Mr. McAllister and Miss Donnelly.

Following is the amendment pursuant to minority report A:

1. Amend page 2, line 8, after "general" by inserting "superintending".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: With the consent of Miss Donnelly and Mr. McAllister, the minority report amendment is withdrawn. Thank you, Judge Leibrand.

Mr. Danhof, you may proceed.

MR. DANHOF: I am somewhat overwhelmed. (laughter) First of all, Mr. Chairman, I think I should point out on the green sheet on Committee Proposal 93 — it is correct in the journal — on line 7 of page 2, after the word "writs" insert a semicolon. It was correctly printed in the journal. I don't know what happened in the green sheet. But insert a semicolon after the word "writs". In addition, I have filed with the secretary an amendment: on line 6, after "rule", insert the word "power". This was in the original draft of the committee. It is "power to issue, hear, and determine prerogative and remedial writs. . . ." I don't know if the first one is an amendment. I think it is just a typographical error on the green sheet. But if they are amendments, I would offer them as such.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves to amend the proposal to conform to the committee report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Danhof, on behalf of the committee on judicial branch, offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 6, after "rule;", by inserting "power"; so the language in that clause will read, "power to issue, hear, and determine prerogative and remedial writs. . . ."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the committee amendment. Those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is adopted. You may proceed, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. For an explanation of this particular section, I would again like to call upon the delegate from Oceana, Judge Pugsley.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Pugsley.

MR. PUGSLEY: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, section c is a revision of section 10 of article VII of the Constitution of 1908, the first sentence of which pertains to the jurisdiction of the circuit court in the following language:

> Circuit courts shall have original jurisdiction in all matters civil and criminal not excepted in this constitution and not prohibited by law, and appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts . . . and a supervisory control of the same.

The proposed section deletes the words "civil and criminal not excepted in this constitution". This is deleted obviously in the belief that the broad language "in all matters not prohibited by law" is self sufficient and makes unnecessary any special reference to any matters "civil or criminal."

The second clause of the first sentence of the Constitution of 1908 gives "appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals and a supervisory control of the same." The proposed section retains the appellate jurisdiction from inferior courts and tribunals, and adds thereto the words "as prescribed by supreme court rule."

The old constitution lists the names of several writs which the circuit court may issue and determine. The proposed provision substitutes instead of the names of the several writs, such other writs as may be necessary to carry into effect their orders, judgments and decrees, and gives the circuit court general control over inferior courts and tribunals within their respective jurisdictions and in all such other cases and matters as the supreme court shall by rule prescribe.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Are there any amendments to section c?

MR. PUGSLEY: I move the adoption of this section.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Sterrett.

MR. STERRETT: Mr. Chairman, I believe out of courtesy to the committee the secretary should ring the bell to get the delegates back in here.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair thinks it may be a greater courtesy to the committee just to proceed at this point, Mr. Sterrett. There are no amendments. (laughter) If there is nothing further with respect to section c — Mr. Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, I just couldn't let it go by. (laughter) I wanted to raise this problem which I see here. Apparently the appellate jurisdiction of a circuit court is going to be prescribed by supreme court rule so that a circuit court will have no appellate jurisdiction whatever unless it is prescribed by supreme court rule.

Now, here is my problem. It seems to me as though somewhere else in this list of judicial proposals we intend to permit the legislature to create courts of limited jurisdiction. I suppose that if they can by law create the courts, they define the limits of the jurisdiction. But I also would take from this language here that the legislature will be completely without any power to provide for any appeal from those courts of limited jurisdiction because the appellate power of the circuit court, which is the natural court to which that appeal should be made, is completely within the control of the supreme court by supreme court rule.

I might state that I am becoming quite disturbed in looking over these proposals to note the length to which the committee is apparently going to, shall we say, to completely assure the independence of the judiciary and so centralize it from the top down that the supreme court is going to have control almost completely outside the ken of the legislature whatsoever in the judicial branch, and here we have it to the point where in fact the legislature is apparently going to be able to create inferior courts but will not be able to provide any method of appeal from those limited court jurisdictions. Am I right? I think I am.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Let me answer Mr. Hutchinson. The language as stated is for the reason that in the original Constitution of 1908 you had constitutionally created inferior courts, namely the justices of the peace. These were not courts of record. It is anticipated that it is quite possible that courts of limited jurisdiction will be created and they will be courts of record. Now, that means that if they are, and they are manned by a lawyer as a judge and you have a trial, and you have a complete adversary proceeding — and they will be courts of record — it could well be that the appeal from these particular courts — even though they be courts of limited jurisdiction as such; you have a jury trial and you have a complete trial — would be directly to the intermediate court of appeals instead of going to the circuit courts.

Now, we cannot envision — nor can we lay down here a hard and fast rule in this regard. There has been considerable agitation and I have received considerable mail for the establishment of a family court, so called, whatever that may be. But assuming for a minute that this is created and there is transferred perhaps to that particular court divorce court jurisdiction. Now, this will be a court of record. It will be a court without a jury, because you don't try divorce cases before a jury. But certainly there could be prescribed appeal to the court of appeals. There would be no need to burden the circuit court with a particular appeal. We have approved a matter of appeal as a matter of right in criminal cases, and I submit that if you put it in there any other way, you would in effect be straitjacketing what we can determine in the light of experience as we progress under this particular judicial article.

I don't feel that there is going to be any tremendous change. Undoubtedly, if we continue a period of justice of the peace courts or municipal courts, there will be prescribed an appeal to the circuit court and probably to the court of appeals, but as time goes on there may be enacted a single county court, even though we don't write it into the constitution, and this can be a court of record and a trial court and there would be no particular need, if you have a record and if you have a complete hearing, to burden the circuit court with this type of appeal.

This is particularly what the committee had in mind. We quite agree that this is a matter of rule. The supreme court jurisdiction is going to be a matter of rule, and this, I submit, is the basic reasoning behind the committee. If the matter needs to change as new courts are brought into being, it will be easier to obtain a matter of appeal to whatever court is deemed proper under the particular circumstances, whether the court of limited jurisdiction is or is not a court of record, whether it is or is not staffed by an attorney. Now, as we have it, it will be. And it is for this reason that we wrote the article as we did and we granted original jurisdiction. The circuit court is our trial court and it is granted all original jurisdiction not prohibited by law, which is what it had before. It is granted constitutionally. I suppose by statute it could be taken away but I don't know where they would go with it, and they haven't. But this is the reason for it. We think it allows experience to govern as we go into our court of appeals, as we see what work load they have, whether or not there should be changes made. It was for this reason that we granted the appeal as we have granted appeal to the supreme court as a matter of rule.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: At the time Mr. Sterrett's request was made, the Chair did not anticipate the discussion which has developed. Since then the Chair has had further requests that the bell be rung, and the secretary will ring the bell. You may proceed, Senator Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, continuing this matter, I had always supposed that the matter of what jurisdiction a court would have, whether it be original or appellate, was properly a matter of law; that is, the legislature should define matters like jurisdiction and venue.

Then with regard to procedure, I am willing to agree that that is something within the purview of the court rule, but certainly jurisdiction and venue, I had been led to believe, were matters properly within the consideration of the legislature, and here we go saying that the appellate jurisdiction of a circuit court will be defined by the supreme court, not by the legislature at all. And Mr. Danhof proceeds to say that the committee envisions that the appeal from these courts of limited jurisdiction perhaps might not be made to the circuit court at all; it would be made to the intermediate appellate court which we will see above the circuit.

Well, if that is going to be the situation, then I wonder how that fits in with this idea that the circuit court shall have supervisory and general control over inferior courts and tribunals within their respective jurisdictions. I ask you to consider the logic of expecting a circuit court which would have no appellate jurisdiction from these inferior tribunals whatever to be at all concerned or how they could be properly concerned with a court or a tribunal from which they never receive any business. They have no concern because the appeal never comes to them.

If the purpose of supervisory and general control over inferior tribunals is desirable in order to provide for uniformity of procedure in those lower tribunals so that the records will come up to the appellate court in proper shape and so on and the practice in those lower tribunals will be uniform to accomplish and to accommodate the appellate tribunal — and that is the purpose of supervisory control — then if you are going to have a situation where the circuit court is not going to be the appellate tribunal, following Mr. Danhof's suggestion, there is no reason to have supervisory control in the circuit court.

I don't believe that I can follow the wisdom of this proposal as it stands. I think the committee ought to agree that if it wants to have this appellate jurisdiction set in part by supreme court rule, it ought to also provide that it could be set by law so that the legislature in creating a court of limited jurisdiction could at least say where the appeal is going to go from such a court.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Hart, Judge Pugsley.

MR. PUGSLEY: I think Senator Hutchinson's point is well raised if we accept his interpretation of this language. I think that what was intended by this provision — at least it was my understanding of it — is that the point of supervision is a procedural question. The language does seem to be quite clear that circuit courts shall have appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals. Then follows the language which prompts his question, "as prescribed by supreme court rule." At first blush, my interpretation of that was that it was explanatory of the procedure which should be decided by the supreme court. If his interpretation is a correct one, then I think that it should so state. My first impression was that there was no question about the circuit court having the jurisdiction from the inferior court but that the supreme court would define the method of procedure.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I don't know, Mr. Chairman, if Mr. Hutchinson has raised a question. I don't know whether he has introduced an amendment or whether he hasn't.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: There is no amendment on the secretary's desk.

MR. DANHOF: I can state that as we proceed by the rule, the supervisory and general control is again as prescribed, as it must be, as it was under the 1908 constitution, because the supreme court had general jurisdiction over all inferior courts, and so it would delegate down and would probably give to the supreme court such supervisory control over the inferior courts within the circuit as it is so stated, even though in the particular language the circuit courts have the supervisory and general control. Now, we agree, and we iron it out in accordance with rules in, of course, the last sentence therein.

I can only state that if there is no amendment, I would ask that it would pass. However, the committee is going to meet tomorrow morning. I have called a meeting for other matters, and we might add this to it. If there is an amendment, why, we should take it up.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Has the secretary an amendment?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hutchinson offers the following amendment —

MR. BLEDSOE: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Bledsoe.

MR. BLEDSOE: In conformity with Mr. Danhof's suggestion, may this pass over until the committee meeting tomorrow morning by the judicial committee?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, did you make your suggestion in the form of a motion or not?

MR. BLEDSOE: I so move.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Bledsoe moves that further consideration of Committee Proposal 93 be postponed until tomorrow morning.

MR. DANHOF: This is section c only, I assume?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Did you limit your motion to section c, Mr. Bledsoe? Mr. Bledsoe moves that further consideration of section c of Committee Proposal 93 be deferred until tomorrow morning. Mr. Lundgren, do you desire recognition on the motion?

MR. LUNDGREN: Yes, Mr. Chairman. If we keep on postponing all these things, I don't know if you are going to have a quorum in this room to listen to anything.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the motion of Mr. Bledsoe. Those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion does not prevail.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hutchinson offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 6, after "tribunals" by striking out "as prescribed by supreme court rule"; so that the phrase will read, "appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals. . . ."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Hutchinson. Those in favor of the amendment — Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I thought you were going to recognize the sponsor.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The sponsor did not appear to seek recognition.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Well, Mr. Chairman, I didn't seek recognition because I think that my case for the amendment has already been presented and I don't want to have to do it again.

MR. DANHOF: Well, again, if you strike this language, you are freezing it in absolutely that every court would have an automatic right of appeal to the circuit courts. I don't think that is necessarily desirable. I don't think it is needed. I think if they have a trial in a lower court as it is prescribed by the statute to be a court of record, why should there be appeal to the circuit court and burden the circuit court with this appellate matter? Why can't it be heard directly? There is no particular reason. Referring to the probate court, we are going to have attorneys running the probate courts. From there it could go directly to the court of appeals if there is a valid trial.

Now, if somebody wanted to add "or by law" in here so that there would be some discretion, that would be all right. But to freeze it into the constitution that there must be direct appeal from the inferior courts and tribunals to the circuit court I think is just hamstringing the operation of the circuit court and making it costly to the litigants if they have to go to a second step, and just prescribing additional steps which you might reach directly by going to a court of appeals. I think that for this, the present amendment by all means should be defeated, because now you are freezing in here from all inferior courts and tribunals, whatever that may be determined to be, for all time they have to be appealed to the circuit courts, and I just think that we should not make this as inflexible as this particular thing, and I would urge the defeat of the amendment.

MR. NORRIS: Point of information.

MR. BLEDSOE: Mr. Chairman, I would request that—

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Bledsoe, would you yield momentarily so Mr. Norris may make his point of information?

MR. BLEDSOE: Yes.

MR. NORRIS: I just wanted to inquire, Mr. Chairman, as to the precise language of the amendment and where it is to be inserted so we can follow this discussion a little better.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The secretary will reread the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hutchinson's amendment:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Hutchinson, the Chair will recognize Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, I wish to support Mr. Danhof and the committee and oppose this amendment. We are not here talking necessarily about the present situation as it exists. If it continues to exist the way it does now, the supreme court by rule will probably keep about the same appellate practice. We don't know exactly what the future will bring. We would certainly be making a serious error to freeze in a situation because we think we know what it is when as a matter of fact we don't know. This permits the development of a series, perhaps, of different types of appellate practice depending upon what courts exist. I think the committee proposal is proper and the amendment should be defeated.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Bledsoe, do you desire recognition on the amendment?

MR. BLEDSOE: I simply wanted to ask Mr. Danhof a question, whether or not this had reference to or included appeals from the traffic court and recorder's court for the city of Detroit.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Does the gentleman care to answer? Mr. Danhof, did you hear the question?

MR. DANHOF: Personally, Mr. Bledsoe, you have practiced there in Detroit a lot longer than I have as to where you appeal from traffic court and recorder's court. I have never had the opportunity to be in there. But I would imagine at least that it might not have any effect thereon at all. Perhaps if you leave the committee report as it is, you might get a court rule which would correct it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Bledsoe.

MR. BLEDSOE: Is it just that indefinite? I think that Mr. Hutchinson's amendment is well founded, because it does not include that presently under the language that it is set up in.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hutchinson, do you desire recognition at this time?

MR. HUTCHINSON: No.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: I rise to support Senator Hutchinson's amendment because I do not believe that freezing this in will do what Mr. Everett thinks it will do. The last line "and jurisdiction of other cases and matters as the supreme court shall by rule prescribe" handles the issue that I believe he wishes handled. In this instance, Mr. Hutchinson's amendment in effect puts it back to the original jurisdiction the circuit courts have. To leave the committee proposal as it is, the jurisdiction in the circuit courts is only that which is going to be determined generally by supreme court rule.

In this instance they thought the creation of an intermediate appellate court would take care of any problems. In my mind it doesn't. To my best knowledge, as I listened to the various justices from the supreme court who urged us to create an intermediate appellate court, they wanted this court created to relieve them. They did not wish this court created to relieve the circuit court. I do not know that the circuit court needs this relief. By allowing the jurisdiction to the circuit courts in the first instance from the inferior tribunals, we mean from the various justice courts as they were or will be when changed by the legislature, the municipal courts and these courts of inferior jurisdiction in this area.

Now, to allow an appeal constitutionally or to prescribe and require appeal constitutionally to the circuit courts in the first instance in my mind would do a few things, which primarily means that the individual litigants living in an area will go to their circuit courts first. They will not go miles to an intermediate appellate court which can be wherever it is deemed to be in these various districts as we have set up.

The circuit courts had this jurisdiction originally. It will not do anything but return to them what jurisdiction they presently have and allow a quicker, in my opinion, cheaper immediate appeal. The court rule under line 10 can apply other aspects by their rule, but at this stage of the game the circuit courts are losing jurisdiction, getting less work proportionately. By allowing the supreme court by rule to do anything they want, they are taking away power that is presently in the circuit courts, presently set there, and not allowing the legislature to act in any way.

Now, I think we have to make up our mind somewhere along the line how much power this supreme court is to have, how much power the legislature is supposed to have. We have uniformly throughout this article put all power in the supreme court. We don't know how we are going to get anybody on the supreme court. This is our big problem right now. But all the power is going to be there. We do know how we are going to get the power of the circuit up until this point. And I therefore support Mr. Hutchinson's amendment on the theory that we are merely returning the power to the circuit courts they originally had, allowing the supreme court by court rule to amend the jurisdiction of other cases and matters as the supreme court shall by rule prescribe, but giving back their power and allowing the intermediate appellate court to take the job away from the supreme court, which is what I understood the justices of the supreme court wanted, not this part.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Senator Hutchinson, the Chair recognizes Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, we voted down a few minutes ago an attempt to pass over this, and I think that we ought to recognize just what a complex problem comes up, and it comes up not because the committee didn't work on this for a long time, because, like all committees, we stay so close to the individual problem that we begin to think sometimes from the same point of view.

Mr. Hutchinson has now approached this with a fresh point of view. If Mr. Hutchinson's construction of the language could properly be followed by the court, I don't think that it would carry out the intent of the committee. However, if we adopt Mr. Hutchinson's amendment for the reasons that he has stated, this isn't going to carry out the intent of the committee either.

The existing language of the constitution is not qualified. It simply says that there will be appellate jurisdiction, and it doesn't qualify it by saying as provided by law or as provided by court rule, and what has actually happened is that it has been provided in both ways. There are numerous statutes such as the civil service act, the FEPC act, workmen's compensation act that specify where you appeal, how you appeal and what the court can do when it gets the appeal. By the same token you have very detailed court rules on how you appeal from the common pleas court, for example, to the circuit courts in Wayne county, and I assume they have similar rules covering the other appellate courts. When you get to municipal courts, there are court rules that cover the appeal and there are also statutes that cover the appeal. They are not in conflict one with another. One takes over where the other one leaves off.

I don't think we would want to preclude the legislature from, by statute, prescribing a method of appeal, nor would we want to take the supreme court out of the business of making rules, and it appears to me now that it is going to be impossible through this method to get language that is not likely to cause trouble. I think that we would better serve the interests of this section if we passed over and gave Mr. Hutchinson, who is a member of style and drafting, and Mr. Danhof and other members of the committee an opportunity to work with this language a little bit and see if we can't say what we really meant to say, because I don't think that Mr. Hutchinson and Judge Pugsley in their explanation really disagree with one another, but Mr. Hutchinson does raise a valid fear here not because by adopting this we are getting anything really strange, but by adopting it in this manner we might be creating a false impression when the court interprets this section. I would like to move that we pass over consideration of this at least until tomorrow's session. Mr. Faxon has an amendment that would help also. Maybe we can put these things together and clear this language up, having the benefit of the fresh point of view expressed by Mr. Hutchinson.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford moves that further consideration of section c of Committee Proposal 93 be deferred until tomorrow morning.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, haven't we already acted on this?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Faxon raises the point of order that we have already acted on a similar motion. However, there has been intervening business. Therefore, the motion is now in order. Those in favor will say aye; those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The secretary will read section d of Committee Proposal 93.

SECRETARY CHASE: Section d:

[Section d was read by the secretary. For text, see above, page 1355.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, in the absence of Judge Mosier, I can state that this is a reenactment of section 11 of article VII of the Constitution of 1908. I should further point out that at the time that this matter was adopted, the majority report of the committee on local government provided for these particular offices to be found in every county.

Now, in light of the adoption at this convention of the home rule provisions for counties, it might be that some revision of this particular section would be in order. At the time it was adopted the committee on local government had written in there that there would be constitutional offices, at least the 2 that are here mentioned. We now have left to the legislature the home rule provision, but we don't know exactly what they will do and it is possible that the offices as named might be consolidated or their names changed. This is a problem on which the judiciary committee could not, of course, proceed.

When we reached this section in our deliberation, the question arose within the committee as to whether or not this was a proper matter for the judiciary committee to handle. I think the first sentence, "The clerk of each county organized for judicial purposes shall be clerk of the circuit court for such county" is properly within the judicial article and within the jurisdiction of our committee. Our committee heard from various people, and we reached a unanimous recommendation that this should continue. There was talk that perhaps the circuits should be allowed to pick their own clerk, but this was discarded.

Now, the remaining sentence, "The judges of the circuit courts may fill any vacancy in the office of county clerk or prosecuting attorney within their respective jurisdictions, but shall not exercise any other power. . . ." At the outset, it would appear that in 1908, because the clerk of the county was the clerk of the court — and at that time being clerk of the court may have been the main job — and because the prosecuting attorney was so closely aligned with the court and with the enforcement of justice, they rendered to the circuit judges these 2 powers of appointment in case of vacancy. The committee debated whether or not this was a proper matter for the judiciary committee to determine, concluded that it was and that, because of the fact that it was in the judicial article, it had been primarily assigned to it, we proceeded to reenact the section. I made contact with the chairman of the local government committee, and he advised that they approved our particular action.

Now, I realize that questions are going to arise. I am not sure whether they are judicial in nature or whether they are local government in nature. But we did reenact the section, the theory being that the prosecuting attorney is so closely aligned with the court, and in the event of a vacancy, the judge might be the best qualified to pick the attorney to carry on and make sure law enforcement is continued. And also because the clerk of the county was the clerk of the court, in lieu of this, why, we likewise recommend the continuance of this particular provision.

Now somebody might say, "Well, why not the register of deeds and the treasurer?" And my only answer is I don't imagine they have anything at all to do with the court. There is at least some indirect connection between the county clerk and the circuit judge in the court in that he is the clerk of the court, and for the prosecuting attorney. Therefore, the committee recommended the continuance of this particular section. And, as we stated, the committee on local government concurred in the reenactment of this particular provision.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. William Hanna.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a couple of questions to the chairman of the local government committee because I believe this cuts over there. As I examine Committee Proposal 81 which was passed, there is no provision for the filling of vacancies in other county officers. It does not say who will fill, nor does it say that vacancies will be filled as provided by law.

Now, the first question is: how are other county officers to be filled? The second question is: is there any conflict with possible home rule provisions in which a home rule law was enacted by the legislature similar to the home rule act of cities, and pursuant to that home rule act the legislative body of the county proceeded to say that a clerk shall be appointed by the legislative body to serve at its pleasure. You would have a direct conflict with this provision as to who appointed upon the resignation or termination of the person who was holding the then clerk's office. And it seems to me that there is this conflict. The third conflict that I see is one that perturbs me from a philosophical basis. We provide here for an individual or a group of individuals to make an appointment without any confirmation by any other body. In a single judge circuit — or in our county, which would be only 2 judges in which it would boil down to 1 judge making the appointment — this appointment will be made without any consultation with the board of supervisors or otherwise.

Those are the 3 questions. First, how do you fill vacancies for other officers according to this constitution? Secondly, will this interfere with legitimate home rule if we conceive of the enabling act for counties to be comparable to cities? And, third, whether or not from a philosophical basis the local government committee should allow 1 man to make an appointment without any advice and consent or approval of the legislative body of a county who presumably represents the people?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hanna, the Chair understands you desire to yield to Mr. Arthur Elliott for answers to your questions?

MR. W. F. HANNA: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair recognizes Mr. Arthur Elliott.

MR. A. G. ELLIOTT: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hanna, I truthfully can't tell you whether it is constitutional or statutory, and I feel that you probably could. The other officers of the county are appointed by the prosecutor, the clerk and the probate judges, so that would be the reason, of course, why the prosecutor and the clerk should not be a part of this particular article. I think the point you raise about the provisions that might be made in a home rule county is valid. They were not considered by us, and in the article which we have under consideration at no point did any of the appointments to vacancies come up. It wasn't in the article as in the 1908 constitution, and we frankly did not discuss it in committee except to concur with the judiciary on this approach to the clerk, which we did do.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake, did you desire recognition on this point?

MR. BRAKE: No, Mr. Chairman. It was another point.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I wish to support the committee proposal with respect to this section. There are numerous articles similar to Mr. Hanna's. These were discussed in some detail by the committee. There are clear and cogent reasons why both sections of this particular paragraph deserve a place in the constitution. I urge that you support the committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Are there any amendments to section d?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Faxon offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 16, after "jurisdictions,", by inserting "unless otherwise provided by law,"; so that the sentence will read:

> The judges of the circuit courts may fill any vacancy in the office of county clerk or prosecuting attorney within their respective jurisdictions, unless otherwise provided by law, but shall not exercise any other power of appointment to public office.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Faxon and on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, is it the desire of the chairman of the committee to speak? I just simply state the purpose of the amendment is to provide in the event that some home rule charters are developed for counties where they do provide for the filling of vacancies, that this would give the opportunity to the legislature to work out a method that would be in line with the wishes of the county or what the law would like to provide in that case. I yield to Mr. Danhof if he cares to comment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: The only thing that comes to mind when I hear this is that if we don't put anything in, it has to be provided by law then, and maybe if you want to do that, you would strike the whole last sentence rather than to say "as provided by law," because if you say nothing, somebody has to provide for the filling of vacancies and they will provide for it the same as they have for the filling of vacancies in other county offices, which has been by law. Therefore, on the particular amendment, I am not sure that it offers any particular advancement over the committee proposal. I would feel it should be opposed.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: The language is "unless otherwise provided by law," so that it would still keep it within the present method of filling the appointment unless otherwise provided in case the legislature saw fit to develop some method by which county charters would provide for the filling of vacancies. It is otherwise provided. I don't see that the language does give any flexibility to it unless I don't know how to read it right. It just says that the judges of the circuit court may fill any vacancy. Is that word "may" the one that gives them flexibility in terms of letting the legislature do it otherwise? Perhaps I am just not reading that word right. The word "may" on line 15; is that what gives it flexibility?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Which of you gentlemen and ladies would like recognition? (laughter) Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Faxon, at first your amendment would seem not to make too much difference, but actually it might have the effect of taking away the constitutional aspects of these 2 particular appointments, and there is a rationale as to why these particular 2 county officials should be appointed, if a vacancy occurs, by the manner prescribed here. As Mr. Danhof has already indicated, it comes from a long tradition of recognizing that the judges are most likely to know the qualifications and needs for these 2 offices because they traditionally have been close to the court.

We have had an experience in Wayne county, and not so long ago, where such an appointment was made. Whether you agree or disagree with the wisdom of the appointment, it became apparent at that time that you really have a question on your hands when an important officer like the prosecutor, who is charged with law enforcement, leaves office and you face the question of whether you want to throw this into the political arena at large or whether you should ask the people who really know or should know what is going on in that county with respect to law enforcement, and that is the judges. Then after they have been appointed in this way, as Mr. Elliott has indicated, they have some importance because the county clerk takes on appointive powers for filling vacancies.

Your problem about county home rule I don't believe is a very serious one at this point because it is my understanding that the legislature would have the authority under the home rule provision that was passed by the constitutional convention thus far to eliminate any or all of the county officials and to provide for the manner of electing, selecting or replacing them in any way they saw fit, either by statute or by a provision permitting a charter to do this, so I don't think this would have any effect on or be in any way in conflict with the home rule provision.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Well, my only comment is that I am not suggesting any other methods of selection or of filling of the vacancies. I am simply trying to make the language consistent so that if time develops where there are alternative solutions necessary, the legislature could provide for it. And I understand that under the county home rule charter that we have provided, the legislature has this flexibility, but it would seem here that there is a certain degree of mandatory language. I may be wrong in my interpretation, but this is the way it struck me. That is all.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Bay City, Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: I rise to support the committee proposal. That exact language has been in the constitution for 54 years, and it has the great advantage that the people back in 1908 voted on it, liked it and carried it. I think we should leave it there.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett, do you desire recognition at this time?

MR. EVERETT: I simply want to echo Judge Leibrand's comments that this is the present language and it has worked. I particularly rose because I know if Judge Mosier were here, he would want to be heard on this. He was very vigorous within the committee in recommending that this power be left where it is and where it has been for all these years. In 4 months of committee sessions not one person from the clerks association — and they appeared before us — from the prosecutors association, from the general public, even from the league of women voters appeared before us and suggested that we make any change. I submit this is one time when we ought to stick with the committee and vote down this proposed change or any other change.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The lady from Grand Rapids, Mrs. Judd.

MRS. JUDD: I never heard the league of women voters mention it either. I think we are getting overly concerned about a problem which certainly won't arise for a good many years, and if it does arise it will be only with respect to a very few counties, and we do have the rest of the 83 counties to think of.

I would, however, like to ask a question of Mr. Danhof, and that is I would like to know if there was any other reason for using the county clerk as the clerk of the circuit court than the one that "we always have done so." I would think with the increasing populations and business of the county, that it might be necessary to consider whether the county clerk can carry all of these jobs.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mrs. Judd yields to Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Yes, Mrs. Judd, there was another reason. It was proposed that perhaps each circuit judge should appoint his own clerk. And we took some testimony in this particular regard. First of all, we felt that at least 1 county, being Wayne, had a civil service system and this, we felt, might be moving to other large counties and that it would eliminate political log rolling, so to speak — the appointment of relatives to become clerk of the court or assistant clerk of the court — and as a consequence would make for a better administration of justice.

Now, as a practical matter, what happens in larger counties is that the county clerk himself does not do it, but he has a deputy who is assigned to the court, and it is my understanding that in those areas where you have more than one judge, they each have one assigned. These men are normally screened and have some qualifications for handling records and meeting with the public and keeping lawyers happy and so forth, and the judge may have some discretion in his particular clerk but it is not a political appointment.

We felt that we get better service. We further feel that there is an integration of the records with all of the other records within the county, and consequently, all in all, it was best that the clerk be given the overall control of the courts along with all of the other myriad duties that he performs.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. William Hanna.

MR. W. F. HANNA: I will pass.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. William Hanna passes. Mr. Elliott.

MR. GADOLA: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Gadola.

MR. GADOLA: In 30 years on the bench I have only had the opportunity of appointing one clerk, and that was, I appointed the man's wife. He left to go into service in '42. And I was very pleased to make that appointment.

Remember that the clerk is the one that has charge of all the records of the circuit court. The clerk writes the journal. And, you know, the circuit judges can't conceal too much, because every day there is a diary written of their doings and they sign it every day, and you can find it 1,000 years from now if the records are kept. So I say that the clerk is the official of the judge and under the supervision of the judge. The legislature has seen fit to pile obligations and duties upon duties on the clerk, but nevertheless primarily he is under the supervision and jurisdiction of the judge, as is the prosecuting attorney. Even our court stenographer that we now call reporter is not appointed by the circuit judge. He is appointed by the governor. So I say that the proposition is proper to leave the appointment of those 2 officials with the judges.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Elliott.

MR. A. G. ELLIOTT: Mr. Chairman, I just don't know that we should try to clarify this right now except that from what has been said and if I understand it correctly, from what was said by Mr. Ford and by other members of this committee, their feeling is that from line 14 through 17 would not in any way affect the provisions of Committee Proposal 89 as adopted under county home rule, and I assume that the reason why they say that is because of the permissive word "may" in line 15. I too feel that the clerk should be the clerk of the circuit court. I have no quarrel with this. I just wanted to make sure that we weren't in conflict here with 2 of our proposals.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Elliott yields to Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: The reason for the word "may" is a little different than might at first glance suggest itself, and that is that traditionally judges have been restricted from exercising any power of appointment to public office, and we have had such a restriction in our constitution at least since 1835. Now, when this language was put in, the word "may" probably appealed to them and was very clear because up until that time no judge could appoint anyone to any public office. And then they said, because of the nature of these offices, we are going to make an exception and say that the court may appoint these 2 particular officers.

Now, I don't know as a legal proposition whether the legislature could take that power away from them. I don't know that this constitution guarantees that power. But I do know that this language in the constitution clearly, when read in context with other prohibitions that we have in the judiciary article, makes it possible for them to make the appointment, and without it the rest of the constitution standing alone would prohibit such an appointment.

MR. A. G. ELLIOTT: I just want to make the point perfectly clear that under the provisions of Committee Proposal 89 as adopted, we had left to the counties the right to frame, adopt, amend and repeal their charter in a manner and with powers as provided by general law and permit the organization of county government in forms different from the form set forth in this constitution. So if we have a conflict here and if there is a possibility for this conflict to be plaguing us in the future years, I think in good conscience the attorneys who would be able better to enunciate that conflict should do so, so that we can at least resolve it and make it easier by our debate or discussion for the legislature and for the courts to know what we intended. I am assuming that there is no conflict and that the county home rule does give to the counties these rights that I have just described.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Hart, Judge Pugsley, speaking on the Faxon amendment.

MR. PUGSLEY: I think everything that I have had to say has already been covered. As Judge Gadola has said, the clerk of the county is the clerk of the court. I have had occasion in all 3 of the counties in my circuit to appoint a clerk; in one of the counties I appointed 3. And the language which we have before us is the same language, as Judge Leibrand has pointed out, which has been in the constitution since 1908. It is identically the same.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: The question I had, Mr. Chairman, has been led into by Judge Gadola. Judge, you said the appointment of your court reporter is made by the governor, but it is made on the recommendation of the circuit judge, isn't it?

MR. GADOLA: Yes, through the governor.

MR. BRAKE: Yes, upon the judge's recommendation. And as I remember it, the friend of the court situation is the same. The judge recommends him and the governor appoints him, and he is not at liberty to appoint anybody who has not been recommended by the judge. I assume that this circuitous method of making the appointment is due to that remaining language there which says that the judge may not make any other appointment. I would like to ask Mr. Danhof if his committee thinks that it is advisable that we go on through the years with that circuitous method when obviously it is the judge who ought to make the appointment of both the reporter and the friend of the court.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake, would you be kind enough to defer that question until we have disposed of the Faxon amendment?

MR. BRAKE: I raised it, Mr. Chairman, because Mr. Danhof suggested that we strike out the whole sentence rather than Mr. Faxon's amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair thinks that currently before the committee is the amendment offered by Mr. Faxon which the secretary will read.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that all of these prominent lawyers and judges have all seen fit to oppose the amendment and that no one has seen fit to support it, I will withdraw it at this time. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Faxon withdraws his amendment.

Mr. Brake's inquiry to the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof, is therefore in order, and the Chair will recognize Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: The basis, Mr. Brake, was that we felt — and perhaps this was not valid — that a judge should refrain from making other appointments to public office. I can understand your concern for these particular ideas. In the supreme court we got around it by giving them their staff and that was it.

Now, Mr. Bonisteel raised the same question there. But, you see, if you take it out, I suppose they can grant to the courts the power of appointment for all kinds of different offices.

The legislature might — and it is the theory that perhaps in the line, except for these 2 — the theory was that this should not be granted to a circuit judge and that the legislature should not be given the opportunity to even grant it. Some offices might be political in nature, and they felt that the judge should not exercise the power of appointment. Consequently, we continued this philosophy through not only for the supreme court but also for the circuit courts except for this particular idea. To my knowledge this was the only thinking that we did on it.

As I explained to you in the beginning, very frankly, this last sentence was a matter that we weren't sure was judicial or belonged to local government and we did feel very strongly on the first sentence, and I emphasize that. The clerk of the county will be the clerk of the court. This we do insist on. And the remaining part we passed and felt that the reasons for filling these 2 vacancies should occur, but there should be no other particular appointment. That, in essence, is about all the light I can shed on the reasoning of the committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: While we are recording unusual incidents in the history of Michigan, it might not be inappropriate for me to make reference to something that will emphasize the importance of these things. The fact that the judge can make the recommendation to the governor and the governor has the power to make the appointment doesn't always insure that the appointment is made.

Many years ago in the twenty-third judicial circuit, we had a stenographer who was also a lawyer. The time came when the judge told him that he should either stop practicing law or stop being circuit court stenographer. He refused to give up either. So the judge made an order suspending him from office which, because it wasn't lifted for 30 or 60 days, under the statute became a removal. The judge didn't like the stenographer. The attorney general didn't like the judge. The governor depended upon the attorney general's advice, and for 2 years the governor decided he wouldn't make an appointment. Then the attorney general became governor and stayed governor for 6 years and refused to make an appointment of anybody recommended by the judge, so for a period of about 8 years, every time he wanted to hold court in the twenty-third judicial circuit, an arrangement had to be made with some stenographer to come in from outside to be paid on a per diem basis.

So there are occasions when these things that look so simple on their surface may become quite serious.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Is there any further amendment to section d?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Prettie offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 13, after "purposes" by inserting a comma and "or other officer performing the duties of such office,"; so that the language will then read, "The clerk of each county organized for judicial purposes, or other officer performing the duties of such office, shall be clerk of the circuit court for such county."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Prettie, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Prettie.

MR. PRETTIE: Referring to the citizens research manual dealing with this section, which has been copied identically from the 1908 constitution, the comment says, "This provision has given rise to no difficulty." We have been on it now for about 25 minutes, but I do think Committee Proposal 89 poses a problem where we may have in a home rule county a combination of officers or an elimination of the particular elective office of the county clerk. I think now is the time to face it and solve it and not have a possible conflict in the document we write. I think if we add the language of the amendment proposed, the county clerk in those counties having historic structure and officers will be the clerk of the court, and in those counties which in the future may adopt home rule, the officer performing that duty will perform the duty of the clerk of the court too.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Prettie. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Elliott's opinion on this. My own thinking is that it offers no particular objection, but it does affect his particular committee also, and maybe we should get an expression there.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Elliott.

MR. A. G. ELLIOTT: I think it clarifies the point quite well and I would have no objection.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Prettie. Those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is adopted. Are there further amendments to section d?

SECRETARY CHASE: None on file, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: There being no further amendments, it will pass.

Section d, as amended, is passed. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I move the committee do now rise, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves that the committee do now rise. Those in favor of the motion will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails and the committee will rise.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, Vice President Hutchinson assumed the Chair.]

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will be in order, and the Chair recognizes the delegate from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration several matters of which the secretary will give a detailed report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 93, has adopted several amendments thereto, has postponed consideration of section c until tomorrow; has come to no final resolution thereon. Also the committee of the whole has in committee postponed consideration of Committee Proposal 91 and Committee Proposal 92 by placing them at the foot of the general orders calendar for the committee on the judicial branch. This completes the report of the committee of the whole.

[President Nisbet resumed the Chair.]

PRESIDENT NISBET: Are there any announcements?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mrs. Butler has the following request. She has sent her new Michigan manual around to get the signatures of all the delegates so that she might present it to the Houghton county historical museum. She has lost track of it and would appreciate having it returned to her desk.

Another announcement, a request that all delegates please check their mailboxes immediately following the session today.

The committee on judicial branch will meet in room B tomorrow morning at 8:30 a.m. Robert J. Danhof, chairman.

The committee on style and drafting will meet at 8:00 o'clock this evening in room K. Mr. William B. Cudlip, chairman.

We have the following requests for leave of absence: Mr. Downs asks an indefinite leave due to coming down with influenza; Mrs. Koeze wishes to be excused from Friday's session; and Mr. Stamm requests leave to be absent from tomorrow morning's session.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Without objection, the requests are granted.

Lots of times I think we do not recognize the very capable help of our young ladies up here at the rostrum. This happens to be the birthday of our very capable Lynn Nethaway here who has the flowers in front of her. (applause)

The Chair recognizes Mr. Martin.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. President, I move we adjourn.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on adjournment. Those in favor say aye. Opposed, no.

We are adjourned until tomorrow morning at 9:30.

[Whereupon, at 5:00 o'clock p.m., the convention adjourned until 9:30 o'clock a.m. Thursday, March 1, 1962.]

NINETIETH DAY

Thursday, March 1, 1962, 9:30 o'clock a.m.

PROCEEDINGS

PRESIDENT NISBET: The convention will please come to order.

Our invocation this morning will be given by one of our own delegates, Roy Howes, of Manistee county.

MR. HOWES: Let us pray. Our heavenly Father, Thou knowest that we delegates at times become discouraged here as we are apt to do in our everyday lives in this time of threat of nuclear war. Help us to realize in this convention that our capitol at Washington and all our state capitols are the symbols of freedom and justice that have grown from something which was kept alive when men had more reason to be discouraged than we have here now. Help us to see what we might have in place of these symbols of freedom if our forefathers had given up during their darkest hours.

O Lord, help us to remember that it was during the darkest hours of history that many of the seeds were planted which grew into the greatest glories of mankind in its incessant fight against man's inhumanity to man. Help us to keep these thoughts before us as we endeavor to create a new constitution under which freedom and courage will continue to grow and under which other laws can be made which will apply equality and justice to all our people. These things we ask in Thy name. Amen.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The roll call will be taken by the secretary. Those present please vote aye. Have you all recorded your presence? If so, the secretary will take the roll.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

Prior to today's session, the secretary received the following requests for leave:

Dr. Anspach wishes to be excused from today's session for attendance at a funeral and Mr. Hatch, indefinitely, due to illness.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Without objection, the requests are granted.

SECRETARY CHASE: Absent with leave: Mr. Anspach, Miss Hart, Messrs. Hatch, Marshall, Mosier and Stamm.

Absent without leave: Messrs. Lesinski and Nord.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Without objection, the delegates are excused.

[During the proceedings, the following delegates entered the chamber and took their seats: Messrs. Nord and Stamm.]

[Whereupon, Mr. Van Dusen assumed the Chair to preside as chairman of the committee of the whole.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will be in order. When the committee last sat, we were considering Committee Proposal 93, A proposal pertaining to the circuit court; and had deferred until this morning's session consideration of section c dealing with certain jurisdiction of the circuit courts.

For last previous action by the committee of the whole on Committee Proposal 93, see above, page 1355.

Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, the committee on judicial branch met this morning. There is on the secretary's desk an amendment which I will ask the secretary to read.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, the secretary still has pending an amendment offered yesterday by Senator Hutchinson. Does Mr. Hutchinson desire to withdraw that amendment at this time?

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that amendment, understanding that the committee amendment to be offered takes care of the problem.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hutchinson withdraws his amendment. The secretary will read the committee amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Danhof, on behalf of the committee on judicial branch, offers the following amendment to Committee Proposal 93, section c:

1. Amend page 2, line 6, after "tribunals" by striking out "as prescribed by supreme court rule" and inserting "except as otherwise provided by law"; so that the language will then read, "Circuit courts shall have original jurisdiction in all matters not prohibited by law; appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals except as otherwise provided by law."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Danhof, on behalf of the committee on judicial branch, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, it was the opinion of the committee on judicial branch that the words which you have heard read by the secretary will be adequate in this particular regard and would remedy some of the objections that have been raised before.

The question of whether or not there should be anything inserted therein; that is, whether the words "except as otherwise provided by law" should be inserted or whether it should merely be left "appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals." It was the considered opinion of all those present at the committee that a certain degree of flexibility was desirable in this particular case; that if the appellate jurisdiction were frozen completely in the constitution, there would be no chance at any time to make any needed reform. As a consequence, in view of the language which we had adopted relative to the court of appeals which allows that jurisdiction to be set by law, upon a vote, the majority of the total committee adopted the language "except as otherwise provided by law." We urge the adoption of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Danhof, on behalf of the committee on judicial branch. Those in favor of the amendment will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is adopted. Are there further amendments to section c of Committee Proposal 93?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. McAllister offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 9, after "with" by striking out "supreme" and inserting "circuit"; so the language will then read, "supervisory and general control over inferior courts and tribunals within their respective jurisdictions, in accordance with circuit court rules. . . ."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. McAllister. Mr. McAllister, do you seek recognition on your amendment?

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I have offered this amendment, because without this amendment it is my contention that this particular sentence, the last sentence in this section c, will have no meaning at all, because if the circuit court doesn't have control over the inferior courts with circuit court rules, they will be merely acting as an administrative agency for the supreme court and this particular sentence would be unnecessary.

The other provisions set forth that the supreme court has control over practically everything as far as the courts are concerned. One amendment to this section has corrected that phase as far as that part of section c is concerned. But I am concerned about the fact that if the circuit courts are to have superintending control over the inferior courts, the courts below them, that then they should be able to make the rules concerning those courts and not be just an administrative agency for the supreme court, and I move the adoption of this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. McAllister, the Chair recognizes Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Members of the committee, you have passed and have granted, in effect, the supreme court, as it now has under the Constitution of 1908, the general superintending control of all courts, and it is only logical that if there is to be a well administered setup, that anything that the circuit court will do in regard to control of the inferior courts must of necessity be and will be and is now regulated by what the supreme court will do and will grant.

Now, if the supreme court, as in the Constitution of 1908, has the general superintending control over all inferior courts — that includes the circuit court and the court of appeals and the probate court and any other court whether constitutional or statutory — and the superintending control is just a step by step matter, there will undoubtedly be delegations within the constitution to delegate to the circuit courts the authority to have general control over inferior courts and tribunals. Now, if there is to be any type of chain of command, then the language as the committee has written it should stand. We here see again a dedicated effort by a few to not keep a reasonably integrated court system but to scatter to the winds, and unless we can maintain some semblance of administration and order, there will be a complete breakdown in the administration. It has to be within the supreme court rules as a practical matter. That is the way it stands today. That is the way it has to stand because it is a step by step administration.

If the circuit court can issue the rules for the courts lower or inferior to the circuit court, then you are indirectly taking away from the supreme court any right to write rules concerning tribunals or courts lower than the circuit court. So again this is simply an effort to break it down instead of integrating it as we have and as we have endeavored to do for administration purposes, not for the right of the decision of the cases.

I would urge the defeat of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Battle Creek, Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: I wish to join our committee chairman in opposing the amendment. One of the criticisms which the circuit judges have directed toward themselves is the fact that they have not directly taken enough interest in and have not regulated sufficiently the practices in what is now the justice of the peace system. Frankly, I think they over criticize themselves, because they are busy men and this is something which they rarely have time to do. The point is, as our chairman has suggested, that this matter should be under the control of the supreme court and no doubt would be delegated by them through circuit courts.

There is another advantage to centralizing the authority in the supreme court in that while certainly there would be variations of court rules carrying out this control in various areas, there shouldn't be 60 or 70 different types of rules governing the inferior courts in each circuit. They ought to be fairly common and fairly uniform. And by centralizing the system within the supreme court, even though the direct administration would no doubt lie within the circuit courts, we are able to do this.

I support the committee's position.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: I believe Mr. Everett's position and Mr. Danhof's are a little inconsistent from what they have been. The other day here we were talking about the word "exclusive". At that time it was my understanding of their thinking that it didn't mean that any of the courts would lose their independence; that the supreme court would not have complete dominance over all courts. Apparently their thinking this morning is entirely to the contrary.

Now, I have heard nothing about the circuit courts not performing their duties. Apparently, again, we want to further curb the circuit courts and relieve them of the independence that they have exercised for many years. The provision giving the circuit courts general control over inferior courts was in the Constitution of 1850, the Constitution of 1908, and I believe it means just what it says. In other words, why was this provision put in this constitution that they were not to have control of the courts under them? And why was it put in the constitution that the supreme court was to have supreme control of all courts? Now, these are inconsistent. And incidentally, in the Constitution of 1850, the one in regard to circuit courts is a later provision.

The circuit courts are closest to the inferior courts in their area. They know the problems much better, and it seems to me that the supreme court would be happy to be relieved of the duties of supervising the courts within a county or within a small area, so the circuit court is in a much better position to do so and has a much better knowledge of the situation existing than the supreme court.

I urge you to adopt this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment and support the committee. Mr. McAllister is again treading very close to the line of confusing the lawyers. I am sure that the laymen will excuse us if we are confused when a fellow lawyer with Tom's many years of trial experience gets on the floor and creates the impression that there is something new about having the supreme court make rules that apply to all circuit courts and the inferior courts.

We have lived with this for a long time. We all know where to go and find the rule. Tom is now apparently subscribing to the total autonomy of each individual circuit court so that you would have to have a set of 20 volumes to find out what the local rules are in the various circuit courts throughout the state and then each municipal court and justice court and what else you have under the circuit courts. The kind of chaos that could come from the failure to have a statewide or reasonably uniform set of rules for this kind of practice is something that would cause even the bravest here to shudder over when they contemplate it.

I urge that you vote against the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. King.

MR. KING: Mr. Chairman, fellow members of the committee, I should like also to speak in favor of the committee report and ask that all of us read the language here that we are considering, because this is not such a difficult problem, I am sure, that laymen and lawyers alike can't understand it. And I might point out that we ought to start right after the word "writs". I think perhaps there ought to be a semicolon in there, Mr. Danhof, after the word "writs" on line 7.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof made that correction yesterday, Mr. King.

MR. KING: That correction has been made? Fine. I am sorry, my records didn't reflect that correction. I apologize.

Starting with the semicolon which has been inserted, we are saying "supervisory and general control over inferior courts and tribunals within their respective jurisdictions, in accordance with supreme court rules. . . ." In other words, the circuit courts will have supervisory and general control over these inferior courts, which is what we want. Now, the real question is: shall they have this control in accordance with their own rules or in accordance with a uniform set of rules promulgated by the highest court of this state? I think clearly that what we want is uniformity here. We want these rules enforced at the circuit court level, but we want the rules promulgated by the state supreme court. So I heartily support and endorse the committee recommendation in this area.

As I pointed out once before, section by section, proposal by proposal and paragraph by paragraph we are going to fight this battle right down to the very end to find out whether we are going to have an integrated court system in Michigan, and I certainly don't object to anyone waging this campaign at every step of the way, but I think we ought to all realize just what we are faced with and be on guard against it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Gadola.

MR. GADOLA: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I have had some experience along this line. Several years ago, because of abuses that arose in the justice courts of Genesee county, Judge Bishop and myself went into conference with the supreme court relative to adopting some rule so we could correct those abuses. In our conference with them we asked if they would promulgate a rule to direct the circuit courts how to proceed in handling the injustices or improprieties of the justice courts because there was no procedure established at all to correct the abuses.

Justice Edwards was very insistent that it was unnecessary for the supreme court to promulgate any rule whatsoever; that the circuit courts had jurisdiction over all inferior courts and we could proceed. I said to him and to the court, "We desire, however, something to go by so that we will understand what the procedure is to be; some rules laid out as we have in all of our procedures in court, something to follow." And so we asked the supreme court to promulgate a rule for us to follow, remembering that the supreme court rules are supreme, and any circuit rules adopted are inferior to the supreme court rules and the supreme court rules can set them aside. You cannot make a circuit court rule inconsistent with the supreme court rule on the local level. But he insisted that we had the right to proceed. There was nothing established as to how to proceed — perhaps we should have proceeded, as have been the proceedings recently in the supreme court relative to some probate judges, with nothing established as to how the procedure should be followed, and a new line of procedure is being followed completely that no one ever heard of before — so in that belief we just dropped the question. Perhaps we shouldn't have. Perhaps we should have done something to correct those errors that were there. They were there, but we believed until the supreme court gave us some authority, something that could be read, something that could be followed, that it wasn't up to us to merely go into unplowed territory and attempt to correct the errors.

Therefore, I say that the supreme court should make the rules. Of course, there is some change being made at the present time because under the court administrator they are now establishing another branch to deal with the inferior courts under the circuit courts and perhaps they will have the assistance of the administrator in that line. But I do believe that the supreme court should adopt the rules, and I therefore urge you to adopt the committee report.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. McAllister, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. McAllister's amendment:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Those in favor of the amendment offered by Mr. McAllister will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is not adopted. Are there further amendments to section c?

SECRETARY CHASE: That is all we have on the desk, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Section c, as amended, is passed. Are there any amendments to the body of Committee Proposal 93? Mr. Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, Mr. Danhof, one question in order that at least I might understand what is intended by this last grant of power. I refer to lines 10 and 11, which read, "and the jurisdiction of other cases and matters as the supreme court shall by rule prescribe." Now, we have above here given circuit courts original jurisdiction. We have given them appellate jurisdiction. We have given them power to issue and determine prerogative and remedial writs. We have given them supervisory and general control over inferior courts. Can the chairman give me at least an illustration of a case of jurisdiction of some other kind of a case which is contemplated in lines 10 and 11?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Hutchinson, to start out, it was the opinion of the committee that perhaps this was a safeguard or a catchall in trying to be safe, as attorneys like to be. In addition, as we had in section 10 of the 1908 constitution where you had the grants of practically all the delegations that you have mentioned, the identical thing, we concluded with the practically identical language wherein it states "and in all such other cases and matters as the supreme court shall by rule prescribe."

To offhand fish out an illustration might be a little difficult, but it is possible that perhaps the admission of new attorneys to the bar, as has been suggested, might be a matter that has been delegated to the circuit court by supreme court rule. Basically it was just a safeguard and something that we took from section 10 in order to just make safeguards. Should the legislature fail to act in any particular matter, the supreme court could refer the particular matter to the circuit court. It was basically a catchall and a safeguard rather than any particular idea that we had in mind.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If there are no further amendments to section c, it will pass.

Section c, as amended, is passed. Are there amendments to the body of Committee Proposal 93?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Brake offers the following amendment to section d:

1. Amend page 2, line 15, after "county clerk" by striking out "or" and inserting a comma; and in line 16, after "prosecuting attorney" by inserting a comma and "court reporter or friend of the court"; so the language will then read:

> The judges of the circuit courts may fill any vacancy in the office of county clerk, prosecuting attorney, court reporter or friend of the court within their respective jurisdictions, but shall not exercise any other power of appointment to public office.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment to section d offered by Mr. Brake, on which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Stanton, Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, as was pointed out yesterday, because of the provision in our present constitution which says that the circuit judge may appoint nobody except the clerk and the prosecuting attorney, we have had the circuitous method of getting a court reporter and a friend of the court by providing in the statute that the governor shall appoint the court reporter upon nomination of the circuit judge and the same thing with the friend of the court. Now, the governor is not at liberty to make an appointment except as the circuit judge has made the nomination so that in effect if everybody does what he is supposed to do, the circuit judge is actually making the appointment of the reporter and the friend of the court, but he has to go through the governor's office to do it. And, as Judge Dehnke pointed out, when somebody gets off the beam a little bit, you may have trouble.

We think that this simplifies the procedure and takes the circuitous method out, lets the judge directly appoint his court reporter and his friend of the court. The relationship between the judge and both of those officials is such that he ought to make the appointment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, Mr. Brake approached me with this particular matter last night and asked if we would discuss it in the committee. I can state that we did discuss it before the committee this morning to the limited extent of the time we had, but there was not support for this particular amendment for various reasons. We have on our committee 3 ex circuit judges, 2 of whom are present, Judge Mosier being ill. And it was likewise the view in regard to a court reporter that perhaps the independence of the court reporter to some extent is desirable. I think this particular point of view was expressed by Judge Leibrand, and I would hope that he might enlarge on it a little further. A view was further expressed in regard to the friend of the court that in some circuits, of course, this amounts to 1 or maybe 2 individuals at the most. However, in the more metropolitan areas — I have been advised that the friend of the court's office in Wayne county exceeds some 150 employees at the present time — that it is possible that this could become a political patronage operation of the courts, and that consequently it would best be left to other means of control.

I agree with Mr. Brake that these people do have an intimate working relationship with the judge, and perhaps there is some basis for it. I would not particularly care for freezing in the language "friend of the court." As time goes on, they may have name changes, and they are frozen in. But to put this burden on the circuit judge, at least there it was the opinion of the committee that this should not be done at this time in a constitutional provision, and consequently the matter was discussed before the committee but there were insufficient votes to bring the matter to the floor as a committee amendment. Consequently, because of the view of the committee, I would urge the rejection of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Brake, the Chair recognizes Judge Pugsley.

MR. PUGSLEY: I would like to ask Senator Brake whether he would insist upon the friend of the court being included, or whether he would be satisfied to delete the friend of the court and confine his amendment to the court reporter. It would make some difference in the position that I take myself in this matter.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Let's compromise this way, Judge, and vote on the 2 separately.

MR. PUGSLEY: Very well, I will go along with you on that. I am in sympathy with your position so far as the court reporter is concerned. It has been my experience to have to select and employ court reporters from time to time, and their relationship is so intimate and so closely associated with the circuit court that I don't believe the governor is jealous of the opportunity of making that appointment, and it usually is a matter that is left with the court and I think we might as well recognize that. The court, I think, should have the right to select its own reporter.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake requests a division of the question into the several matters of court reporter and friend of the court. It will be so presented. Mr. Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might, through the Chair, direct a question to Mr. Brake.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. NORRIS: I wonder if there is any relationship, sir, between the filling of a vacancy in the office that you describe and those counties that have civil service. Is this matter of assignment or filling of vacancies provided for in these counties that have the civil service, and would this in any way impede, alter or change that?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: I think you will have to tell me, Mr. Norris. Wayne county, as far as I know, is the only county that has civil service. How do you handle that down there? I would assume that your head man, your friend of the court who is actually the head of the department, is appointed in the same way as he is everywhere else.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Norris, do you desire to yield to Mr. Buback for a response?

MR. NORRIS: Yes, sir.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Buback.

MR. BUBACK: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, in Wayne county the circuit judges do appoint their own stenographers and they are not under civil service. I mean they appoint them through the governor. They make the recommendation to the governor.

I think that Senator Brake is right. I think that the judges should also have the right to appoint the friend of the court, because actually they make their recommendation to the govenor and the governor acquiesces to the judge's request on the friend of the court and the stenographer. They are not under civil service. They are considered state employees.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, we discussed the matter of the appointment of the court reporter in the committee and came to the conclusion that this should be left unchanged. Now, the court reporter is not strictly an employee of the circuit judge. This gentleman in the performance of his duty should have, I think, a degree of independence from the circuit judge. This is the person to whom the attorneys and the litigants look and he actually should be a representative of the state and free and independent of any control. I would like to ask Delegate Brake if he has considered that aspect of it, and in particular, if the judge has the power to fill the vacancy, could he fire the court reporter?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: I am not talking about any specific instance that I know about, Mr. Higgs, but I would think that you would have a very serious situation in your court if sometime you were to have a judge and a court reporter who do not get along together. I think the judge's control of that should be sufficient so that that situation should never arise.

MR. HIGGS: Well, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I must disagree with Delegate Brake. I can certainly appreciate that there are reasons why they should get along, but there may be reasons why they don't get along. In any event, what we are extremely interested in as attorneys practicing in any court is the independence of the court reporter, and we discussed this in committee at length — well, I wouldn't say at length, but we discussed it for some period of time, and I would urge that you defeat this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I failed to mention yesterday the kind of a situation that can arise. Under the statutes that we now have, the circuit judge has the power to suspend the reporter, and if that suspension is not lifted within either 30 or 60 days — I have forgotten the exact period — it automatically becomes a vacancy.

Now, there may be situations when a question could arise as to the accuracy of the transcript, but those can be disposed of in hearings before the judge or the supreme court. But in this particular case of which I spoke, the reporter, as I indicated, was an attorney. He made a practice of advising people who had legal questions. Sometimes those cases got into the courts in the form of lawsuits. Then there was a question as to whether the reporter, having acted as adviser to the litigants, although he was not appearing for them as attorney in court, was in a defensible position in acting as a reporter and writing up the transcript. For that reason the court suspended him from office and there was some litigation conducted and some litigation threatened and that was used as the excuse for the attorney general's advice to the governor and the later action of the same individual, as governor, in refusing to appoint a successor. Here was a situation where the statute specifically said that the governor shall appoint the reporter recommended by the circuit judge. When the question arose as to what might be done about it, it was discovered that, under Michigan rules at least, the supreme court could not mandamus the governor, so we had that situation for approximately 8 years. Every time the judge wanted to hold court, he had to get on the telephone, call Alpena or Bay City or Saginaw or Detroit and import somebody for whatever work was at hand at per diem and expenses.

I don't feel so strongly about the friend of the court, but I do think that the door ought not to be left open to anything in the field of the court reporter of the kind I have related.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will advise the committee that there are 9 speakers seeking recognition on the Brake amendment. Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: I will pass.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Mahinske passes. Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman and delegates, it might be of interest to nonlawyers to see how this situation we are in arose. The present law, I believe, provides for the appointment of court reporters by the governor on the recommendation of the circuit judge or judges involved. The background of that was an attempt to make the reporter as completely independent as possible from the judge, and the background of that is that many times even the best of judges in the heat of trial say things that in the calm of the next day they regret, and the thought was that the judge might be tempted to try to convince the reporter that the reporter's transcript was wrong while the judge's notes were right. Now, in a general way, I feel that it is rather important to keep the reporter independent of the judge for this very purpose.

On the other hand, my neighboring delegate here to the right who has also had considerable court experience suggests to me that if a gubernatorial appointment is required in each case, it would be difficult or impossible for a court to hire a reporting firm where, as happens in the convention, different reporters might be sent or used every day. Generally speaking, I would be opposed to the Brake amendment so far as the court reporter is concerned. I feel that he should be kept as independent as possible. But I would be highly in favor of the amendment so far as it relates to the appointment of the friend of the court who really, in these days of many, many divorces, is the right arm of the judge.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hoxie.

MR. HOXIE: I will pass.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hoxie passes. Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: I would just like to say that, as a member of the committee, I felt very strongly that the judge should not be able to control the reporter, and he should be kept independent. However, I have checked around with various people, and I gather that in truth they aren't and this is sort of a game we are playing. Therefore, I now support Mr. Brake's amendment because, frankly, I conferred with someone from Wayne county who I thought knew most about it, and they said they do what the judges say anyway, so why are we doing this? I am now against the committee report, because the reasons I believed were true I found were not true. Therefore, I no longer support it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I am surprised that a great fighter for the right like Annie gives up now because the situation seems so hopelessly messed up.

I would like to agree with everything that Judge Leibrand has said, and I think he is very courageous as an ex circuit judge and a member of a very exclusive club to suggest — although he did it much more kindly than some of us might have — that everything that the judge says on the bench doesn't get into the record. Everybody knows that over a period of time court reporters who stay with a particular judge for a long time learn almost instinctively what the judge means to have in the record for everybody to see and what he means not to be in the record for everybody to see. The advantage he has is that the court reporter can't similarly read the minds of the witnesses and the lawyers, so if we make a mistake, it gets into the record and stays there to plague us.

I have had the experience of seeing a circuit judge berating the supreme court throughout a trial which ultimately ended up in front of the supreme court without a single word in the transcript about why he was making rulings as he was making them, and he said all the way through that he was making them just to see what those damn fools in Lansing would do about it. (laughter) Now, this gets to be rather serious, and if what we would be doing by adopting Mr. Brake's amendment would be by constitution acknowledging the fact that we could never come up with a system that would in fact make court reporters independent of the dominance of the judges whom they are serving, then I would be opposed to it.

I think Judge Leibrand is correct, however, with respect to the friend of the court. I can find no reason to oppose the idea of the circuit judge being the proper person to make that appointment. I would support Mr. Brake's amendment with respect to the friend of the court and urge that you defeat the other amendment. If the legislature wants to come up with a system different than we have now, fine, let them do it. But let's don't do it in the constitution.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Bledsoe.

MR. BLEDSOE: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I feel like saying this morning, "Thank God for Judge Leibrand's statement." Let us not forget that in all of these matters the litigants are involved. The people whose interests are being involved are to be protected by this record, and sometimes a judge gets hot and gets angry with the lawyers and things get pretty warm and courts get pretty tense, but it is not going to be the lawyer who suffers if, when that record goes to the supreme court, everything is not in there that was said by everybody; it is the litigant. It is the little people who appear there with their causes who suffer when those records are not properly before the court with everything that has transpired.

I therefore urgently request: let's maintain this independence of the court reporter as much as possible. Those of us who have had a lot of trial experience know how important that is.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I have a high regard for circuit judges and I think they are a very splendid group. However, I have had experiences similar to those of Mr. Ford, and 2 circuit judges that I was acquainted with, who have now departed this world, in my opinion and from pretty good knowledge, sometimes did edit the notes. I had one experience too not too long ago in a matter which was on its way to the supreme court, and in this instance the circuit judge really blasted the supreme court for quite a lengthy period. So after the matter had been concluded in the circuit court, I talked to the court officer. I said, "Do you suppose that will all be in the record?" He said, "Yes, sir. That court reporter will put everything in the record and every period regardless of what any judge said."

Now, there is an intimacy between a court reporter and a judge, and I don't think that in many instances there would be any editing or anything deleted from the record, but there is always the possibility where some careless or nasty remark is in the record, and I think for the protection of the public that a court reporter should be appointed and be an independent individual. It really is a pleasure for once to agree with the learned counselor from Taylor township, Mr. Ford. (laughter)

I might say that insofar as the friend of the court is concerned. I agree with Mr. Ford again, because the friend of the court is actually an adviser to the judge and more or less an agent of his to furnish him information that would require a great length of time if the court had to do it himself, so I am in favor of the friend of the court being appointed by the circuit judge.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hodges.

MR. HODGES: I pass.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hodges passes. Judge Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, when I asked for recognition this last time, it was merely a desire to clarify the record that the case to which I had referred arose under a predecessor of mine and not during my occupancy of the office for 32 years. During those 32 years I had no difficulties with any of the court reporters who served under me, not only those in my own circuit but in more than half of the counties of the state where I was called to try cases on assignment. But now the discussion has taken a turn that makes it necessary to say something more. I don't know of a single case that I ever tried which went to the supreme court where the record did not contain every word that was spoken during the trial which the attorneys on either side wanted in it. Again we have to take a little pains to explain to the laymen that when a case goes to the supreme court, it doesn't always mean, in fact it means in very few cases, that every word that was said during the proceedings in circuit court is in the record. The record is settled and contains those things and those things only which the lawyers on one side or the other think are important to the point on appeal.

Now, what has been said here suggests 2 things that are discreditable both to the profession of circuit judges and of court reporters. I won't have any difficulty in agreeing that any judge who is able to insist on a court reporter changing the record or leaving something out is not fit for the responsibilities of his office, and by the same token any court reporter who is willing to yield to that kind of pressure who wouldn't prefer to resign rather than to yield to it is unfit for his responsibilities.

I don't want the impression to go out, as might be gained from some of the things that have been said, that those are things that commonly occur or even rarely occur. Court reporters are responsible individuals. They have their code of ethics as lawyers have. And I think it is necessary for those of us who know the facts to guard, as far as we can, against any mistaken impression of that kind going out.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: I would just like to ask Delegate Brake if he doesn't believe that the addition of these 2 positions into the constitution would be giving constitutional status to 2 officials who presently don't enjoy any constitutional status or protection. What would the effect be in your opinion?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Of course they would be mentioned in the constitution and they are not mentioned now. But we will always have a court reporter as long as we have a court. It is absolutely necessary. And I can't see, with the divorce rate as it is and other investigations as they are, how we are ever going to get along without a friend of the court.

MR. FAXON: Is it your feeling that this could not be dealt with by legislative action?

MR. BRAKE: That is the way it has been done and that is the reason you have to go clear around and get the governor to make the appointment that the circuit judge is actually making.

MR. FAXON: But if the legislature were to change the act and provide for more direct relationship —

MR. BRAKE: The legislature can't change the act. When you say in the constitution that the circuit judge can appoint the clerk and the prosecuting attorney and can't make any other appointment, the legislature can't undo that.

MR. FAXON: Do you think it might be better in order to give it flexibility to provide by law for any additional —

MR. BRAKE: No, because I don't think it ought to be opened up too wide. The legislature might give the circuit judge the power to appoint officers that he ought not to be appointing. I think it should be kept limited, but not so limited as to require the governor to appoint these 2 people who work so closely with the judge.

MR. FAXON: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am sure the delegates will agree, the circuit judges — in particular I am speaking of Delegate Dehnke's remarks with regard to the record; I'm sure that he will agree — that before you can settle upon a record, you have to have the whole and complete record before the attorneys can settle the record, and if part of the proceedings, remarks or statements made in court which may have been made in front of a jury are not in the record, you can't settle upon it. I will move that we divide this question.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: It has already been divided, Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: All right, thank you. And I would urge that you support the friend of the court being included and striking the court reporter.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Have you any other names on this?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair has 2 more speakers seeking recognition, Mr. Brake — now has 4 more speakers seeking recognition. They multiply like amoebae. (laughter) Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, I am certain enough has been said about the court reporter. You either believe he ought to be given a degree of independence or not and you can make up your mind on that issue.

I am a little disturbed, however, by the feeling that the friend of the court should be written in. I agree with Mr. Brake that somebody performing these duties will certainly be necessary, but we don't even know in the future whether divorce cases will always be heard in the circuit court. They may very well be transferred at some date to some other tribunal. There has been a great deal of suggestion, for example, that at some time in the future some sort of a family court be established. We have provided this kind of flexibility in other parts of this constitution. Now, if that were to occur — and I don't know whether it ever will or not — we would have the unusual situation of then having a man who worked very closely with another court being appointed by the circuit judge. To me, it is true, the route is circuitous, but we have been given one example in 50 some years where it didn't work, and I think that is very slim evidence upon which to base a judgment that we write in an officer in the constitution and freeze the situation for a period of time which none of us can fully foresee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lawrence.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Chairman, may I ask how the question has been divided? Has it been divided so that it is between prosecuting attorney, and between friend of the court and between —

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment, Mr. Lawrence, offered by Mr. Brake would give the circuit judge the power of appointment over the court reporter and the friend of the court. The question has been divided so that you will vote separately on the power of appointment of the court reporter and separately on the power of appointment of the friend of the court.

MR. LAWRENCE: Thank you. I would like to speak for a moment in opposition to the amendment, to both parts of the amendment. Taking first the court reporter, not only should the court reporter be independent and able to not be dictated to by the judge, but he should be in a position where his retention is not in any way affected by the judge. I can only tell you this: it is my understanding that one of the courts in our state insists that in any transcript being prepared by the court reporter, any rulings, any opinions, any orders or directions made by the court have to be submitted to it before they are submitted to the counsel who order transcript. Now, that isn't right. There should be no ability on the part of the court to in any way change any portion of that transcript, and the court reporter should be absolutely independent of the judge in every way so that the transcript that is rendered cannot in any way be influenced by the court.

I agree with Mr. Everett on the friend of the court. Certainly the friend of the court is an arm of the court and should be treated as such. But in view of the fact that there may be a change in the court's jurisdiction in, say, divorce matters or matters involving children that are handled by the friend of the court as an aide to the court, certainly that can be taken care of in the legislature and the friend of the court can be under the direction of the circuit court. Then if there is a change into a family court or something else of that nature, the friend of the court will not be frozen in the constitution.

I don't think that either of these matters are constitutional matters, and I urge you to vote against the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Pugsley.

MR. PUGSLEY: When I made the inquiry of Senator Brake which I did, I did it with the idea of raising the question of whether or not the office of circuit court commissioner should be frozen into the constitution. Fortunately I have not had the unfortunate experience that some of the other judges have had with court reporters. I have had no complaints from the attorneys and I have had no complaints myself. I have been very fortunate in that respect.

I have no strenuous opposition to the committee report, although it did seem to me to be rather a useless fiction to require that a recommendation be made by the court and then the governor make the appointment. I don't think it is going to change the relationship one way or the other. I think we are putting more stress on the importance of this than it really deserves.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, speaking as a layman, I would certainly oppose the amendment. I could see where, when the court reporter is not independent of the judge who had appointed him, he might be doing some editing which might have quite a lot of bearing on whether or not appeals would be given by the supreme court. I certainly wouldn't even go along with the idea that was suggested a short while ago by one of the delegates that the governor listen to the judges. In fact, I think that a governor who appointed a court reporter on the advice of the judge should be very severely criticized because, after all, isn't this man supposed to be independent of the judge? Isn't he supposed to do independent court reporting? I think we should know everything that goes on there just as we do right here. There is going to be no editing of what I say. They are going to put it all in there, or they should. And certainly the people in my area are going to know what I say. And I certainly want to know what the judges have to say, or the witnesses or anyone else.

Now, so far as the friend of the court is concerned, I think that Delegate Everett and Delegate Lawrence are right. You can't tell when we may shift the hearing of these divorce cases to another court, so why not continue it the way we have had it?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Norris.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Chairman, I don't wish to address myself to the merits of the various contentions, but I would like to introduce a note of caution among the delegates, both lawyers and nonlawyers. We are dealing with the courts, and we are dealing with the courts in the public eye, and it seems to me that we ought to approach this question with due care and caution. We call a judge "His Honor" to remind us of our own honor, and I don't think we ought to introduce in an inartful formulation some of the points that have been made in the discussion both with regard to the circuit judges and the supreme court judges.

The rights of the people are directly related here to the integrity of the bench, and I think that when we discuss this, while the courts are not immune to first amendment criticism — speech and press — certainly in a sovereign body as this we have to make a searching inquiry with regard to the function of the courts and all the accoutrements of the courts. I seem to detect in the trend of the discussion on this judicial article a certain amount of disrespect which I think is unwarranted. I think it is possible to criticize in such a way that we elevate the thing we criticize and not deprecate it, and I think that ought to be borne in mind by all the delegates.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, had I known in advance what some of these statements would have been, I certainly would not have offered this amendment, because the statements that have been made have done more damage than the amendment can do good if it carries. The only argument that has been urged against the appointment by the judge of the circuit court reporter is that through the influence of the judge the reporter will not correctly report the case. I can't dispute the experience that other attorneys say they have had in this field. I am shocked by what they say. When one gets to where he can't argue about a thing, a Methodist trained person simply testifies, and I testify. This means that the judge and the reporter are intellectually dishonest. I have never known such a judge and I have never known such a reporter. I think the amendment should be adopted.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Brake. The question has been divided. The first portion of the question is that dealing with the court reporter. The secretary will read that portion of the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Brake's amendment as divided would provide for the appointment by the judge of the court reporter, so the amendment would be as follows:

1. Amend page 2, line 15, after "county clerk" by striking out "or" and inserting a comma; and in line 16, after "prosecuting attorney" by inserting "or court reporter"; so the language would read, "The judges of the circuit courts may fill any vacancy in the office of county clerk, prosecuting attorney or court reporter. . . ."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I can only state, Mr. Chairman, that I would echo the remarks made by Delegate Norris. I think they are most apropos. And also those of Mr. Brake. I think the discussion has developed that it best be left the way it is, that while the system may have certain disadvantages, it is better than to write them into the constitution. I would urge the defeat of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the portion of the amendment offered by Mr. Brake which the secretary has just read. Those in favor of the amendment will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The Chair would rule that the amendment does not prevail.

MR. BRAKE: Division.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: A division has been called for. Is the request supported? It is supported. Those in favor of the amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment relative to the appointment of a court reporter by the circuit judge, the yeas are 55; the nays are 60.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is not adopted.

The second portion of the amendment offered by Mr. Brake deals with the appointment of the friend of the court by the circuit judge, and the secretary will read that portion of the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Brake's amendment now is:

1. Amend page 2, line 15, after "county clerk" by striking out "or" and inserting a comma; and in line 16, after "prosecuting attorney" by inserting "or friend of the court"; so that the language will then read:

> The judges of the circuit courts may fill any vacancy in the office of county clerk, prosecuting attorney or friend of the court within their respective jurisdictions, but shall not exercise any other power of appointment to public office.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Brake, Mr. Brake requests a division. Is the demand supported? It is supported. Those in favor of the amendment as so read by the secretary will vote aye; those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment relative to the appointment of the friend of the court, the yeas are 64; the nays are 52.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is adopted. Are there any further amendments to the body of Committee Proposal 93? If not, it will pass.

Committee Proposal 93, as amended, is passed, and the secretary will read Committee Proposal 94.

SECRETARY CHASE: From the committee on judicial branch, by Mr. Danhof, chairman, Committee Proposal 94, A proposal pertaining to the probate court. A substitute for sections 13 and 14 of article VII.

Following is Committee Proposal 94 as read by the secretary, and the reasons submitted in support thereof:

The committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Sec. a. IN EACH COUNTY ORGANIZED FOR JUDICIAL PURPOSES, THERE SHALL BE A PROBATE COURT. THE LEGISLATURE MAY COMBINE 1 OR MORE COUNTIES INTO PROBATE DISTRICTS, OR COMBINE THE OFFICE OF PROBATE JUDGE WITH ANY JUDICIAL OFFICE INFERIOR THERETO IN ANY COUNTY WITH LESS THAN 25,000 POPULATION WITH SUPPLEMENTAL SALARY AS PROVIDED BY LAW, AND SHALL DO SO ON RECOMMENDATION AND REPORT OF THE SUPREME COURT. THE JURISDICTION, POWERS AND DUTIES OF SUCH COURTS AND OF THE JUDGES THEREOF SHALL BE PRESCRIBED BY LAW. THEY SHALL ALSO HAVE ORIGINAL JURISDICTION IN ALL CASES OF JUVENILE DELINQUENTS AND DEPENDENTS, EXCEPT AS OTHERWISE PROVIDED BY LAW.

Sec. b. JUDGES OF PROBATE SHALL BE NOMINATED AND ELECTED AT NONPARTISAN ELECTIONS IN THE COUNTIES OR THE PROBATE DISTRICT IN WHICH THEY RESIDE AND SHALL HOLD OFFICE FOR A PERIOD OF 6 YEARS AND UNTIL THEIR SUCCESSORS ARE ELECTED AND QUALIFIED. IN MULTIJUDGE COUNTIES OR DISTRICTS THE LEGISLATURE SHALL PROVIDE BY LAW FOR STAGGERED TERMS.

Mr. Danhof, chairman of the committee on judicial branch, submits the following reasons in support of Committee Proposal 94:

During the first 3 months of our committee work we had the testimony and advice of all the members of the supreme court, of circuit and probate judges, state bar officers and lawyers and officers of local bar associations and members of the general public. The plan of operation of our circuit and probate courts we found met the approval generally of all persons and groups who appeared before us.

Explanation—Matter within [ ] is stricken, matter in capitals is new.

Sec. a. We found in many counties of the state that the work load of a probate judge was small and required but a portion of his time. We also learned that the cost to the taxpayer in those counties was by reason of small taxing areas much larger in proportion than in the counties of larger population and taxing power. We have therefore authorized the legislature, and required the legislature on recommendation of the supreme court, either to unite counties into probate districts, somewhat comparable to our circuit courts, or combine the office of probate judge with any judicial office inferior thereto in any county with less than 25,000 population. We believe either alternative will tend toward a better administration of the work of such courts and at the same time reduce the expense of operation.

Sec. b. It will be observed that the committee left with the probate courts, original jurisdiction in all cases of delinquent and dependent juveniles. But the committee felt that the legislature should have power to change this jurisdiction, should it sometime in the future create some division of a county court that might take over all juvenile work, such as a family or domestic relations court.

Following is the minority report to Committee Proposal 94 as offered and the reasons submitted in support thereof:

Messrs. Ford, Garvin, Bledsoe, Ostrow, Krolikowski and Barthwell, a minority of the committee on judicial branch, submit the following minority report to Committee Proposal 94:

A minority of the committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Amend page 1, line 14, by striking "EXCEPT AS OTHERWISE PROVIDED BY LAW".

Messrs. Ford, Garvin, Bledsoe, Ostrow, Krolikowski and Barthwell, a minority of the committee on judicial branch, submit the following reasons in support of the foregoing minority report, which accompanied Committee Proposal 94:

The proponents of this minority report believe that the phrase recommended to be deleted from this section threatens the present constitutional status of the probate court's jurisdiction over juvenile delinquents and dependent persons.

We believe that the juvenile function should be retained in a court separate and apart from a general trial court, such as the circuit court as well as other courts exercising criminal jurisdiction.

In its report to the people of the 1907 convention the committee on submission and address to the people indicated that the phrase "and they shall also have original jurisdiction in all cases of juvenile delinquents and dependents" was added to the 1908 constitution to make the powers conferred by law on probate courts in juvenile cases constitutional powers.

The proponents of this minority report have been impressed by juvenile and probate judges who have appeared before the committee on judicial branch and recommended retention of this constitutional power in the probate courts.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On section a of Committee Proposal 94, the Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee on judicial branch, Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, we now move to the probate courts, having finished with the circuit court. And for an explanation of the committee report in regard to section a, I should like to call on the delegate from Bay City, Mr. Higgs.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, in dealing with the probate courts, I would like to call your attention to the fact that in Michigan we have provided in our constitutions of 1835 and 1850 and 1908 for a probate court. However, this is not necessary and not the practice in most of the states of the United States. Actually, only Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Georgia, Idaho, Kansas, Maryland, Minnesota, New Mexico, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin also contain a general provision providing for a probate court in their constitution. That is 13 other states. There are 6 other states which vest the power of the probate court as we know it in Michigan in their general trial court similar to the circuit court as we have in Michigan.

With that general background, as far as providing for the probate court is concerned, the committee after deliberation and discussion as to the advisability of retaining this court decided upon keeping the same provision with the changes that we have recommended. Now, these changes include a provision making it possible for the combination of one or more counties into probate districts as one alternative; and as a second alternative, the possibility of combining the office of probate judge with any judicial office inferior thereto in any county with less than 25,000 population, with supplemental salary as provided by law, and this shall be done upon recommendation and support of the supreme court.

With regard to the possibility of combining probate courts of the counties into probate districts, I would like to call attention to the fact that in the recent poll of the lawyers of the bar, this question of the advisability of doing this was submitted, and the questionnaires returned indicated the following vote: 2,986 yes and 615 no. Now, the reason for combining the probate courts into districts is simply a matter of economics, a matter that in the very small counties there appears to be not sufficient business in the probate area to occupy the services of a judge full time. We have in Michigan 5 counties that are under the population of 5,000. We have 13 counties that are between 5,000 and 10,000 in population. All in all we have in Michigan 39 counties that have less than 25,000 population. One of the most important aspects of the business of the probate court is the handling of juveniles, both dependent and neglected juveniles and also juvenile delinquents. In both of these areas the services of trained social workers are highly desirable. In order to efficiently and economically administer this function of the probate court, it is considered that it might be desirable in counties of a small population to combine counties into probate districts.

As an alternative, and on the suggestion of a probate judge from Gaylord, one Boyd Baird, who last year was president of the top of Michigan probate judges association, we also included a provision that the probate court in small counties as a optional matter might be combined with inferior courts; that is, possibly with the circuit court commissioner's court and the justice court. In appearing before our subcommittee, he indicated that it was his opinion that it would be better to have a probate judge in each county with sufficient business to occupy him full time than to have a part time judge doing this work or a judge traveling a circuit. He felt that at least as an optional basis this should be provided. Actually, with regard to this matter there are no counties, none at all, with less than 25,000 population south of the north boundary line of Muskegon county, Kent county, Montcalm, Isabella and Bay. No county south of the north line of those counties would be involved in this provision whatsoever with regard to the combining of the probate court with judicial offices inferior thereto, and actually north of that line there are 6 counties out of the 45 that would exceed that population limitation.

Now, we have made one other change which is significant. In the last sentence of the proposal we have provided that the probate courts have original jurisdiction in all cases of juvenile delinquents and dependents except as otherwise provided by law. The proviso in this particular instance is there to grant flexibility to the legislature in the future development of our court system and in particular with regard to the possibility of the development of either a children's court, a domestic relations court or what is more modernly called the family court. It is entirely possible that this function, in the discretion of the legislature, might properly be placed in another court. I would like to say that in New York, for instance, this has been done. Last November in New York a complete new judicial article was adopted by a vote of 5 to 1 throughout the state, which I thought was quite tremendous. In the state of New York they have abolished a number of courts and transferred their jurisdiction to the family court. In particular, they had previous thereto a children's court, a domestic relations court, a surrogate court. They still retain the surrogate court but part of the jurisdiction of the surrogate court, all of the jurisdiction of the children's court, all of the jurisdiction of the domestic relations court and part of the jurisdiction of a number of other courts has been transferred to a new court which is called a family court.

The concept of the family court, we felt, was best developed by the legislature rather than by our committee, and accordingly it is only our purpose in making this provision to provide that flexibility. We have placed the original jurisdiction of juvenile delinquents and dependents in the probate court and it remains there until and unless and except as may be otherwise provided by the legislature.

I would like to yield the floor to questions at this time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Are there any questions for Mr. Higgs? Mr. Pellow.

MR. PELLOW: What do you mean, Mr. Higgs, by courts inferior thereto? In the event that this passes, are you going to combine the duties of the probate court with justice courts and so forth?

MR. HIGGS: It was not our purpose to make any combination, but merely to grant the flexibility to the legislature to make such a combination if it seemed wise in the future.

MR. PELLOW: What I mean is, by the language "inferior thereto," which courts are inferior to the probate court?

MR. HIGGS: We were thinking of the circuit court commissioner's court and courts of limited jurisdiction such as municipal courts and justice courts.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: Mr. Higgs, along the same lines that Mr. Pellow started to pursue here, under the prior judicial proposals we have no courts that are going to remain in existence inferior to the probate court on a county level. Now, it seems to me that it is a poor choice of wording here. If the legislature acts and it is going to create a court that will take over the functions of the probate court, it is at least creating a new court that is equal to the probate court in status or it couldn't give them more power than they are legislatively able to exert.

MR. HIGGS: Well, now you have made an assumption that we will have no courts inferior thereto, which I don't think is a valid assumption.

MR. MAHINSKE: I assume that the circuit court commissioners along with the justice courts are going to be out of existence after the 5 year period. Is this correct or not correct?

MR. HIGGS: The provision is that the powers and jurisdiction of these courts shall remain within the circuit court commissioner's court and in the justice of the peace court for a period not to exceed 5 years and shall be transferred to other courts to be established by the legislature.

MR. MAHINSKE: Yes, but which may not necessarily be inferior to the probate court. This is the point.

MR. HIGGS: I don't think we have any great pride of authorship. We have used in another section the words "courts of limited jurisdiction." Would you like that better?

MR. MAHINSKE: Well, I think this is a matter that style and drafting could polish up here. Now, down in line 14, are you prepared to discuss this "except as otherwise provided by law" or are we going to leave that to the minority report?

MR. HIGGS: We are prepared to discuss it.

MR. MAHINSKE: At this point? Would this be proper, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: I think, Mr. Mahinske, if you could confine yourself at this point to questions relating to the committee proposal, we will deal with matters relating to the minority report as the amendments are presented.

MR. MAHINSKE: Then I have completed my remarks. Thank you.

MR. HIGGS: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Farnsworth.

MR. FARNSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Higgs, I do have a question on lines 13 and 14. "They shall also have original jurisdiction in all cases of juvenile delinquents and dependents. . . ." Dependents of whom? Dependents of juvenile delinquents or do you mean neglected children?

MR. HIGGS: In the juvenile area the probate court not only has jurisdiction over juvenile delinquents but juveniles who are dependent and neglected. And that, I think, is the distinction.

MR. FARNSWORTH: That is, what you mean to say really, is neglected children rather than a dependent of a juvenile.

MR. HIGGS: Again, I don't think we have any pride in draftsmanship here. We have carried over the provision of the 1908 constitution with the proviso.

MR. FARNSWORTH: You wouldn't mean a dependent, for instance—

MR. HIGGS: I would like to yield to the committee chairman. I think he has a comment on this.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Farnsworth, that has been interpreted to mean juvenile delinquents and juvenile dependents. This is out of the 1908 constitution. It means actually just that. It is not dependents of juveniles but the fact that, as it was worded there, jurisdiction in all cases of juvenile delinquents and juvenile dependents. That means orphans and neglected children and things along that particular line, not necessarily in the delinquency statute but by reasons of death in the family or abandonment they become in effect dependent upon the state and, therefore, the jurisdiction falls to the probate courts. This is what has been done, and this is what we carried over right from the 1908 language.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman, I think I have a minute to discuss one aspect of this that should be brought to your attention. One of the considerations with regard to the Judge Baird concept of the combination of the probate court with judicial offices inferior thereto — or courts of limited jurisdiction, whichever you prefer — one of the significant aspects of this is the possibility, and again we are not making the provision, but we are granting the flexibility to the legislature that, if in their discretion they would consider using this as one step in the development of a county court, this could be done most economically.

For instance, every probate judge in the state of Michigan has at the very least a statutory salary of $5,000. This is supplemented in some counties, and for each 10,000 of population, there is a statutory increase of an additional $500. We have probate judges in Wayne county receiving up to $22,500, but in the smallest of counties, in those counties less than 25,000, their pay is anywhere from $5,000 to $6,500. Now, in a county with less than 10,000 population, there just isn't very much probate work to be done. And Judge Baird advised us that when he ran for office, he advised the people in his district that he only intended to work 2 days, and the 2 days was entirely adequate to do the business of that court. So if you were going to use a base for the development of a county court in the small areas or in the sparsely populated areas, you would have available a court the judge of which already recieves a base pay of anywhere from $5,000 to $6,500 upon which to build, and in the development of that court it was our feeling that with this base and such supplement as might be provided by law, a county court could be developed most economically and with sufficient pay so that the office would attract qualified lawyers to act.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Plank.

MR. PLANK: Mr. Higgs, I am interested in knowing a little more about these family courts you suggested be created by the legislature. Was it your suggestion they be created in counties of less than 25,000, or above?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Well, this matter of the family courts is only involved in the last sentence and without regard to limitation of population. It is stated that they — meaning probate courts — shall also have original jurisdiction in all cases of juvenile delinquents and dependents, except as otherwise provided by law. This particular provision would, in our opinion and judgment, prohibit the establishment of a family court separate from the probate court without the proviso, and merely by adding the proviso we give the legislature the necessary flexibility in order to create a family court, which would be possibly but not necessarily entirely independent of the probate court. As the family court is constituted in other states, it would likely have a very broad jurisdiction which would include part of the powers of the circuit court.

MR. PLANK: In other words, you are saying it does not replace the probate court?

MR. HIGGS: No.

MR. PLANK: Then it would be in counties above 25,000, probably?

MR. HIGGS: The likelihood is that it would not be developed in counties anywhere near 25,000. The likelihood, in my judgment, is that it would be a court in the most highly populated areas rather than the lower.

MR. PLANK: I am a little bit concerned about your districting probate courts. I think their function is today quite successful due to the fact that they are close to the families which they have to serve, and I am wondering if you had difficulty in a given area and you had to go 2 counties away to find a probate judge, whether or not you would be serving them adequately. You may be paying the judge enough money but you may not be serving the people.

MR. HIGGS: I think many of us share your concern and this is why we left it as an entirely flexible and optional matter and why we made the other alternative, the other option. Judge Baird, for instance, reflected your concern in that same regard.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Quincy, Mr. Knirk.

MR. KNIRK: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Higgs, Ray Plank was asking some of the same questions I had that I would like to ask you, and that is in regard to the probate court. Now, if you had a family court developed, would that do away with your probate court within counties of under 25,000 population?

MR. HIGGS: No, it would not. We have included the probate court as a constitutional court and it cannot be abolished.

MR. KNIRK: It cannot be abolished?

MR. HIGGS: No.

MR. KNIRK: Then will you explain to me in a little further detail "except as otherwise provided by law" in line 14. Just what is the intent there of that particular phrase?

MR. HIGGS: The intent in that particular phrase is to permit the legislature, in the development of a court system, to transfer a part of the jurisdiction of the probate court to another court. They would also be transferring to the family court part of the jurisdiction of the circuit court or it might be a division of the probate court or it might be a division of the circuit court. But we didn't feel as a committee that we should freeze into the constitution a family court. It might be desirable simply in 1, 2 or 3 or 4 counties of Michigan.

MR. KNIRK: I still don't quite understand your position there. You say that the probate court would become part of the family court? Is that what you said now?

MR. HIGGS: No. I said that the legislature in the development of a family court might conceivably make a division of the probate court to serve that function, but the probability is, if the experience in other states were to be followed, that it would be a separate and independent court; in other words, a new court, a family court separate from the probate court but would not abolish the probate court because there are many other functions that the probate court serves, many other powers and duties and jurisdiction that it has.

MR. KNIRK: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if I might ask Stan Everett to elaborate. I see he was up on this.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs, would you like to yield to Mr. Everett for a further response?

MR. HIGGS: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: I think what Mr. Higgs just said, Blaque, might clear up some confusion in the laymen's minds. Historically the probate court in this and other states was set up primarily to administer the estates of those who died. In the Constitution of 1908 we simply tagged on the juvenile aspects to a court which was already concerned with things which had nothing to do with juveniles, like administration of estates, the commitment of mentally ill people, the appointment of guardians of mentally incompetent people and so on. Now, the development of the juvenile court within the framework of probate court has been very successful in most places so that this has worked quite well, although it is a rather strange combination that you have on one hand a court dealing with decedent estates and on the other hand they are dealing with juveniles. Still it has developed rather well, and we are not suggesting that this be changed.

What we are suggesting is that there be a degree of flexibility so that as experience in other areas may dictate, if it seems more logical to either transfer the juvenile powers of that court to another court or transfer other powers to that juvenile court or create a separate juvenile court in large counties, that this can be done. Under the present constitution it cannot be done. In 1908 it was not very practical to set up a separate juvenile system and so, as I say, they just tagged it on here.

Now, in many counties there is considerable thinking, at least in very large counties, that maybe that power ought to be taken away and put someplace separate. This is a matter which is being experimented with in other states, and I don't think many of us on the committee felt today was the day to make any change in Michigan. Maybe the day will never come to make a change in Michigan, but at least the power ought to be with the legislature to make that determination at some future time. That is why, when Mr. Higgs says the probate court will go on, there will have to be a court to handle all of these other duties of the probate court whether the juvenile powers remain there or whether they don't remain there.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: I would like to direct this question to either Mr. Higgs or Mr. Danhof. The language on line 14 where you say "juvenile delinquents and dependents" is the existing language in the 1908 constitution, but in response to Mr. Farnsworth I think both of you made the statement that is reflected on page 2 of the reasons for Committee Proposal 94, where you say "in cases of delinquent and dependent juveniles." Now, today in the probate courts their jurisdiction as far as dependents are concerned is not restricted to juveniles. The probate court is the court that enforces the petitions on responsible relatives, petitions from, say, the welfare department where the welfare department brings the responsible relatives into court to get them to contribute to the support of the person who is on relief. Now, is this your intent, that the probate court shall have no jurisdiction over other than juvenile dependents?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: I think what you refer to, Mr. Mahinske, is granted to the probate court by statute.

MR. MAHINSKE: But if you say in your reasons here that you are talking about juvenile dependents only now, what are you doing with the statute?

MR. DANHOF: Nothing. Because I don't think the Constitution of 1908 — I think they gave them the original jurisdiction of juvenile delinquents and juvenile dependents. Mr. Higgs might have an answer there too.

MR. MAHINSKE: I will yield to Mr. Higgs.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Mahinske, if you look at lines 11, 12 and 13, you will note that the jurisdiction, powers and duties of such courts shall be prescribed by law. Generally speaking — and I think you probably know this — the power and jurisdiction of a probate court is entirely statutory except for this one provision with regard to juvenile delinquents and dependent children.

MR. MAHINSKE: Well then, in the case of original jurisdiction, are you saying that you only want the probate courts to have original jurisdiction as to juvenile dependents?

MR. HIGGS: No. We use the words "they shall also have" in addition to the powers, duties and jurisdictions prescribed by law in lines 11, 12 and 13.

MR. MAHINSKE: But still I ask again, are you maintaining that you want the probate courts only to have original jurisdiction; in other words, constitutional jurisdiction as far as juvenile delinquents and juvenile dependents are concerned, or are you talking about all dependents?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: My answer is no, it would not change the existing language one bit. This is—

MR. MAHINSKE: But Mr. Danhof just informed us that the existing situation is statutory.

MR. HIGGS: And the statute was adopted under the 1908 constitutional provision which we have not changed in any respect except where we say "except as otherwise provided by law."

MR. MAHINSKE: Then your intent here would be to give the probate court original jurisdiction only with reference to juvenile dependents.

MR. HIGGS: No. Our intent is to provide constitutionally for original jurisdiction in these cases, and in all other cases by statute.

MR. MAHINSKE: Well then, why do you even refer to original jurisdiction here if it is going to be by statute? I don't think that is what you mean.

MR. HIGGS: Maybe we are not on the same wave length here, the same frequency. I will yield to Chairman Danhof.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Mahinske, what do you think the 1908 constitution provided?

MR. MAHINSKE: I think it provides for original jurisdiction in all cases of juveniles and dependents, but not restricting the word "dependents" to juvenile dependents.

MR. DANHOF: Let me state this—if that is your understanding, that is fine—it was our understanding that the 1908 constitution restricted it to juvenile dependents. Now, if the court wants to read "dependents" as meaning more than juvenile dependents, fine. We granted nothing more or nothing less than the 1908 constitution, and this was our sole intent. In the exclusive constitutional jurisdiction granted to the probate court there is no difference here than in 1908, and if that included adult dependents as distinguished from juvenile dependents, then it was the committee's intent that it be exactly as it was in 1908 wherein the only exclusive constitutional jurisdiction was in those words "original jurisdiction in all cases of juvenile delinquents and dependents," and that is what the committee intended and that is what we meant by the language.

MR. MAHINSKE: Well, we are in complete agreement here so there is no point in going any further, except would you be reluctant to strike the word "juveniles" from your committee report, not the proposal but the reasons, because I think this could be considered part of the record here and restrictive. On page 2 of your reasons you talk about "in all cases of delinquent and dependent juveniles."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Well, I would consider the request, Mr. Mahinske, and if the committee will meet, we can take care of this. But, as I said, the intent of the committee was to leave it exactly as 1908, with the same language, except we did put the proviso in that it can be changed by statute. But the constitutional grant of jurisdiction in this draft is identical with that of 1908.

MR. MAHINSKE: Then your intent would be identical.

MR. DANHOF: Yes.

MR. MAHINSKE: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Radka.

MR. RADKA: Mr. Higgs, I have a question. The first question I have is the 25,000 figure. What was the rationale behind the committee's using the 25,000 population figure?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: The rationale was simply that there were a number of delegates on the committee that did not feel that they wanted to make any such combination or they did not want to permit the legislature to make this combination in larger counties because they felt that in larger counties the business of the probate court itself was sufficient unto itself without making any combination with any other courts. Now, I am probably responsible for the 25,000 figure. I made a compilation of the distribution of low population counties and there were 5 under 5,000; 13 from 5,000 to 10,000; 9 between 10,000 and 15,000; 6 between 15,000 and 20,000; and 6 between 20,000 and 25,000; and there was just 1 in the division between 25,000 and 30,000, and we drew the line there because it seemed the likely spot, in that no county south of Bay, Midland, Isabella, Montcalm, Kent or Muskegon would be involved and that the only counties involved would be the low population counties north of that line, with the exception of 6 counties which we couldn't entirely fit in because 1 of those counties, Marquette, is 56,000.

MR. RADKA: Then my next question, Mr. Higgs, would be since you are dealing primarily with counties north of town line 16 and in the upper peninsula, and since you have quoted Judge Baird from Otsego county at great length, how many other probate judges in these some 38 counties did you take testimony from in your committee?

MR. HIGGS: We took testimony from other probate judges, in particular with regard to the district idea. I have consulted with other delegates from this territory. I don't know just what your point is.

MR. RADKA: My specific question was how many judges from the counties north of town line 16 and the upper peninsula did you take testimony from on this so called consolidation or circuit-probate court plan? You referred many times to Judge Baird from Otsego county as the authority or the voice of the so called rural probate courts and I wondered how many judges your committee—not you personally—received testimony from that was considered in the deliberations that brought this plan to us on the floor.

MR. HIGGS: I don't know how many others. We did take testimony from other judges, but how many I don't know. We had the president of the probate judges association. We had Judge Meehan. Judge Meehan specifically preferred the district idea, if I am correct. Maybe Judge Pugsley would like to speak on that.

MR. RADKA: I will yield to Judge Pugsley.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Would you prefer, Mr. Higgs, to yield to Mr. Everett?

MR. HIGGS: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Thank you, sir. If I might help to answer the question, one reason we placed a good deal of emphasis on what Judge Baird said was that he was the head of what is known as the top of Michigan probate judges association, so we looked upon him as not simply a judge from 1 county. He was at that time down here for their convention, was going out of office, but he was the head of the association of all the judges of that area. He didn't suggest that he spoke the unanimous voice of all the judges of that area, but he was their official representative and we looked upon him as carrying more weight than just a single probate judge.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Radka.

MR. RADKA: I am acquainted with Judge Baird and I am acquainted with the probate court system in rural northern Michigan north of town line 16 and the upper peninsula and I would just like to offer here that the opinions of Judge Baird were probably the opinions of Judge Baird, and further on as we discuss this and amendments that we have before us, I think that another viewpoint might be present.

MR. HIGGS: Well, I would like to concur, Mr. Chairman, with the fact that Judge Baird was careful to state that they were his opinions and he was not speaking for the association.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lundgren.

MR. LUNDGREN: To whichever member of the committee would like to answer these few questions—like Daniel, I am wondering if I am getting into the den here with all these lawyers. If I might go back to between lines 7 and 11 where you say the supreme court may decide to order the combining of these courts into 1 court, I would like a further explanation of just when and how and where the supreme court will decide it should step in and combine these and whether the people will have anything to say about it or will it be an automatic decision or just what will it be? How will they go back to the legislature and say "We want to combine these counties into 1 court"?

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Lundgren, the supreme court now has a court administrator working with the circuit courts and a deputy working with probate courts, and it was our feeling that the deputy court administrator, in keeping the records with regard to the business of these courts and the problems of these courts, probably would be in a good position to make a recommendation to the supreme court, and that this being an administration type of matter — I shouldn't say simply an administration matter, but at least the administration of the court work in these courts being under the supervision of this deputy administrator, that his knowledge would be most beneficial and he would probably be the best able to compile the necessary statistics to make such a recommendation, if that is any answer.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lundgren, would you like to yield to Mr. Danhof for further response if he has any?

MR. LUNDGREN: Surely.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Let me say this, Mr. Lundgren: in regard first to the 25,000 population, this may look like it was picked out of the air. I assure you it was not. The considered opinion of the deputy court administrator charged with the function of administering and looking over the probate courts was that in a county of approximately 25,000 population, the probate court job pretty nearly reaches a full time position.

Now, insofar as the districts were concerned, there was not a single judge, probate or otherwise — and we had the president of the probate judges association; we had Judge McAvinchey from Flint for the large counties; we heard from the judges of Wayne county; we heard Judge Meehan from Oceana; from Judge Baird; we heard Judge Mary Coleman from Calhoun — not one objected. In fact all, including the bar association, recommended that probate courts be grouped into districts. In particular we inquired specifically of Judge Meehan, who comes from a relatively small county, whether or not there were those cases where it would be extremely difficult or would be needed to have a probate judge in every county. By that I mean the signing of orders of commitment of the mentally ill. And he said definitely not. He did not feel that 2 or 3 counties would be any great burden. Judge Mary Coleman, who comes from Calhoun, mentioned that she sat considerably in the adjoining counties; that, in her opinion, there is no difficulty, in this modern age of transportation and otherwise, of going. If you even have to go 35 or 40 miles to get a judge to sign the order, compare that with 1908 when if you were 15 or 20 miles from the county seat you were a full day's journey.

So that insofar as the districting is concerned, again here, we felt that as time progresses — and we realize this is not going to be done overnight — there can be a recommendation from the court administrator regarding those counties. And remember that, in particular in those areas where you have a nonlawyer judge — and we have a grandfather clause for the nonlawyer judges — as they may retire, resign, be defeated, gradually there would become a district basis the same as we have for circuit courts. And this had to be left to and should be done by the legislature.

Again, here we made it as strong as we could without making it mandatory that if the recommendations came based upon all of the research and the reports by the deputy court administrator — and hence the supreme court, Mr. Downs — that this then should and shall be done. Now we get down to the "shall" and "may" again and Mr. Brake smiles there a little bit. We meant "shall." We wanted to make it as strong as we could. But as Mr. Ford pointed out, when we say "shall," sometimes it takes 52 years. No, the supreme court cannot draw warrants or pay or anything else.

But remember this: there is no jurisdiction — there wasn't in the 1908 constitution — that was given to the probate courts other than for juvenile delinquents and dependents. Every other bit of work the probate court does comes by statute and is in effect taken away from the circuit courts. This is what we had in mind when it comes to the districting. We also thought in these small counties we would be able to assign to the probate judge, who gets all his jurisdiction by statute, other duties so that it might be best that he perform duties which had been handled probably by the justice of the peace or the circuit court commissioner, if you want that, in these small counties, and that is the object of the 25,000.

I realize that the gentlemen from Alpena, my friends Mr. Radka and Mr. Habermehl, say, "Well, let's go to 50,000," because in effect Mr. Habermehl came in with this identical idea and now we keep his county out because he has 28,000 and so he would like to go to 30,000. Well, the magic figure is at no place, but we didn't pick it out of the air; we did it upon the recommendation that when a county gets around this size, the probate judge job may get full time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lundgren, do you desire to yield to Mr. Everett for further response?

MR. LUNDGREN: In about one minute. You have taken quite a few words to get around quite a few points, but you have also opened up something else here that I was going to ask about. It seems there is an opinion here to make the probate judge more than what we think of him now, and some of us are quite concerned about that. When you talk about arraignment of people in the middle of the night or cases — I know of the way the probate court works; sometimes they can spend a whole day on one family — he isn't going to have time to do these other legal things that you are talking about, and I question very seriously in counties my size or bigger whether you aren't getting too far afield, and that is what worries me, that somebody from Lansing can very capriciously say: this court area is too small and we are going to combine them — and the people up there will object to it, but they will have no voice in it. Will they have a chance to express themselves when somebody from Lansing or wherever it may be comes in and says, "We are going to combine your courts"? And we have court areas there that are over 100 miles apart. In modern day travel we just can't get there that quick. We can't, as somebody in Detroit said at our committee meeting, "take a jet." That is about as foolish as we can get on that sort of subject. The roads are better, but the time is still there. And these courts can't be combined in some of those areas as willingly as you seem to think. Now I will yield to Mr. Everett.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lundgren yields to Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Lundgren, I think one of the things which may be disturbing some of you from the smaller counties is that you are overlooking what those of us who are lawyers recognize. In the probate court, not in the juvenile aspects particularly but in the truly probate part of it, a great deal of the preliminary work is of a very routine and administrative nature, and the law now permits, for example, the oath of appraisers and the preliminary review of accounts to be made by the probate register. Now, we assume each county would retain a probate register so if the judge happened to be someplace else, most of these routine matters would be performed just as readily as they are today. The final order, in any case, must be signed by the judge. Usually these things can be scheduled on a daily basis, particularly in the juvenile area or in the mental area where there is a necessity for urgent action. Then if the districts were too big, this might play some hardship, but we don't think anybody is going to overlook that fact.

What I am trying to say is that the average routine preliminary matters can be handled whether the judge is there or not. The extreme case or the final determination would either have to be scheduled as it now normally is in fully 80 or 90 per cent of the cases in the smaller counties, and in these other 10 or 15 per cent of the cases they are going to have to think of that before they combine, and recognize that there may be some very occasional inconveniences. It is just a question of whether possibly in an extreme case there is going to be some inconvenience or whether every county is going to be saddled with the expense of a probate judge who is not busy most of the time, and in these small counties they are not.

MR. LUNDGREN: Well, of course, in some of these small counties where they are lawyers, they are also doing their law work right within the courthouse, some of them.

MR. EVERETT: That is what we object to.

MR. LUNDGREN: You have nothing written in here on that.

MR. EVERETT: There is going to be an amendment offered by some of us from the committee to do just that, say that a judge may not practice law. Many of us on the committee feel this goes 2 ways. It should be a full time job.

MR. LUNDGREN: Then for the benefit of the record, I would also like this explained: when you get down further and combine these offices with any judicial office inferior thereto, could you clearly state what you feel might be inferior thereto that they could be combined with?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Well, certainly we are not referring to personalities.

MR. LUNDGREN: No, no.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Lundgren, as Mr. Higgs says, if you want courts of limited jurisdiction, our idea was simply that it is possible that the legislature will set up various classifications for courts of limited jurisdiction or, as we know them, as inferior courts. They will classify by size of the counties. We felt that we should point out here to the legislature that if they desired to utilize the office of the probate judge with those functions that they might assign in other counties of larger size to a court of limited jurisdiction such as the circuit court commissioner now does, we did not want to have a constitutional prohibition against that particularly for the small counties.

The circuit court commissioner is a constitutional office presently which is vested with the powers of a circuit judge in chambers but also does a lot of other things, basically evictions. In a very small county they sometimes don't even have a circuit court commissioner. And if necessary, we felt that if evictions were assigned perhaps to a court of limited jurisdiction in a county of 100,000, they could be assigned over to the probate judge.

We aren't making any of this mandatory. We are merely making it permissive and as flexible as we can. And I don't think what you envision is going to happen with the legislature, as you well know, without thorough investigation by all parties.

MR. LUNDGREN: Let me ask just this one closing question: would a county court, if set up, be inferior or superior to a probate judge?

MR. DANHOF: Definitely it would be a court of limited jurisdiction and is stated as being less than a probate court.

MR. LUNDGREN: It would be less than probate, a county court?

MR. DANHOF: It would be a court of limited jurisdiction and this would be less than, and not being constitutionally recognized, would be a statutory court which, in the steps that we have set up, would, in our interpretation, be inferior, or of less power or whatever you want to say, yes.

MR. LUNDGREN: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair would like to advise the committee that there are currently 6 pending amendments which cover each of the subjects which have been discussed generally, and that it may be helpful to channel the discussion and consideration of this proposal by the committee if we proceed to the amendments.

The Chair has pending requests for recognition from Messrs. Krolikowski, Everett, Ford, Leppien and Kuhn, and would like to suggest that if any of these gentlemen have questions of a completely general nature not related to pending amendments, those questions would be in order at this time. Would any of those gentlemen like to be recognized at this point? Mr. Leppien.

MR. LEPPIEN: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I would like to direct a question to Delegate Everett because he touched on it, and I first want to preface my remarks with this: for the past 15 years I have long since learned that we ought not, as lay people, question lawyers. However, being a delegate to this convention, I suppose that is part of the job, so I apologize for that. But in your remarks a few minutes ago, you said that the legislature shall by law provide certain things. My question is, sir, when we start up here:

> The legislature may combine 1 or more counties into probate districts, or combine the office of probate judge with any judicial office inferior thereto in any county with less than 25,000 population with supplemental salary as provided by law. . . .

then we say this: ". . . and shall do so on recommendation and report of the supreme court."

Now, I assume, sir — and if I am correct, that is all I want to have answered — that goes right to the very words I started with. The legislature in one case may do something. In the other case you say it shall do this on recommendation of the supreme court. Do I understand it correctly when I say that when the supreme court makes the recommendation to the legislature, the legislature has no power whatsoever except to do it? Is that correct?

MR. EVERETT: It could come either way. If it came in the form of a report and recommendation from the supreme court, then we use the word "shall" because we meant then the legislature would have to act. If, on the other hand, the thing started with the legislature, it is up to the legislature. They could, for example, provide for local option to decide this thing. But if it comes from the supreme court, then they shall do it and there would be no alternative.

MR. LEPPIEN: Mr. Chairman, through the Chair I would like to request one more question.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Proceed, Mr. Leppien.

MR. LEPPIEN: In your remarks you refer to ordinary duties, every day duties, taking oaths and so forth and so on. What about the case of emergency for juveniles who need to be married for obvious reasons? What about the mentally ill who become so disturbed that they are unable to be moved from county A to county B by the sheriff except by straitjacket and so forth and so on, taken into the courthouse or the jail of county B if that is where the probate judge is? How do you envision that to be handled?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Well, Mr. Leppien, I did not wish to suggest that there were no emergencies which would not require the judge. Now, as to the first situation, unless the condition were very obvious, I would imagine that it ought to be able to wait a couple of days at least until the judge got back. And as to the latter, today it isn't necessary to move the mentally ill to the judge. He may and does frequently have to conduct hearings when the mentally ill person is not there simply because he cannot understand the nature of it. I would say the judge would come to the mentally ill person or at least to that county. If the mentally ill person were in such condition that he could not even go to the courthouse of that county, the hearing would have to go on. In addition, the law now does provide, Mr. Leppien, for temporarily restraining mentally ill people on the order of the prosecuting attorney until such time as you may file a petition and call this to the attention of the probate court. We don't visualize that this will change.

There are many emergency situations which the probate judge does have to handle. Percentagewise in his business it is not great. And we feel that with some understanding and some work in this area, almost all of these can be handled in a district plan. And as Chairman Danhof suggested, virtually every probate judge who talked to us about this, including their association, has recommended this. They recognize that a probate judge per county is just not a practical situation.

MR. LEPPIEN: One other question then, sir, if I may, through the Chair. How do you envision to settle the question then if the district is composed of, let's say, 3 counties, as an example, that the probate judge shall, because his is the only nonpartisan judicial office available to do this, be the chairman of the elections commission of a county?

MR. EVERETT: Well, to begin with, Mr. Leppien, his duties as election commissioner, of course, come from the statute. I don't know whether the legislature would want to have a nonresident serving on that election commission. If I were in the legislature, I wouldn't want to have it. I would have somebody else serve on the election commission. But this is a matter which the legislature would have to decide. We don't look upon this as being a constitutional question.

MR. LEPPIEN: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, in view of the hour and the amendments here, I move the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves the committee do now rise. Those in favor will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will rise.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, President Nisbet resumed the Chair.]

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration several matters of which the secretary will give a detailed report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 93, A proposal pertaining to the circuit court; reports this proposal back to the convention with several amendments, recommending the amendments be agreed to and that the proposal as thus amended do pass.

[The following are the amendments recommended by the committee of the whole:

1. Amend page 1, line 12, after "rule" by striking out "or by law".

2. Amend page 1, line 14, after "judges" and after "circuits" by striking out "shall" and inserting "may".

3. Amend page 1, line 20, after "Sec. b.", by striking out the balance of the line, all of line 21, and line 22 through "years.", and inserting "Circuit judges shall be nominated and elected at nonpartisan elections in the county or the circuit in which they reside, and shall hold office for a period of 6 years and until their successors are elected and qualified.".

4. Amend page 2, line 6, after "tribunals" by striking out "as prescribed by supreme court rule;", and inserting "except as otherwise provided by law; power".

5. Amend page 2, line 13, after "purposes" by inserting a comma and "or other officer performing the duties of such office,".

6. Amend page 2, line 15, after "county clerk" by striking out "or" and inserting a comma; and in line 16, after "prosecuting attorney" by inserting "or friend of the court".]

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on agreeing to the amendments. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. President, I would ask that the amendments to section a and to section b be divided and considered separately from the amendments to sections c and d at this particular time.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendments offered to section a of Committee Proposal 93 are as follows:

1. Amend page 1, line 12, after "rule" by striking out "or by law".

2. Amend page 1, line 14, after "judges" and after "circuits" by striking out "shall" and inserting "may".

MR. DANHOF: Mr. President, I would ask again that on the 2 amendments there be a division, that we consider the amendment first as to line 12.

SECRETARY CHASE: First amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 12, after "rule" by striking out "or by law"; so that the language then beginning in line 10 will read, "Each circuit judge shall hold court in the county or counties within the circuit in which he is elected, and in other circuits as may be provided by supreme court rule."

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on the amendment. Those in favor will say aye; those opposed, no.

The amendment is adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: The second amendment:

2. Amend page 1, line 14, after "judges" and after "circuits" by striking out "shall" and inserting "may"; so the language then will read:

> The number of judges may be changed and circuits may be created, altered and discontinued by law and the number of judges may be changed and circuits may be created, altered and discontinued on recommendation of the supreme court to reflect changes in the judicial business.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. President and members of the convention, we again return to this particular problem and, on behalf of the committee, I would urge that the convention not concur in the recommendation of the committee of the whole. The committee felt as strongly as we could that in the past there had not been a response to the judicial needs particularly of this state. As pointed out by the members of the Wayne county delegation, there has been no increase in the judiciary of this particular county for almost 30 years. We seriously considered the possibility of writing in a mandatory requirement concerning population; this we did not do because we did not like particularly to write in numbers or numerical provisions. We wanted to emphasize, as strongly as we could, that the question of the adequate protection of the laws by the people is not something that should be played with in politics, nor should it even be decided upon financial or monetary considerations. Whether or not additional judges are needed to handle a case load should not be determinative upon the fact whether the state has to add an additional $50,000 or $60,000 and the county likewise to pay them. With the emergence throughout all of the country of the idea that the administration of justice should be — I don't use the word — if not nonpartisan, should certainly be a bipartisan consideration and not something which should be kicked around or buried.

We wanted to emphasize as strongly as we could without having an automatic provision that when in the eyes of those who have the facilities, who have the figures, who have the available material at hand, there develops a definite need for additional manpower or for the change of circuits in order to give adequate protection to the public for the efficient administration of justice, that this should be done.

We realize that the supreme court cannot draw warrants, nor can it create the circuits, but I would urge that the convention not concur in the recommendation of the committee of the whole.

I would request, Mr. President, that there be a roll of the ayes and the nays in this particular regard.

PRESIDENT NISBET: There has been a request for the ayes and nays. Is that demand supported? Those in favor will rise. A sufficient number up. Mr. Hutchinson.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. President, I will yield to Mr. Ford.

PRESIDENT NISBET: For what purpose? Do you want to make a speech or do you want to make a motion?

MR. FORD: I want to make a motion.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Well, I want to make a speech.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Mr. Hutchinson has been recognized.

MR. HUTCHINSON: Mr. President, I ask the convention to look at the other side of this coin for a minute or so, maybe a few minutes. You have heard one side of it from Mr. Danhof. Now let's look at the other side. What the language of the committee does here is to vest in the supreme court the power to determine, let us say it bluntly, how hard the judges of this state must work.

If in the opinion of the judges themselves they are overworked, why, it is just a judicial decision in their view. And if in the language of this section, the word is "shall," — the legislature shall create additional judges upon order of the supreme court — then the supreme court will have it in its power to determine how many judges there are. Now, Mr. Danhof says that this is more important than the matter of the $50,000 or $60,000 there might be of additional pay, but also I think that there is a general public concern about how hard the judges work, and I think that enters into the picture too. I am sure that at least the general feeling around the state — I am referring to a number of years ago now — was that when courts were in session apparently in Wayne county only from 10 until 12 and from 2 until 4 and not in session at all in the summertime, and some judges were spending the winter in Florida and so on, that the present circuit bench in Wayne county was not in fact being overworked, that probably the lawyers were to blame in lots of cases for the fact that the cases weren't brought to trial.

What the committee here is doing is writing into the constitution that you leave it up to the supreme court to determine how many circuit judges there are going to be in the state and that is going to be a judicial question. I don't know whether any of the committee has asked any of the members of the supreme court, either past or present, about their reaction to such a responsibility. It occurs to me that primarily the justice of the supreme court is interested in deciding cases, and except in the most extreme cases of misfeasance, I wouldn't suppose that the justices of the supreme court would want to be embroiled in the matter of administration and argue about whether they are going to have more judges created and how many more and all this sort of stuff, and I don't believe that very many people on the floor believe they would be either. I think that we recognize that as a matter of fact this thing would devolve upon the court administrator or a deputy or somebody and that there the power would actually lie, and how far down the scale do we want to actually vest the power to say what the legislature shall do? There are many considerations here, some of them political, some of them otherwise. As I say, the supreme court itself is going to be, I hope, too wrapped up in deciding cases to want to be bothered with this administrative detail. It is a matter which might better be left to the legislature.

Then I want to raise a matter which isn't out of the realm of possibility. Do we want to, in effect, permit the supreme court, perhaps for the time being under a particular philosophy, to pack the circuits? Because if this power is "shall," it is intended to be mandatory. It is expected that the legislature will simply bow and do what is required by this. When you say "shall" it means "shall". It is expected that the legislature shall create these judges and alter these districts. I hesitate to throw the word out, but I want to have it not overlooked. There is a possibility of packing here. Do we want to permit the circuit courts of this state to be packed?

I hope that you will concur in the amendment recommended by the committee of the whole.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee of the whole. Mr. Ford, did you desire recognition?

MR. FORD: Mr. President, the motion that I had intended was the call of the convention, because yesterday when we voted on this, the vote was 57 to 51; 108 delegates participated in making the decision in the committee of the whole, and this is of vital importance. The committee spent a lot of time on it and we still feel as strongly as we did when we came on the floor with this that the committee is making a real step forward in court administration in putting the supreme court in a stronger position to make recommendations with respect to the needs of our judicial system.

Mr. Hutchinson is apparently talking about a period of time in Wayne county that precedes my 10 years of practice there, because I can assure him that our judges are there 5 days a week and as a matter of fact 6 days a week. Our courts are available to the people through noon on Saturday. This has been the practice for at least 10 years that I know of. There are statistics available to offset the guesses that he makes about how many days a judge works. We have the actual figures from the 1960 report made by Meredith Doyle, the court administrator for the state, and it shows that statewide in the 41 circuits the average number of working days per judge is 195, but there are some circuits, circuit 22 for example, where the average number of working days per judge — there is only 1 judge — is 278 days. But in the third judicial circuit, which is Wayne county that Mr. Hutchinson described for us, they are way above average. It is 237 working days per judge. This takes into account the fellow who may have gone to Florida or to Europe last year. He is charged against the others. And with a bench of 18 men, they still come up with an average that is far above the average statewide. You can take the statistics and use them in many ways.

The committee attempted, with the help of such aids as statistics, to come up with a magic number; that is, when you had 75,000 people, you ought to have a judge for them, or when you had a certain number of cases. The statistics will also bear out the fact that in some counties — and Wayne county is not alone in this, nor is it the one most in need of additional judicial manpower — the number of cases to be disposed of per judge is almost double what all of the people who have studied the problem feel is a sensible workload for judges if they are going to do a good job and give everybody their day in court.

I think we should think very seriously before we override the intention of the judicial committee in this language. And this is a case where the "shall" is very important. It doesn't tie the hands of the legislature, but it is going to hold up for public inspection the question of how many judges we actually need, and this decision will be reached on the basis of a recommendation that is made in an open courtroom, not in a closed committee session of the legislature.

I urge you to support the committee's position on this and vote against the amendment recommended by the committee of the whole.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. President and delegates, I also arise to —

MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. President, I have a preferential motion.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Mr. Boothby.

MR. BOOTHBY: I move that we recess now until 2:00 o'clock.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on the motion to recess until 2:00 o'clock. Those in favor say aye; opposed, no.

We are recessed until 2:00 o'clock.

[Whereupon, at 12:05 o'clock p.m., the convention recessed; and, at 2:00 o'clock p.m., reconvened.]

The convention will please come to order.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Announcements.

SECRETARY CHASE: We have 2 requests for leave of absence from the afternoon session: Mr. Tubbs has a pretrial hearing at 3:00 o'clock which has been set for many weeks. He asks to be excused; and Mr. Romney would appreciate being excused from the afternoon and tomorrow's session because of a long time speaking commitment in Washington, D.C. at the international christian leadership annual meeting.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Without objection, they will be excused.

When we took our recess this morning, we were discussing an amendment by the committee of the whole. Mr. Chase will read the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The immediately pending amendment is to Committee Proposal 93, A proposal pertaining to the circuit court; and the amendment pending was:

The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment.

PRESIDENT NISBET: At the time of recess Mr. Higgs had the floor. He is now recognized.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. President and delegates, the arguments of Delegate Hutchinson have caused me to question just exactly what he means. I really don't understand what Mr. Hutchinson is talking about when he talks about court packing in this particular situation and the introduction of the partisan argument.

It was the thinking of the committee that we have 2 situations here. We have a situation where the legislature may create judgeships and circuits in situations where they shall on recommendation of the supreme court. Of course, there is no way in the world that the supreme court can force the legislature to act when it does make such a recommendation. However, it raises a certain presumption, I think, and makes it more forceful, and in any event in a much less partisan atmosphere than the legislature. Certainly the supreme court cannot fill any vacancies. There is nothing to be gained or lost as far as the supreme court is concerned in making any such recommendations and I just don't see where court packing comes into the picture.

Now, as far as the legislature is concerned, we have had a background of experience with legislatures both at the federal level and at the state level, and we do know that partisan politics play a very active part in the creation of judgeships and in filling of judgeships. We have seen legislatures fail to act for periods of time in the face of need awaiting elections, awaiting opportunities to make appointments in a partisan way. We see great numbers of judgeships filled all of a sudden after an expiration of a long period of time.

In the creation of a judgeship in my own circuit a bill failed to pass because it made provision for the filling of the vacancy, according to my understanding, by election. This bill was vetoed. When the bill was revised as to create the opportunity for an appointment, it passed. Now, it seems to me that if there is any argument with regard to court packing, it certainly would not be with this particular recommendation of the committee, and I would urge that the amendment be defeated.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Boothby.

MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen of the convention, I have listened to the arguments of the committee and the members of the committee who are urging nonconcurrence in this report that has come out of the committee of the whole. I am a bit concerned as I listened to the statements because I believe they are injecting a whole new concept into the constitution at this time. The judicial committee originally indicated that they wanted the mandatory word "shall" inserted in this article. They said that the legislature must, after the supreme court made its recommendation, adopt the recommendation of the supreme court, or better yet, as was pointed out by Mr. Higgs, I think yesterday, upon the recommendation of the court administrator, the legislature must make a certain decision. It has always been that the legislature had certain powers granted to it, and those powers were to decide what the law should be and what the policies of the state should be and what the machinery of government within the constitution should be. The executive department carried out those mandates which the legislature provided and the judicial only decided cases.

Now we have a situation where by the word "shall" we are having one branch of government, the supreme court, and particularly one man in that branch of government, the court administrator, telling the legislature what it should do, and what they are telling it to do is to substitute for its own judgment the judgment of the supreme court. The supreme court is telling the legislature, "Do not deliberate on this matter. Do not make an independent decision. Do what we tell you to do." They are saying "You shall do this." And I think this is a violation of the separation of powers concept.

I think that when the committee of the whole made the recommendation that the word "may" should be inserted for "shall" that they did then restore the basic concept of government as we know it: that the supreme court should have the right to make recommendations, the court administrator should have the right to make a recommendation to the legislature, but the legislators independently, after consideration of all the facts, not just the facts brought to the attention by the supreme court but after consideration of all the facts, should then decide whether they are going to create other districts, whether they are going to make certain changes, whether they are going to spend the taxpayers' money on the creation of new judicial circuits.

I think by this method, by the insertion of "may" the committee has given recognition to the separation of powers. But I feel if you accept the recommendation of nonconcurrence which has been presented here, that you will be violating that traditional concept. I know it has been pointed out that the word "shall" has been used in the constitution. In other words, the legislature has been told what to do in certain areas. But when you examine whenever the word "shall" has been used, the legislature shall, it is the command of the people. The people are saying in the constitution, "You shall do such and such and so and so." In this provision in which nonconcurrence is being recommended, it says that the supreme court shall order the legislature to do such and such. I believe that there is a great distinction.

I urge the concurrence in the recommendation of the committee of the whole.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. President, fellow delegates, I think we have to look pretty clearly here at what it is we are talking about. We are not simply talking about whether there ought to be more judges, whether there ought to be larger or smaller circuits. One of the speakers has referred to this as an administrative detail which probably would be dumped in somebody's lap. We are talking about justice for people. One of the biggest difficulties of getting justice for individuals in this country of ours is the delay which results from lack of sufficient manpower on the bench. On this score Michigan is not the worst by any means. In fact, the legislature of Michigan happens to be one of the better state legislatures in providing this. But, nevertheless, there have been lags here and there have been lags elsewhere. We have seen the Congress of the United States refuse to create some 70 or 80 judgeships which were recommended simply for political reasons, to await the outcome of an election, and when the election was over, they created more judgeships than had been recommended to them, and the only reason they waited was for political considerations. This is a matter which we find throughout the country.

Now, it has been suggested that we are violating the separation of powers. I submit to you we are not. The best place to determine what is the situation is within the court itself through its administrative procedures. The separation of powers doctrine does say that having told the legislature you must act, the court cannot then force them to act, and that is the meaning of separation of powers and nobody is arguing that they should have the right to force them. Some of us here happen to believe that they will do what the constitution says they shall do and that there will not be difficulty about it.

It has been suggested that the supreme court can pack the courts, and how this has come about and been brought into this, none of us on the committee can understand, because the supreme court will not name any of these judges. If new judgeships are created, they will be filled in one of 2 ways. If the committee proposal which comes up later comes into effect, they will be filled by election of the people. The majority of us on the committee feel that is the only way to fill the vacancies in the circuit and on the probate bench — the circuit bench, of course, we are talking about here. If the present system is left in vogue, then they will come through gubernatorial appointment, so that is a decision which this convention can make for itself when we come to it as to how to fill those vacancies.

There is today in the legislature a bill to create 5 new judgeships in Wayne county, a bill which, according to the newspapers at least, is quite likely to pass. But why wait until you need 5? If you need 5 today you must have needed 4 someplace in the past and 3 someplace back of that and 2 and 1. Why wait? We submit this is a matter of vital interest to the people of this state, that they are going to be entitled to a day in court now — not years from now, but now — and the only way they can get it is if there is sufficient manpower on the bench.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. President, I would like to ask the chairman of the judicial committee, Mr. Danhof, a question on this. It might clear up my thinking on it. Mr. Danhof, in the committee report it says "altered and discontinued on recommendation of the supreme court." Now I assume that this means the recommendation made by the supreme court to the legislature. Is this correct?

PRESIDENT NISBET: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Yes.

MR. FAXON: The second part then. Is the legislature free to change or act upon the recommendations in whatever manner it sees fit? In other words, I received the impression in some of the arguments that have been going on that the supreme court is going to come in and is going to tell the legislature what to do. Now, can the legislature change these recommendations, alter them, do whatever it feels it should do as it sees fit?

MR. DANHOF: Yes.

MR. FAXON: Then isn't that the same thing that you are saying in the first line, which says "The number of judges may be changed and circuits may be created, altered and discontinued by law"?

MR. DANHOF: I think Mr. Everett has stated it before. The committee wanted to make it absolutely as strong as we could without making it constitutionally mandatory. The legislature, as we have said, can create the circuits, can create judges any time they want to on their own. If, for political purposes, it wants to add judges in a circuit or for anything it may want to do, it can. But when it became evident to that court and to that office and indirectly through the court that certain changes were really needed and when it came down as a recommendation, we wanted it as strongly as we could have it that the legislature shall act upon those recommendations.

Now, you are going to have differences of opinion. But we wanted action. If they recommend judges, that it wouldn't just lay there, that there would be action, that the legislature would follow it. And based upon what we hope would be a reasonable educational and objective study with facts to back up the requests and the recommendations, that the supreme court recommendations would be carried out. They, and perhaps they alone, have the knowledge as to where the business is being conducted, what the case load is per judge, what the trial days are in court. This is not always available, but this is a continuous study on the part of the supreme court through the court administrator. It has been up to now. We had charts and graphs from the smallest circuit to the largest, from the one carrying the most cases per judge, which is Washtenaw, to that carrying the smallest, which I can't tell you right now.

But here is the real nerve center, if you want to call it that, of what is really going on in the judicial system, and we wanted to provide that if the supreme court made these recommendations, as we said, that this shall then be done and they shall be created on the recommendation.

Now, you ask me, "Can they?" When we get back to it the answer is, "Sure they can." We would hope there could develop a good relationship, the same as you wanted in education, with the board of education to review the appropriations. So here we want to begin to work, and this is the strongest way we could word it.

MR. FAXON: So then the real effect here would be simply that where the supreme court makes the recommendations, that the legislature shall take some action, and as to what action, it doesn't necessarily mean it is the action that is recommended, but they shall take some action.

MR. DANHOF: Well, we would hope they would first take action, and, secondly, they would follow the recommendation because we think that would be sound.

MR. FAXON: Thank you.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Krolikowski.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Mr. President, it strikes me that to adopt the Brake amendment and insert "may" in place of "shall" will simply nullify all the work of the judicial committee up to this point. I don't see the purpose of a unified court system of justice and I don't see the purpose of the constitutional court administrator if this court administrator is merely to blandly collect records and these records are to be totally without benefit in determining how judicial manpower shall be utilized.

I think that some of the arguments that have been advanced clearly indicate from these arguments as to where the basis of determination should lie. Should we follow the statistical approach which was announced by the chairman and the vice-chairman of the committee in placing a reliance upon the statistics that are going to be compiled by the court administrator? Or should we rely upon the rank hearsay that some of the proponents of the "may" article have brought forward?

And I submit that anyone who makes statements with respect to the situation in Wayne county as being a situation that doesn't fully utilize its present judicial manpower is obviously out of touch with the situation in Wayne county.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Mr. President, ladies and gentlemen of the convention, Mr. Danhof has said over and over in the course of this argument that they went as far as they could without making it mandatory. I would like to know how you would make it mandatory. When you say to the legislature "you shall," what else can you say to make it mandatory? That is the strongest word I know, you shall do so and so.

And the answer to your question, Mr. Faxon. You asked whether or not the legislature would have to do what the supreme court told it, and you were correctly told no. But why? How? By violating the constitution. When the legislature doesn't do what this supreme court, through its administrator, says it shall do, it is violating the constitution. Now, do we want to write into the constitution a provision and rely upon the legislature violating it? That is a question we have to decide right here.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Judge Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: Mr. President and delegates, I just want to suggest that if we really want to accomplish what the word "shall" suggests, we should do one of two things: either cut out the circuit and give the supreme court the power directly to make that order, or add a provision which would authorize the supreme court to issue a mandamus compelling the legislature to comply with that directive under pain of being in contempt of court.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. President and delegates, I was a member of the committee on judicial branch. I voted, I believe, for the entire Committee Proposal 93, including the present language therein. When I did so, I was under the impression from the sentiment on the committee that we would probably end up in this convention by recommending a supreme court elected by districts, and I didn't feel that there would be too much difference between giving the power to create judicial districts and so forth to an elected supreme court and giving that power to the legislature.

Now it appears from the events of the last few days that we may well be heading in this convention toward an appointed supreme court. I am not willing to vest this broad power of creating judicial circuits and combining them and that sort of thing in an appointive body. Consequently, I feel constrained to change my position as taken in the committee and support the Hutchinson amendment.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on the amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is to page 1, line 14, after "judges" and after "circuits" by changing the word "shall" to "may" in each instance.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Heideman.

MR. HEIDEMAN: Mr. President, fellow delegates, it seems as if we are not only trying to erect a supreme supreme court but a supreme legislature as well. The words "may" and "shall" have for a long time had a distinctive meaning in constitutionalism. In article III of the federal constitution:

> The judicial power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services, a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Now, the "may", of course, is purely permissive and the "shall" is mandatory.

I said the other day in connection with another matter that regardless of the mandamus proceeding, regardless of whether the legislature can be mandamused or not, the point is that there is no point in having a constitution unless you can express commands of the sovereign as well as restraints, and here this is clearly, I think, a command of the sovereign that this shall be done.

And as Delegate Boothby pointed out, I think very ably and effectively, this is a crossing up of our separation of powers theory. We are attempting to give the supreme court the power to make law as well as to interpret the law. And if that is what we want to do, that is one thing. But let's have it clear that that is what we are doing. There is no point otherwise in distinguishing between "may" and "shall". This "shall" here:

> The number of judges may be changed and circuits may be created, altered and discontinued by law and the number of judges shall be changed and circuits shall be created, altered and discontinued on recommendation of the supreme court to reflect changes in the judicial business.

Now that, I think, is clearly a command to the legislature, which would mean that if the legislature did not do it, it would be derelict in its constitutional duty.

Of course the recourse is at the polls to defeat these people who do not uphold the oath of office to uphold the constitution, but it still is clearly a constitutional command or mandate. And of course, I oppose the "shall" and favor the "may" because I believe in our separation of powers system.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Boothby.

MR. BOOTHBY: Point of information. I would like to direct a question through the Chair to the secretary. Is it correct that if the convention wishes to retain the wording of "may" which was inserted by the committee of the whole, that the delegates should vote no? And if they wish to change it to "shall" that they should vote yes on this amendment?

PRESIDENT NISBET: The secretary will read the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment is:

[The amendment was again read by the secretary. For text, see above, page 1387.]

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on the agreeing to the amendment. Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. President, I would just like to answer the question posed by Delegate Brake of the committee that if you want to make it more forceful, there is one way to do it. You make it self executing.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Shackleton.

MR. SHACKLETON: I wonder if we can have an interpretation of rule 24, please.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Mr. Shackleton's point is well taken. Rule 24 says a delegate may speak once, except a mover of a motion who may speak twice.

Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: Can we have an explanation of the vote again? As I understand it, if we vote yes, we are changing 'shall" to "may". If we vote no, we are not changing anything.

PRESIDENT NISBET: That is correct. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment. Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I have already used my time on this one, but I would like to ask a question. I think Mr. Boothby may have injected some confusion, so I would like to know if those of us who want to support the committee now would vote no on the proposition before us. If we don't want to support the committee, we would vote yes?

PRESIDENT NISBET: That is correct. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment. Those in favor will vote aye. Those opposed will vote nay. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and record the vote.

The roll was called and the delegates voted as follows:

SECRETARY CHASE: On agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee of the whole, the yeas are 57; the nays are 72.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The amendment is not agreed to. The secretary will read the next amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The next amendment recommended by the committee of the whole:

3. Amend page 1, line 20, after "Sec. b.", by striking out the balance of the line, all of line 21, and line 22 through "years.", and inserting "Circuit judges shall be nominated and elected at nonpartisan elections in the county or the circuit in which they reside, and shall hold office for a period of 6 years and until their successors are elected and qualified.".

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: This amendment placed here by Mr. Danhof is actually pursuant to the wishes of most of the members of the committee. We urge you to support the amendment.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Those in favor of the amendment will say aye; opposed, no.

The amendment is agreed to. The next amendment, Mr. Chase.

SECRETARY CHASE: This next amendment:

4. Amend page 2, line 6, after "tribunals" by striking out "as prescribed by supreme court rule;", and inserting "except as otherwise provided by law; power"; so that the language then reads:

> Circuit courts shall have: original jurisdiction in all matters not prohibited by law; appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals except as otherwise provided by law; power to issue, hear, and determine prerogative and remedial writs . . . .

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. President, the committee considered this and concurred in the change. When we left here yesterday, we passed over this matter in the committee of the whole for an attempt to get this language. I urge the support of the amendment.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Those in favor will say aye; opposed no.

The amendment is adopted. The next amendment, Mr. Chase.

SECRETARY CHASE: The next amendment:

5. Amend page 2, line 13, after "purposes" by inserting a comma and "or other officer performing the duties of such office,"; so the language would then read:

> The clerk of each county organized for judicial purposes, or other officer performing the duties of such office, shall be clerk of the circuit court for such county.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Those in favor will say aye; opposed, no.

The amendment is adopted.

SECRETARY CHASE: The next amendment:

6. Amend page 2, line 15, after "county clerk" by striking out "or" and inserting a comma; and in line 16, after "prosecuting attorney" by inserting "or friend of the court"; so the language will read:

> The judges of the circuit courts may fill any vacancy in the office of county clerk, prosecuting attorney or friend of the court within their respective jurisdictions, but shall not exercise any other power of appointment to public office.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. President, members of the convention, I only ask that this one be seriously considered, for this particular reason: the 2 offices mentioned in section d are, in essence, constitutional offices which have been previously provided for in the local government section. In the Constitution of 1908 they were constitutionally recognized offices. Now, what has been accomplished by inserting "friend of the court" is that you have indirectly frozen into this constitution an office which now exists only under the statute, and that by so doing, you have this particular situation: you may have an appointment to make to an office that might not be in existence, because the friend of the court can be abolished by the legislature unless you are going to provide for it some other place to make it a constitutional office, so if the legislature changes the name from friend of the court to family service officer, then the legislature is going to provide the appointment and not the judge, and the only way that they have to get around this is to change the name, because you have frozen in a name which in essence outside of this particular section means absolutely nothing.

Now, we do have county clerks provided for in the local government section. We have prosecuting attorneys provided for and there is a logical carry through from that to this. But when you go into the statutory offices and you now have indirectly frozen them in, I think you have caused nothing but trouble for the future and you are inviting circumvention by the fact that the legislature can abolish friend of the court, recreate it under another name and what have you got? I think it is just a poor concept of constitutional philosophy.

Now, if you wish to put in the local government section or some other place a provision that there will always be a friend of the court or something similar, I can see the particular reason.

For that reason, and not because I oppose friends of the courts —because I think they are a necessary adjunct to the court, but because of the fact that this is a statutory office, is not constitutional — I would urge that you seriously reconsider and that the amendment of the committee of the whole be not concurred in, and vote no.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. President and delegates, when I spoke in the committee of the whole, I indicated that I did not oppose this amendment. I have reconsidered, and I urge that you support the committee for the reasons given by Mr. Danhof, and vote no.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Judge Gadola.

MR. GADOLA: Mr. President and members of the delegation, again I am sorry but this judicial matter is something that has been with me for 50 years, and I operated for 30 under it. I won't go into the reasons why, but please vote no on this amendment. You put it upside down. If you wanted to give the court any authority over any other office, it should have been the court reporter or stenographer, but not the friend of the court. Thanks.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is agreeing to the amendment. Those in favor will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no.

The amendment is not agreed to. Are there any other amendments?

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Kuhn offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 2, line 1, after "office" by striking out "shall" and inserting "may"; so that the sentence beginning in line 22 of page 1 would read, "In circuits having more than 1 judge the terms of office may be arranged to provide that they will expire on a staggered basis."

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Kuhn.

MR. KUHN: Mr. President and members of the convention, as you know, yesterday we thought that 1 was rather a foolish number and we could not see how it was justified and we attempted to use the number 6. We are still of the opinion that 1 is not a satisfactory number, and to keep this document flexible, we are now recommending that we leave it up to the legislature in its discretion to determine what the number shall be and whether or not it wants to do what the committee is recommending.

I think this was clearly pointed out to us under the proposition now under consideration in the committee of the whole. The committee came up with a figure 25,000 population they should consolidate our probate courts. I for one think 25,000 is wrong. Someone suggested to me — and I don't know if it was in jest — that there are no members of the committee that represent a county of less than 25,000. I don't know if that is true or not. Maybe 200,000 or 400,000 would be a better number. To me, numbers should not be in the constitution, and therefore I would urge that we leave this up to the legislature.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on the amendment by Mr. Kuhn. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. President, members of the convention, we went through this. This was the minority report to section b. We went through all of the arguments. If style and drafting would like to eliminate the "1" and say "having more than a judge" we will go along. We took all of the arguments as to why we felt it was good. If we are going to do it, it should be done. The bar association recommended it. Witnesses before our committee recommended it. If you are going to elect the judges, the least we could try to do is to shorten the ballot. We have provisions for the legislature to implement them. Without going back into all the arguments, I would urge the defeat of the amendment.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on the amendment. Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. President, I expressed yesterday that although we had a minority report that sought to do exactly what Mr. Kuhn is doing here, we did not wish to make a fight of it at this point because this issue comes up again in Committee Proposal 96 in a form where I think we can more readily resolve the issues. So I don't feel that the change of this word is essential at this time because I think it is something that can be done in Mr. Cudlip's committee to conform with whatever we do when we handle the matter in full in Committee Proposal 96.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on the amendment. Those in favor will say aye. Opposed, no.

The amendment is not adopted. Are there further amendments?

SECRETARY CHASE: That was the last amendment, Mr. President.

PRESIDENT NISBET: If not, Committee Proposal 93 as amended is referred to the committee on style and drafting.

Following is Committee Proposal 93 as amended and referred to the committee on style and drafting:

The committee recommends that the following be included in the constitution:

Sec. a. The state shall be divided into judicial circuits along county lines in each of which there shall be elected 1, or when provided by law, more than 1 circuit judge. A circuit court shall be held at least 4 times in each year in every county organized for judicial purposes. Each circuit judge shall hold court in the county or counties within the circuit in which he is elected, and in other circuits as may be provided by supreme court rule. The number of judges may be changed and circuits may be created, altered and discontinued by law and the number of judges shall be changed and circuits shall be created, altered and discontinued on recommendation of the supreme court to reflect changes in the judicial business. No change in the number of judges nor alteration or discontinuance of a circuit shall have the effect of removing a judge from office during his term.

Sec. b. Circuit judges shall be nominated and elected at nonpartisan elections in the county or the circuit in which they reside, and shall hold office for a period of 6 years and until their successors are elected and qualified. In circuits having more than one judge the terms of office shall be arranged to provide that they will expire on a staggered basis.

Sec. c. Circuit courts shall have: original jurisdiction in all matters not prohibited by law; appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals except as otherwise provided by law; power to issue, hear, and determine prerogative and remedial writs; supervisory and general control over inferior courts and tribunals within their respective jurisdictions, in accordance with supreme court rules; and jurisdiction of other cases and matters as the supreme court shall by rule prescribe.

Sec. d. The clerk of each county organized for judicial purposes, or other officer performing the duties of such office, shall be clerk of the circuit court for such county. The judges of the circuit courts may fill any vacancy in the office of county clerk or prosecuting attorney within their respective jurisdictions, but shall not exercise any other power of appointment to public office.

SECRETARY CHASE: The committee of the whole, Mr. President, has also had under consideration Committee Proposal 94, A proposal pertaining to the probate court; has come to no final resolution thereon. This completes the report of the committee of the whole.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The Chair recognizes Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the purpose of considering matters on the general orders calendar.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on the motion of Mr. Van Dusen. Those in favor will say aye; those opposed, no.

The motion prevails. Mr. Van Dusen.

[Whereupon, Mr. Van Dusen assumed the Chair to preside as chairman of the committee of the whole.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will be in order. When the committee last sat, it had under consideration Committee Proposal 94, a proposal dealing with organization and jurisdiction of the probate courts of the state.

For last previous action by the committee of the whole on Committee Proposal 94, see above, page 1380.

The general discussion of the proposal had been completed. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Mahinske raised a particular question regarding the interpretation of the word "dependents". At that time I indicated that it was my opinion that the committee proposal was correct. I should like at this time to make additional reference thereto to solidify the interpretation given to it by the judicial committee.

First I should like to refer to the report of the submission and the address to the people of the Constitution of 1908 where they added this language, ". . . and they shall also have original jurisdiction in all cases of juvenile delinquents and dependents." Under the explanation it says:

> No change is made from section 13 of article VI of the existing constitution except for the purpose of improving the phraseology and the addition of the boldface words — which were the ones that I read
> — these being added to make the powers conferred by law on probate courts in juvenile cases constitutional powers.

Now, this meant that there had been, prior to 1908, a statute in this regard. I read further:

> . . . that from the debates of the Constitutional Convention of 1907-08, volume 2, page 970, it shows that the word "dependents" refers to juvenile dependents with this explanation. After the proposal was placed on second reading, the following amendment was offered:
> After the word "delinquents" insert "and dependents."
> The argument by Delegate Simons on his amendment was as follows:
> That this proposal aims to make the probate court a juvenile court; that is, giving it jurisdiction over juvenile cases. Now, those who have had to do with juvenile offenders recognize 2 distinct classes. One of them is delinquents and the other is dependents. And that classification is made in all of the statutes which have been passed in various states dealing with juvenile offenders.

Therefore, it is the position of the committee that the committee report is correct and that juvenile delinquents and dependents has the exact interpretation it had in 1907-08, refers to juvenile delinquents and juvenile dependents. And with that in mind I would like to proceed, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Mahinske, do you desire recognition?

MR. MAHINSKE: Yes. But then I would like to ask further that by repeating this language, it is not your intent to take any adult dependent jurisdiction away from the probate courts that had been conferred on the probate courts since 1908?

MR. DANHOF: By statute?

MR. MAHINSKE: By statute.

MR. DANHOF: No. Absolutely correct. We are not conferring upon them constitutional jurisdiction of adult dependents, Mr. Mahinske, only what they had before as it relates to juveniles.

MR. MAHINSKE: And you are not withdrawing from them the statutory adult dependent jurisdiction that they have?

MR. DANHOF: Of course not, because whatever is granted to them by statute they keep. We provide that they shall have such jurisdiction and powers and duties as shall be prescribed by law, and whatever is given to the probate court by law is what they have in addition to this juvenile jurisdiction.

MR. MAHINSKE: Fine. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Boothby.

MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to Mr. Danhof.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. BOOTHBY: Mr. Danhof, just so the record is straight and that my mind is clear on this matter, does the committee contemplate that in those counties with a population of less than 25,000, the court administrator can command and direct the legislature to provide a supplemental salary for probate judges in those counties?

MR. DANHOF: Well, as Mr. Higgs pointed out, the intention was that every county that has a probate judge pays him $5,000 now by statute, and we only would provide, we hope, that if they add to the duties of the probate judge, that they would add a supplemental salary as shall be provided by law.

Now, we have just gone through this whole deal again. Again we get down to: if there are additional duties that seem to be placed upon the judge because they transfer to him, we will say, the jurisdiction of the circuit court commissioner — which they could do, which they might do — that you have a salary scale generally for probate judges. Perhaps their whole salary scale would be revised. Again we would hope that if this procedure is adopted, that the recommendation of the court would be accepted, the theory being that if you want to have an attorney, you are trying to get a salary which would attract an attorney full time and give him a living wage in these counties.

MR. BOOTHBY: Then I think you have answered my question. What you are saying then is that the court administrator can dictate his will as to the salary of a probate judge in a particular county, and that if the legislature carries out the constitutional mandate, they must carry through with this particular directive of the court administrator. Am I correct?

MR. DANHOF: Of the supreme court, Mr. Boothby, not the administrator.

MR. BOOTHBY: Another question, Mr. Danhof, if Mr. Danhof would care to answer. Is it also in the contemplation of the committee that the court administrator, acting for the supreme court, could actually direct and command the legislature to set up a wholly new inferior court system in certain counties of the state?

MR. DANHOF: Wholly new?

MR. BOOTHBY: That is correct.

MR. DANHOF: No, because there you have to have a 2/3 vote. And the legislature, by section a, which you have already passed, is given the sole authority to set up any new court, Mr. Boothby.

MR. BOOTHBY: Let me ask this further question, if you would care to answer. Is it possible that by this command of the supreme court, they could command the legislature to set up a county court system but just naming it a probate court system, taking away the powers of the justice of the peace and yielding them to the probate court and in effect setting up a new judicial system?

MR. DANHOF: Well, this is the whole import of the amendment. You group this together with the idea that we have recommended that the justice of the peace and the circuit court commissioners be deleted from the constitution, and that within 5 years their powers, duties, et cetera, be transferred to some statutory court. And if this would turn out to be the best procedure, we would certainly hope that it would be utilized. This is the entire reason for recommending this particular type of proposal in these types of counties.

MR. BOOTHBY: If these courts were combined so that the probate court actually acted as the court over all of the inferior court matters, would this require a 2/3 vote of the legislature?

MR. DANHOF: I don't necessarily think so. This is my own personal opinion. It would not be setting up a new particular type of court because you see, Mr. Boothby, everything that the probate judge has now except juvenile authority comes by statute anyway, so they could assign him many duties right today that the circuit judge is performing or anything that even the justices of the peace are performing over and above what is constitutionally granted to them.

The probate court has no original jurisdiction except juvenile. Everything else comes from the statute and it, in effect, is a derogation of the jurisdiction of the circuit court, and I would imagine that if the legislature had seen fit over the past years, it could have, in effect, if it desired, reduced the probate court to nothing more than a juvenile court under the 1908 constitution and transferred everything that is in the probate court back to the circuit court. Now, we don't think that would happen. It hasn't happened. There is no reason to think particularly that it would. But I think that sometimes we get confused. There is no constitutional jurisdiction to the probate court except in just 2 cases: juvenile delinquents and juvenile dependents. The rest is all statutory and always has been and will continue to be.

MR. BOOTHBY: As I listen to your explanation of this section, I can only conclude that the court administrator, acting on behalf of the supreme court, can command the legislature to do 2 things: spend the taxpayers' money on supplemental salaries, and set up a completely new court system on the inferior court level by indirection. I understand they cannot do it directly, but they can do it indirectly by taking away the justice court functions and placing them in the hands of the probate court and giving them all the power which the inferior courts have.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take up Delegate Boothby's question here. His understanding is certainly not mine, completely. Following on line 8, if you follow the comma after "districts" you read that entire clause:

> . . . or combine the office of probate judge with any judicial office inferior thereto in any county with less than 25,000 population with supplemental salary as provided by law. . . .

I think I can speak for the committee in this matter, and if I don't, I hope that they will correct me. It was my understanding in the construction of that sentence that "with supplemental salary as provided by law" applies only where the office of probate judge is combined with another judicial office. It does not apply to the combining of probate courts into districts.

Now, inasmuch as the probate salary is set by the legislature now, and inasmuch as it is merely provided that if additional judicial duties are added to the office, there be a supplemental salary, there is no power whatsoever in the court administrator — or it would be better and more correct to say that the supreme court, upon recommendation of the court administrator, has no power to determine what the supplemental salary is. This was designed, really, to provide a method that the legislature could use to create a court system at less money, because in counties with less than 10,000 population, they just don't have very much probate business, and they have, at the very minimum, $5,000 base salary by statute, and with a reasonable supplement, you have the base upon which to build. Our whole problem arises because we are incorporating into the constitution this tier of courts, the probate court. As I told you before, only 13 other states provide in their constitution for a probate court. What we have done is, we have provided for a probate court and we are trying, in including it in the constitution, to also include a degree of flexibility for the handling of these problems in counties regardless of their size.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will once again advise the committee that there are pending, in addition to the amendment pursuant to the minority report, some 7 additional amendments which cover, in the Chair's opinion, everything which has been discussed to this point, and it might be helpful in channeling the course of our activity to consider these subjects as the amendments arise. The secretary will read the amendment offered pursuant to the minority report of Messrs. Ford, Garvin, Bledsoe, Ostrow, Krolikowski and Barthwell.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Ford, on behalf of the minority, offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 14, after "dependents" by striking out the comma and "except as otherwise provided by law".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Ford and others, the Chair will recognize Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, the rationale for the minority report is on page 581 of the journal. I will read in part from it.

[Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the minority report supporting reasons were read by Mr. Ford. For text, see above, page 1381.]

That is to say, we don't feel that the same judge who tries adult offenders and who hears other forms of cases that are always an antagonistic proceeding should be dealing with juvenile matters and particularly with juvenile offenders characterized as juvenile delinquents.

[The remaining 2 paragraphs of the minority report supporting reasons were read by Mr. Ford. For text, see above, page 1381.]

As has already been stated here today, the only constitutional power that the probate court has is this phrase. The effect of the committee's language at the end would be to nullify a constitutional guarantee that you can never merge the juvenile function with general trial function. A number of people who have been very active and very prominent in the juvenile field from the standpoint of juvenile court administration have recommended very strongly that we retain the language of the 1908 constitution, and there are a number of reasons that they advance in support of this position.

The question is going to be raised and the assertion is going to be made — so I might as well get it out on the floor now — that the reason for the addition of the qualifying language by the committee "unless otherwise provided by law" is to permit the creation of a family court. Well, I want to say that people who have been advocating the wisdom of a family court in Michigan — and I am one who subscribes to the idea, but again this is something like home rule. I guess we are not all talking about the same thing when we are talking about a family court — have come to the conclusion that the present constitution does not prohibit the creation of the kind of family court that they think Michigan needs.

We do not now, for example, have a juvenile court set up in the state as a separate court. We do have the juvenile function in the probate court, and the probate judges throughout the state are in effect juvenile judges. But probate judges do not try other criminals. They don't try adult criminals. And when we are talking about juveniles here, it should be made very clear that we are talking about people under the age of 17. When they reach 17 they become adults in the eyes of the law for the purpose of criminal prosecution. So we are talking of children of tender age.

Historically our system of justice fought with this problem for many, many years, and at the time of the 1908 constitution throughout this country there was a wave of revulsion over cases reported of children of very tender years. At just about the time of the last convention there was a rather famous case involving a 10 year old child being tried in a criminal adversary proceeding. The feeling of people for many years has tended toward the idea that children had to be treated differently when they committed a wrong against society than adults and that a different standard not only had to be applied to their conduct but a different manner of handling them as offenders had to be effected.

I think that the evolution of this concept is summed up quite well in the testimony given before our committee by Judge Mary Coleman, of Calhoun county, who spoke for the probate judges in front of our committee, and particularly on the juvenile aspects. She says on page 3 of her prepared statement:

> The juvenile court should be placed in that court the nature and philosophy of which is most closely allied. The matters coming before the probate court: probate of estates, commitments of the mentally ill and handicapped, guardianships, adoptions, juvenile court proceedings, etc. are well suited to be grouped in one court, a court of neither criminal jurisdiction nor one basically adversary.
> Less than half a century ago, in some states (not Michigan) of this country, a 10 year old boy who broke a street lamp could be brought into an adult criminal court. The importance and urgency of this issue was certainly very much in the minds of the drafters of the 1908 constitution, for they lived at a time when this was a burning cause. They recognized the issue as fundamental and a far sighted convention placed juvenile matters in the only noncriminal, nonadversary court in our state system.

It should be stated as it stands now, with the new 5 tier system that this convention has thus far agreed to, the only noncriminal nonadversary court available for the handling of these affairs is the probate court. If Mr. Higgs' amendment, which is part of the committee report, is adopted, this might be modified in some part, thus making an important step forward. This was a victory in a battle which had been waged for hundreds of years. It took longer for children to be treated as children than it did for all of us to obtain the constitutional right of free speech. I would like to repeat that: it took longer for children to be treated as children than it did for all of us to obtain the constitutional right of free speech.

Long after we had recognized all of the other basic rights that we now subscribe to and recognized them in the form of our bill of rights or declaration of independence in the constitution itself, we were still trying to convince people in this country that children had to be treated differently than adults when they got into trouble. As a matter of fact, there are states in this country today that still do not embrace this concept, and it has been suggested to me very recently, during the noon recess, that maybe we don't need this any longer because certainly we are all enlightened enough now so that no one would ever attempt again to put the children back into the criminal courts of the adults.

Well, it has been done right here on this floor, because this 25,000 population merger proposal will say that in counties of 25,000 or less the same person who holds examinations in all of the criminal matters, ranging all the way to and including murder, could conceivably be the probate judge, and the probate judge would be the juvenile judge, and you will be putting them back where they were a couple of hundred years ago.

Also we have had people before the committee and we have had professional recommendations that the whole system, as Mr. Higgs urged on you just a few moments ago, should be merged and there shouldn't be a separate probate court, and one of the strongest reasons for having a separate probate court is for having a separate court, a place in which you could repose the juvenile function and not have the danger of adding to that court's duties criminal or adversary proceedings.

Going on with Mrs. Coleman's statement:

> Let us not regress or place in hazard these important gains. To assure the place of children in our court system, such should be specified in the new constitution. The new constitution should retain that which is good in the 1908 constitution and remove or change that which should be removed or changed.

Now, in addition to Mrs. Coleman, we had testimony on behalf of the probate judges association, and the Honorable Phillip Mitchell of Hastings made a presentation to us. I would like to read briefly from that:

> My own views are that exclusive original jurisdiction over juvenile delinquents and neglected children under the age of 17 years should be given to the probate courts, and that in addition the legislature should be authorized to establish family courts in such areas of the state as they deem it advisable by adding this jurisdiction to that of the probate court in the area affected.

In other words, the probate judges association is saying, "We agree that a family court would be a good thing, but we don't feel that you have to tamper with the constitutional guarantee of juvenile function being separated from other courts in order to accomplish your purpose."

I might say that although the family law committee of the state bar association has not had an opportunity to take a final position on this matter, I am a member of that committee and have participated in a number of discussions concerning the family court. There is a considerable amount of sentiment on this committee for some form of family court, but I think that it is fair to say that a majority of the members of the committee think that as a legal proposition a constitutional change is not necessary to make it possible to provide the kind of family court that people who are working in this field directly feel the state of Michigan might need now or on into the future.

Very recently you received, all of you, a letter from the juvenile judge down in Wayne county, and Mr. Garvin is going to discuss that, but just the other day we received from Mrs. Coleman a letter supplementing her testimony. It is dated February 20, 1962, addressed to the chairman of our committee:

> The juvenile affairs committee of the Michigan probate judges association strongly recommends striking from judicial Committee Proposal 94 relating to probate courts the words "except as otherwise provided by law" on line 14.
> The present form of the proposal provides no constitutional guarantee that children will not again be tried in adult, criminal, adversary courts — on the contrary, it leaves the door wide open.

I would like to supplement that by saying it not only leaves the door wide open, but there are people who already have their foot in the door, and it is the first step toward the amalgamation, once again, of these functions with a court where they don't belong. She goes on to say:

> We reiterate the position of probate judges that gains made over the last century be protected in the new constitution and children continue to be guaranteed hearing in noncriminal, nonadversary courts.
> It is respectfully suggested that an amendment be supported eliminating the endangering words "except as otherwise provided by law."

I am very pleased that the minority put its minority report in quite some time before these communications were received and, without any contact with us, spontaneously suggested the very change that we are here suggesting in the minority report.

I do hope that the ensuing discussion of family courts and other considerations doesn't serve to becloud the issue because it is a very simple, clear and concise one, the question whether we feel it is necessary to have such a constitutional guarantee or not, because when we put the qualifying words in that the committee puts in, the legislature could at any time intentionally or, what is worse, inadvertently in the creation of inferior courts or in the enactment of statutes not primarily for this purpose once again put the children back in the adult courts.

With that I would like to yield to Mr. Garvin, a member of the minority that signed the minority report that supports the amendment proposed.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford yields to Mr. Garvin.

MR. GARVIN: Mr. Chairman and delegates, you know, I hope we face this issue squarely and not get off too much on side issues because it deals with juveniles, someone who cannot be here with us and someone whom we must continue to do the best possible to protect and bring up as proper citizens. There have been questions and statements about juvenile delinquency becoming worse or in greater percentage. Whether it is or not I am not here to discuss, or whether it is because of greater population. But I do know that it goes on throughout the state of Michigan without regard to the size of your county or the size of your district or the section of Michigan in which you live. Now, this in 1908 was added; that is, placing a period after giving the probate court original jurisdiction over juveniles and dependents for the very reason, as stated by Mr. Ford, that they shouldn't under the age of 17 be in adult criminal courts particularly.

There has been some discussion about a family court, but this would not be where a family court should be. In our Committee Proposal 90, our fifth tier of courts includes establishment of other courts of inferior jurisdiction. That is where it would be. To further explain this, I want to read part of a letter from the vice chairman of the juvenile affairs committee from the Michigan probate and juvenile judges association, Judge James H. Lincoln. By the way, this letter was just dated last week, long after the minority report was put in.

> The adding of the words "except as otherwise provided by law" has in effect removed all constitutional guarantees concerning juveniles that are contained in the Constitution of 1908. The practical and actual result of including the words "except as otherwise provided by law" goes far beyond the stated or intended reason for including these words. The actual result is to remove the bill of rights for juveniles from the constitution. There will be no constitutional guarantee. Juveniles may once again be tried in adversary and adult criminal courts. It took centuries to get children out of adversary and adult criminal courts. The constitution of 1962 should not remove the time tested guarantee given to juveniles in the 1908 constitution.
> If the words "except as otherwise provided by law" are stricken by amendment, there will then be a constitutional guarantee that juveniles will be tried in a nonadversary court and noncriminal court.

The letter proceeds on that general basis, that we are going centuries back if we allow this amendment there so the legislature can add any type of court they want. I was also going to mention — Mr. Ford has already mentioned it — about the fact that the legislature won't do that, when we are trying to do it ourselves here.

I have no objection to perhaps circuits being combined at 25,000 or more, but I don't see how it can be done and still retain the juveniles in a court of their own because of the adult matters that are happening in the justice courts for example.

Now, in reference to a family court, I will repeat again there is room for that. There is provision made so the legislature could establish family courts, and this section in this constitution is no place to take away our juvenile courts for the juveniles because that is where it should be, and I hope that you vote for this minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford, you retain the floor.

MR. FORD: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if there are any other sponsors of the minority report who would like to speak on this. I don't think there are. And with that, we will rest our case.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Baginski. Mr. Baginski, excuse me. Mr. Krolikowski, do you yield?

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Baginski.

MR. BAGINSKI: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I rise in support of the minority report amendment. I stand here as an employee of the probate court for 22 years. I can say this this afternoon: the bench in Wayne county has asked me to rise to the floor to support this minority report amendment and to see if we can strike out these 5 words.

We have heard a lot about criminals in juvenile court and so forth.

Let me say this to you and cite another facet of the juvenile court. When I first came to the probate court, we had 6, maybe 10 mentally ill children that we found had to be committed per year. In the ensuing years we found that had we had proper psychological clinics, psychiatrists to examine these children who were committed to boys' vocational or the Adrian school for girls, they would not have had to go to Adrian or to boys' vocational. These children were mentally disturbed and mentally handicapped and should have gone to mental institutions. In these years we have a psychiatric staff; we have a child guidance clinic; we have a psychological clinic, and today, rather than force these children to go to boys' vocational where they become lost with some children who are of a criminal tendency, where they learn a lot of new ideas and later end up in Jackson prison, these children are sent to Northville or Ypsilanti and are treated as emotionally disturbed children, or they are sent to Lapeer or to Coldwater or to Newberry, whatever the case may be, and they are treated as mentally ill children and eventually get home. This is one facet of this work.

Now, the type of people who are employed in the juvenile court are specialists trained to do this particular work. We have some children who are placed on probation. They are handled by probation officers who know this particular kind of work, and they are career people and are trained to do this. Now, we are interested that the work that we have, the plant, the building, the Wayne county youth home that has been established at a cost of many millions of dollars remain with the court, that the special type of work remain with the juvenile division of the probate court, and if at some time in the future it is felt that they would like to create a family court, they can do it by the legislature and go on about their own composition.

We earnestly urge you to support the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Bay City, Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this is indeed a very serious matter. There is nothing about it that should be taken lightly. The committee has considered, I think, every aspect of this problem that has been raised here so far today. I do indeed wish you to face the issue squarely, not on the basis of any pressures that may be involved.

I too have letters from probate judges including the dire implications of what we might do, and I don't take them lightly, and I certainly do believe that we must here today consider all of the rights of children, who cannot speak for themselves, and I agree that children should not be tried in adult criminal courts particularly, as has been stated here.

I don't think that there is any possibility — and none of the judges that appeared that were asked the question felt that there was such a possibility — that we are going to try 10 year olds in adult criminal proceedings any more at any time in the future. This is really looking back many, many years. I haven't heard anyone anywhere advocate such a thing. And I heard Delegate Ford speak the other day about seeing ghosts, and I think certainly that is a ghost that he is seeing here today. Now, let us face the issue squarely. Delegate Ford says there is room in Michigan for the kind of family court Michigan needs. And believe me, I don't in any way mean to take anything away from the sincerity of the argument. This is exactly why we have attempted to write into this provision the degree of flexibility that we did, because we did not believe that we were able to know exactly what kind of family court Michigan does need. If we did know, we would have written it in.

We had in New York state last year a new judicial article, and it does include a family court. And that family court includes the jurisdiction of a children's court, a domestic relations court, aspects of the surrogate court and the circuit court, and it is a separate and independent court. It is a noncriminal court, especially set up for certain purposes.

I think we need to include in our constitution a provision which is broad and flexible enough so that we can take advantage of the experience of other states in the development of their courts along this line. We have the opportunity to watch the development before we go into it, see how it works. I think that is the most enlightened approach that we can possibly take. I note here in the letter from Judge Lincoln that if these words are stricken, there is no guarantee that the juveniles will be tried in a nonadversary and noncriminal court. Well, of course, the probate court is not a nonadversary court. There are a number of proceedings in probate court that are adversary. The jurisdiction of the probate court includes all kinds of things you probably never heard of, including appointments to the board of auditors, appointments to the county allocation board, appointments of members on the soldiers relief commission. It includes condemnation proceedings of 3 different types. I have a page and a half listed of duties of the probate court.

I would like to say that when Delegate Baginski tells us about the fine facilities in Wayne county for handling emotionally disturbed children and the employment of specialized juvenile court workers, this is exactly one of the reasons why we would like to make it possible for the legislature to develop possibly district probate courts or district juvenile divisions of the probate court so that they can employ the facilities and the people trained to do this kind of work. The door is open not to going backwards but to going forward. We can't look in a crystal ball and know exactly how this should be done. But I do believe that since we have gone this far — and we are going much farther than a majority of the states of the United States; there are only 13 other states that include the probate court in their constitution — then I think it is very important that we do include the flexibility necessary to develop better ways of handling juveniles.

I don't think it is necessarily true that the juveniles are best handled in all probate courts in the state of Michigan. It may be that the juvenile aspects should be entirely out of the probate courts in some parts of the state. Now, I don't know and I am not trying to tell you what this plan should be. I am only urging that inasmuch as we have continued the placement of the jurisdiction in the court, that you do not take away or strike out this provision, which would make the probate court inflexibly the source of original jurisdiction.

Let me give you a thought going back to this issue that Delegate Ford raised. What kind of a family court do we need or want? My understanding of what I have read in this direction is that if a judge can have before him perhaps in a domestic relations matter the entire aspect of the family relationship — maybe this is the kind of problem that generates juvenile deliquency and includes also adult delinquency, and as a way in which he can have the total picture before him, and not only the total picture but the power to act not only on the juvenile but on the adult, and with the assistance of experienced and trained people — if the judge can have that picture before him and the power to act, this is what the family court is striving for in other states, and I don't want to close the door in such a way, if the family court is developed as the kind of family court that Delegate Ford suggests, that it will exclude the jurisdiction over the juvenile dependent and neglected or the juvenile delinquent, but should include this unfortunate child within the fold of that court and within the framework of the social work that may be done to either bring that family together or look after the best interests of that child. I don't think we are prepared to say what kind of a family court we want to either prevent or provide for today.

And I urge, and respectfully, that you defeat this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Staiger.

MR. STAIGER: I wonder if I could ask a question of Mr. Ford.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. STAIGER: Mr. Ford, as I understand it, your objection to including this wording "except as otherwise provided by law" is that it leaves the door open for the legislature to combine juvenile jurisdiction into a court having general adult criminal jurisdiction? Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Yes. General adult criminal jurisdiction is the one we are most afraid of, but we also don't want it in the circuit court where adversary proceedings obtain, because the procedure in the juvenile court is informal and is not related to the procedure that is carried on in the adversary courts.

MR. STAIGER: So if these things were specifically prohibited, you would have no objection to leaving the flexibility so that it is clearly understood that a family court could be established. As I understand it, the majority report makes it clear they do not want what you are seeking to prohibit either, so if we clearly prohibited that by amendment, then there would be no objection to leaving it flexible for the establishment of some other court of a family jurisdiction?

MR. FORD: If we could use other language to do what I am trying to do, I would have no objection to it at all. The only thing is we have been doing it this way for 52 years and people who have actually — not people who have guessed about it, but the family law committee of the state bar which has been working hard on it does not think that the present constitution prevents the creation of an adequate family court.

MR. STAIGER: I would say that it certainly does create some doubt in my mind that you would still be able to establish a family court, and I think that by simply adding a few words to the language rather than striking it all, we could prohibit the thing that the minority is fearful of and the majority clearly states that they do not intend. And I think if this amendment is defeated, we can get some language up there fairly quickly that will prohibit what Mr. Ford seeks to prohibit actually by his amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Knirk.

MR. KNIRK: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I would like very definitely to say that I would like to support the minority report amendment, primarily because of the fact that I, too, am afraid that we will find ourselves opening the situation up to trying the juveniles in the criminal court. I have here before me a letter from former Senator Coleman which I would like to read just a single paragraph from. He says, in his opinion:

> Committee Proposal 94 gives the probate courts "original jurisdiction in all cases of juvenile delinquents and dependents, except as otherwise provided by law." I believe that this quoted provision is dangerous and that juveniles should be processed in nonadversary courts and should not be brought into adult criminal courts or any section thereof.

I think this is the opinion of the sponsors of this minority report amendment, and I feel that there is a danger that juvenile delinquents very definitely might find themselves tried in criminal court, and I think that inasmuch as it has been proper in the last 50 odd years, that we should retain the present language and delete as suggested here by the minority report. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Krolikowski.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to Delegate Higgs.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: As I understand the committee position, the purpose for the insertion of the language that the minority report finds offensive was to allow for the creation of a family court; is that correct?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: I would like to say that that is the principal purpose.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: But now actually if that language were stricken, a family court could still be created. The only difference would be that the family court would have its base in the probate court; is that correct?

MR. HIGGS: I think that that is possible. I think that it would be possible for the probate court to have a family court division. I think it would be limited to less than the circuit court jurisdiction. My point was that I think, if the experience with a family court such as New York has proves successful, that this should be a totally separate and independent court, and that it would include some of the jurisdiction of the circuit court and some of the jurisdiction of the probate court so that you would have the total family problem before you. If you had a domestic relations case, you might have a father who is either delinquent in his alimony or he might even be guilty of the crime of nonsupport, all of which should be before the court when he may be considering the problem of a dependent, neglected child. Both the judge and the social worker should have the whole picture before them.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: All those facets of domestic life could be covered within the concept of a domestic relations court which was based in the probate court.

MR. HIGGS: Well, I think that is true. But then that defeats your argument that you want to have it in nonadversary court, because the probate court is an adversary court with many other functions, like condemnation proceedings, mental cases and estates and all of these other duties.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Well now, if we don't have the family relations based in the probate court, then you move in either of 2 directions. You move up to the circuit court where there is no question that there are adversary proceedings, or you move down to this fifth tier. Now, the complexity of that fifth tier has still been undetermined. Only the legislature will finally determine the complexion of the fifth tier.

So you have 3 possible solutions: you either move up to the circuit, which is concededly adversary; you base it at the probate level, which has a very minimal amount of adversary proceedings; or you allow it to go down to the fifth tier, where you are totally uncertain as to the nature of the proceedings. The nature of the proceedings in essence will be determined by the legislature at that fifth tier; is that correct?

MR. HIGGS: Regardless of the tier that you are at — and I don't think you could go down if you wanted to have the complete jurisdiction, but regardless of whether you were at the probate tier or the circuit court tier, I would conceive that this would be a separate division. In other words, you are thinking in terms of a judge whose sole function is to handle this aspect of the court's business. There is no reason why you cannot set up a separate division.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Right. But this division could equally exist at the probate court level, could it not?

MR. HIGGS: I am not satisfied that it could exist equally at the probate court division. I am not arguing that it be at either division. I am just arguing for flexibility so that Michigan can take advantage of the experience of other states in the development of this kind of a court, and I wouldn't want to tie the hands of the legislature so they could not take advantage of the experience as it develops.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: But I don't understand where the flexibility cannot be achieved if it is based at the probate court level.

MR. HIGGS: Well, certainly probate judges apparently want it there very strongly. I can't really qualify my remarks more than to say that I think it should be a matter of flexibility so that we can take advantage of the experience of other states in the development of these courts.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs, are you willing to yield to Mr. Everett to supplement your response?

MR. HIGGS: Yes.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Krolikowski, one reason presently existing why a family court cannot be created within the probate structure is that in the state of Michigan there are 33 nonlawyer probate judges. Now, we have in this judicial article, as you well know, provided that those men may remain in office until they reach 70, providing they can keep getting elected. No legislature is going to grant divorce powers to these men. This may be a generation from now. We don't know when they will become 70. We don't know what their ages are today. But it could very easily be a generation or a minimum of 10 to 15 years. This is one very sound reason why today at least you cannot create a family court within the structure of the probate court.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: All right. If that is your only objection, the nonattorney qualifications or the nonattorney rank of certain probate judges, you must restrict that reasoning to certain counties, because certainly all counties are not victimized or don't enjoy that type of justice at the probate court level. There are counties certainly in the state wherein all the judges are licensed attorneys. Now, the problem that you raise is a situation that exists in only a very limited number of counties. Furthermore, it is a situation which will be cured within the article proposed by the judicial committee. These probate judges will only be allowed to stand reelection. After they have had the benefits of reelection, all judges must be licensed attorneys, so time will obviate your objection, and your objection has no applicability in certain counties where all the probate judges are licensed attorneys.

MR. EVERETT: I agree with you that this is only a partial objection. I said at the outset this is only one of the reasons. It exists, however, in 33 counties, which is a very substantial number of counties, and those counties for some period of time prohibit what you are talking about. Mr. Higgs has pointed out other reasons.

Maybe I ought to talk like Dr. Nord and tell you what we are not doing here. We are not creating a family court. We are not saying to the legislature that you ever must have one. We are not saying that it should be in the probate court or someplace else, or whether it should come into existence. We are simply saying that if the day comes when the legislature, on the experience of other states, wants to try it they ought to have the right to do it, and I think Delegate Staiger has clearly given you an opportunity to solve this dilemma. You don't want them in the criminal court. We don't want them in the criminal court. Let's just say so in the constitution. That is all it takes.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Good.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Gentlemen, the Chair is reluctant to interrupt your colloquy but would appreciate your occasionally acknowledging his presence in the course thereof. (laughter)

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: You may proceed, Mr. Krolikowski.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Let me just raise this question, Mr. Everett — if I may, Mr. Chairman. (laughter) If I may direct a question to Mr. Everett.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Well, now, in order to achieve this end, you have in effect stripped the probate court of the sole facet of original jurisdiction which was lodged in the probate court. With your language as it is, the one aspect of original jurisdiction enjoyed by the probate court can be stricken by the legislature. That is in effect what you do. Is that not correct?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Krolikowski, we permit the legislature to do this, absolutely. We do not strip the court of any power. We do permit the legislature to make this change if and when it wants to do it.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Mr. Chairman, in other words, the legislature could remove all jurisdiction from the probate court?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Krolikowski, yes. There is no question but what it could do that. It has to put those powers someplace. However, it is a little illogical to think that the legislature for some reason would transfer them elsewhere. However, they would have the power to do it. There is no question about it.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: Mr. Chairman, then the probate court does not have constitutional status?

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Krolikowski, of course it has constitutional status, and so does the circuit court. And if you will read the provisions which we have adopted for the circuit court, the legislature, in theory at least, can take these powers from the general trial powers in the circuit court, because we adopted the language that it shall have original jurisdiction except as otherwise provided by law. I don't remember the exact language, but the legislature can control this factor. Now, the legislature could, therefore, abolish both courts, but this is so ridiculous — that we would go along without any trial court in the state of Michigan — that I don't think this is a strong argument against permitting the creation some day or another of a family court if one seems advisable.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Krolikowski.

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: I don't think I follow your analogy. Are you telling me that all the jurisdiction that is presently lodged in the circuit court could be removed by the legislature as is true in the probate court article? I don't think this applies to its appellate jurisdiction. You are right when you say that it applies to its original jurisdiction.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Krolikowski, section c of Committee Proposal 93 which we adopted says this, "Circuit courts shall have original jurisdiction in all matters not prohibited by law." The legislature could prohibit it from having any single bit of original jurisdiction. Then we go on to say it shall have "appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals except as otherwise provided by law." The legislature could provide another method. So it could, in theory, do away with the circuit courts. Now, we recognize this, but we also recognize they aren't going to do it. They could leave us without any trial court if they wanted to, but that still is no reason for us not to consider whether at some time in the future this constitution should not be flexible enough to permit a different method of handling juveniles.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Krolikowski, do you desire to proceed further?

MR. KROLIKOWSKI: I would just like to state, Mr. Everett, that you didn't continue reading that article, because if you read further, there are clauses which allow the circuit court to issue prerogative and remedial writs, and this would not be within the purview of the legislature for abolition, so therefore the circuit court will retain its constitutional status notwithstanding the action of the legislature, but the probate court can be victim of the legislature.

MR. EVERETT: I stand corrected. The circuit court could issue writs and do nothing else if the legislature wanted it to do that.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Faxon.

MR. FAXON: Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry. On February 15 the convention passed a motion with regard to a recess at approximately 3:40. I should like to ask the intention of the Chair with regard to this procedure.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Faxon, the Chair understands the resolution to provide that the recess is in the discretion of the Chair. The Chair is advised by the chairman and vice chairman of the committee on judicial branch that it is their intention to move that the committee rise this afternoon shortly after 4:30. The Chair has therefore exercised its discretion against interrupting the proceedings of the committee of the whole for a recess. The Chair simply calls to the attention of the committee that it has noted that a number of delegates have availed themselves of the opportunity to enjoy private recess. (laughter)

Mr. Habermehl.

MR. HABERMEHL: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to suggest to the delegates from Wayne and the more populous counties that the arguments you so ably make concerning juvenile jurisdiction perhaps ought to be extended, too, to the rest of the counties of the state. It seems to me your eyes are particularly upon the situation in your own counties where you have most adequate facilities for the handling of juveniles. I wish some of you could visit some of our probate courts outstate where the probate judge is the only officer of the court and where the probate judge is so inept, so unqualified that that is the last place that I would want my child to appear.

There is a possibility of setting up some sort of district, some sort of court where we could assure the children of those areas of the sort of benefit that the children of your area now receive. I could show you counties in the northern part of the state where the only hope the child has of receiving proper clinical services, psychiatric services, is to get before the circuit judge of that circuit. Our child guidance clinics, if we have any at all, are organized on a multicounty basis. I know probate judges who would refuse to refer any child to such a clinic.

This is a statewide constitution that we are attempting to adopt. To suggest that there is going to be any change in the excellent facilities that the big counties now provide is purely ridiculous. No legislature would ever tamper with the facilities that you have set up. But the opportunity to extend that kind of service to the rest of the state would require some such statement as the committee proposes. The probate courts in some of the outstate areas simply couldn't provide that kind of service on its own. It would have to be done by a combination, a combining of probate courts or some different type of court.

Now, would you bar the rest of the state from enjoying the kind of facilities for the care of juveniles that you presently enjoy?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Dehnke.

MR. DEHNKE: Mr. Chairman and delegates, it seems to me this discussion can possibly be simplified. Everybody seems to be agreed that juvenile delinquents and dependents ought not to be tried in an adversary court or in a court of general criminal jurisdiction. The difficulty seems to be that if you do take this language out "except as otherwise provided by law" you make it possible for the legislature to confer jurisdiction over this type of case on some other court of the type that I have mentioned. If you don't take it out, then you stand in the way of permitting the legislature to pass such an act as a family court would involve, because then it could be said that the constitution confers jurisdiction over juvenile delinquents and dependents upon the probate court, which the legislature could not change.

I have thought about a substitute which I think would take care of that, drawn up on short consideration. It no doubt has some defects, but the substance of the substitute would be to strike out this language "except as otherwise provided by law" and substitute for it the following: "provided that such last mentioned jurisdiction may be vested in any special court created by the legislature with jurisdiction confined to family or domestic affairs or problems."

I merely throw that in at the present time. I haven't sent the amendment to the desk as yet because I would like to have the delegates on one side and the other of this discussion give it some consideration with the possibility in mind that that may solve the problem.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mrs. Judd.

MRS. JUDD: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, we have — most of us, I think — learned from social workers and court workers and from citizens who have worked very hard to improve juvenile court situations that a family may have 6 different judicial agencies treating its problems at the same time. I think this fact accounts for the flood of letters that perhaps many of us have had from just ordinary folks back home who have learned either through personal experience or experience of their friends how dreadful it is to have these problems fragmented among so many different agencies. On the other hand, we also have been receiving letters from probate judges on the other side of the problem. This raises some questions. What has become of Mr. Ford? I would like to ask him some questions, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MRS. JUDD: Are you there? I took this microphone so as to leave that one for you. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ford stated in his first presentation that some people have come to the conclusion that a family court can be established without a constitutional change. I wonder if you could identify the people or the group that you were referring to.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Well, I am one of them. I would say that the other 2 are members of the subcommittee on family courts of the family law committee of the state bar. I am one of the 3 members. Judge Conlin from Ann Arbor is the second, and Mr. Morton Pierson, who is the number 2 man in the friend of the court's office in the county of Wayne is the third. On the basis of all the suggestions, we have tried to come up with some new kind of court, and I can't say that we have come to this as an official conclusion, but we seem constrained toward the conclusion that using the present court structure would be the more adequate remedy.

MRS. JUDD: Could you tell me how long ago this was?

MR. FORD: This is still going on, as a matter of fact.

MRS. JUDD: Still going on. Secondly, you quoted a good deal of testimony. I wonder if you had any testimony from people other than probate judges who wanted to keep the juvenile jurisdiction in the probate courts.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: You are talking about before the judicial committee?

MRS. JUDD: I think that is what you were talking about.

MR. FORD: I don't know of anyone other than judges or people connected with the courts who appeared on any aspect of this before the committee either for or against a family court. Although there was correspondence, as I said, the correspondence does not indicate a preference for this being a new court.

There was one thing perhaps, Mrs. Judd, that is confusing about this, and that is that the committee has already decided it wants a 5 tier system. Now, if we want to go to a 6 tier system I would have absolutely no objection to creating a sixth court and calling it a family court or a juvenile court or, as in New York, a children's court, but immediately you can see that if you look at the state now, there is only one full time juvenile judge in the whole state of Michigan. Now, what hope is there going to be that the counties who can't even get lawyers for probate judges are going to be able to get not only a lawyer for a probate judge but in addition a lawyer or social worker for the family court?

MRS. JUDD: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ford is getting off my question.

MR. FORD: Well, that is the risk you take when you ask a rhetorical question.

MRS. JUDD: I know it. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford, see if you can return to the question, if possible.

MRS. JUDD: Well, I think he has answered my question that the testimony in favor of keeping the juvenile jurisdiction in the probate court comes entirely from probate judges.

Third, you indicated that it might be possible to set up a family court without constitutional change. I would like to ask, Mr. Chairman, of Mr. Ford if you wouldn't have to reexamine the jurisdictional provisions with respect to the circuit court?

MR. FORD: No, not at all. I assume when we are talking about a family court, when you said that there are some families that have several agencies concerned with them, we would not be amalgamating any of the agencies into the family court. We would be only amalgamating the court functions. Now, there are 3 courts that deal with family problems presently. First, you have the municipal, justice, or in Detroit, the recorder's court which deals with the situation where the father, for example, is not supporting his family and he is charged with being a disorderly person. This is a criminal proceeding. Then you have the problem with the unwed mother which is part of the function, we think, because it is part of the family problem. You have the divorce problem and all of the problems that go with it, problems of reconciliation, child care, custody and so on, which is in the circuit court. And then in the probate court you have the question of parental rights. The court has, as a matter of fact, the power to sever the rights, and it handles things like adoptions, guardianships, commitment of the kind of children that Martin was talking about, as well as the so called juvenile offender, and then there are just the plain neglected children. There had to be a place to find an order to determine their future, so that is done in the probate court. But all of these functions in the 3 courts reside there because of a statute that puts them there. Now, a divorce is not a common law remedy. It wouldn't exist in common law, and contrary to what has been indicated here, what the constitution actually does is say that the circuit court has all common law general trial jurisdiction unless modified by the legislature. So the legislature could provide, if it felt, for example, that a family court should try juveniles in the same court that hears divorce cases.

MRS. JUDD: In other words, you think that the only way that you could set up a family court without changing the constitution would be to make the probate court the family court?

MR. FORD: Yes. In Wayne county, for example, we have 1 judge who doesn't sit in the same building as the rest of the probate judges. He sits in the juvenile court full time. All of the procedures and everything that goes on in that court is entirely different than what happens in the other courthouse. Now, conceivably we could add another judge and put him out there in the juvenile court and then add to his duties item by item until you had what would be called a family court. This is probably the easiest way to do it here, and I don't know whether other counties might prefer taking the juvenile jurisdiction away from the probate court because they are too busy, but we had no such testimony.

MRS. JUDD: Thank you very much, Mr. Ford. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that one of the main problems here that hasn't been talked about very much, that I understand the tenor of this whole judicial article is, is in the direction of establishing a unified court system, and it seems to me we would have to be very careful that any arrangements we make for a family court would not become a splinter court but could be integrated with the entire system. This is one of the reasons it seems to me important that we don't attempt to set up any specific provisions in the constitution, but that we do leave a flexible framework, simply removing the obstruction, which is the constitutional provision putting it in the probate court and therefore leave it to the legislature. Mr. Ford spoke of the bar association committee on family law. I find in their 1959 report that they say:

> Family court. Our subcommittee on the family court spent practically all of the year developing a method which would provide a single integrated tribunal with jurisdiction over all major types of litigation involving the family. They have consulted with various experts in the field and have concluded that the establishment of a family court must be done by constitutional amendment.

Now, perhaps some of the lawyers have been changing their minds since that time, but that was the opinion of the committee in '59.

I would like to indicate that we are today trying to face up to problems that are different from those in 1908 when this was first established. Since that time we have seen a tremendous population explosion, a terrific increase in the problems of family life in our urban areas, and also a great development of sociology and psychiatry and the techniques of handling these problems so that we need much more technical help in handling much more serious problems. Now, we can't foresee changes in the next 50 years. All we can be sure of is that these changes are going to continue and that probably family life in our urban areas is going to become more and more serious, and this is why I agree with Mr. Everett and Mr. Higgs that it would be absolutely tragic for us to try to set up anything frozen in the constitution today. I think that the committee proposal is an excellent one for the purposes of the next 50 years.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Everett.

MR. EVERETT: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate Mrs. Judd's agreeing with me, but I guess maybe now she will disagree with me because I am inclined to think Judge Dehnke has given us a pretty good solution. All of us want to avoid this problem of letting the children's cases be tried in criminal courts. I don't think the problem is there. I can't conceive of the legislature doing it. But if there is any question, I think we ought to say so. And incidentally, as to the power of the legislature now to create family courts or domestic relations courts, the blue book which we all have under article VII, section 13 of the present constitution, one of the footnotes or annotations says:

> Public Acts of 1913, 186, creating a court of domestic relations in counties of 250,000 or over was unconstitutional in depriving probate courts of their constitutional jurisdiction over juvenile delinquents and dependents in certain cases. Attorney General versus Lacey, 180 Michigan 329.

I don't think there is any question but what the present constitutional provisions, if we retain them, will prevent the creation of this court. As many of us have indicated, we have some hesitancy as to whether it ought to be created but we don't want to close the door to it, and if Judge Dehnke's suggestion will end the discussion — and to me it would certainly be acceptable although I can only speak as an individual, not for the committee — then perhaps we can move on. But if it is not acceptable to others, of course maybe we can't too.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Dr. Nord.

MR. NORD: Mr. Chairman, I support the minority report amendment, although I do agree with Mr. Everett and Judge Dehnke that perhaps something can be done to improve that. But anyway, what we have before us at the moment is the minority report which suggests that we strike the words "except as otherwise provided by law." I think we should strike those words and then if we want to put something else in the constitution, we should do that in addition. But we can strike these words now anyway if we agree that they should be stricken.

Now, it is probably unfortunate that the issue has arisen in this roundabout way, but there is a very significant and basic issue in here which we should face. That is the question, as has been mentioned by a number of people, of whether we should have a constitutional guarantee of some sort that a child cannot be tried and punished as a criminal. I recognize that we don't have it in the constitution in very vigorous form even with the striking of these words, but it is in there anyway because the probate court is not conceived of as having criminal jurisdiction.

I think it would be better if we would settle this problem in much more detail somewhere else. Perhaps Judge Dehnke's suggestion isn't even good enough. But in any event, we should at least strike these words to make sure that a child can never be tried as a criminal. Now, I say that this is a constitutional matter and not something that should be left to law, and that is why I say we should strike the words "except as otherwise provided by law". This is a very basic right. I believe it is more basic than we have ever really conceived of, and the reason I say that is that in our system of law a child does not have the right to participate in the making of the law. He doesn't vote until he is 21 years old, and I understand there is a proposal from the declaration of rights committee to continue that. Now, assuming that that will be continued, there you have a situation in which persons who happen to be young persons below the age of 21 have no right to participate in the making of the laws and yet they can be punished as criminals. They could even, according to that, be sentenced to life imprisonment.

I recognize that, as I said before, the words before us don't completely solve that problem. They miss it by at least 50 per cent. At the present time the juvenile jurisdiction extends only up to the age of 17, and the proposal to reduce the voting age was only down to 19, and between 17 and 19 there is a gray area in which the juvenile court can take jurisdiction under present statutes. There is no question we haven't completely matched these 2 principles. There is a gap no matter how we do it under all the present proposals.

It would seem to me, although you can't fully discuss it at this point, that we ought to tackle the problem head on and solve it and reduce the voting age down to 19 and change the age to full adult powers to 19. They ought to be the same. But since that isn't before us at the present time and all that is before us is this, not to make this gap any bigger, then it seems to me we ought to adhere to the present system until we are ready to make the solution better. There is a defect, as I say, in all of the proposals we have before us or are expected to have before us. There is some defect between principle and practice as to the right of a person who is judged to be a criminal to make the law. There is a defect. All I am saying is, let's not make the defect any bigger. If we can make it smaller or eliminate it, we should, and if we cannot, we should not make it any worse.

The argument has been made that we should have flexibility. "Flexibility" is my favorite word, though we have to recognize there is a limit to that, and the limit is when we come to a constitutional or a basic right. We don't want basic rights to be left in a flexible condition. They should be left in an inflexible condition. That is the only reason we have a constitution in the first place. And if I am correct — and I believe many agree — that this is a basic right of a person, it should not be left in a flexible condition.

For these reasons I am in support of the minority report amendment, and until we get a better version, I would say let's strike those words.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Father Dade.

MR. DADE: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Ford a question.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer.

MR. DADE: And before I ask Mr. Ford the question, I would like to make a statement. The statement first is, Mr. Ford, as a minister, I certainly couldn't sit here, with experience in the juvenile court and knowing of youngsters who have been treated not as criminals but as youngsters who had made mistakes, and seeing in my memory these same youngsters now responsible citizens in the community, and not support the continuation of juvenile courts because of the sympathetic understanding, the skill therein, and I could not, being the president of the Wayne county training school board, go without supporting it because of the sympathetic consideration of those who are mentally disturbed and mentally handicapped.

Now, Mr. Ford, my dilemma is this: I would like to support the minority, but I want to support it to the end, sir, that there be a provision that youngsters shall never be treated in adversary courts. At the same time, out of a wide experience, I have to stand and support the hope of a family court. Now, how do I resolve this dilemma?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Reverend Dade, this is the dilemma that has faced the bar committee for a long time.

MR. DADE: May I interrupt with this one question. Would this dilemma be taken away if this provision were inserted that nonadults should be tried in nonadult courts?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Reverend, it isn't just the problem of adult courts; it is the problem of the kind of procedure which obtains in a court which customarily handles adversary proceedings and criminal proceedings as contrasted with the type of procedure, very informal and more human, that pertains to the entire function of the probate court. Very few of the probate court's activities are truly adversary in nature.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Father Dade.

MR. DADE: But isn't it true that the one advantage of the juvenile court is that there are no lawyers? (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: You may be referring to heaven, Father Dade. (laughter) Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: Reverend, you may be inadvertently referring to the thing that bothers the committee that is made up all of lawyers, and that is that as long as we keep the divorce practice separated from the rest of the juvenile practice, we keep the lawyers from meddling with this system. But a very, very small percentage of the cases that are handled in the juvenile court have lawyers involved in them and they are not needed over there — and I hope I am not treading on the toes of somebody who considers himself a juvenile specialist — because of the way the cases are handled, and this is very fortunate.

What we are afraid of is, for example, if we set up a family court and say that the same court that handles juvenile matters ought to handle divorce cases, then we get right back into the same sort of a procedure where we have lawyers over there arguing over property rights and which of the parents was the first to commit the sin and so on, and this is not the kind of an atmosphere that we want juvenile matters handled in.

MR. DADE: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mrs. Elliott.

MRS. DAISY ELLIOTT: Mr. Chairman and members of this committee, as a nonlawyer and a layman of this convention, I cannot believe that the intention of the judicial committee is to take away the bill of rights from the juveniles. At this point the lawyers here have thoroughly convinced me that words "except as otherwise provided by law" will do just that. We should keep the constitutional guarantee that juveniles will not be tried in adversary and adult criminal courts. If the legislature in its wisdom wants to enlarge the scope of jurisdiction of the probate court, it can do so without the words "except as otherwise provided by law."

I would urge you to support the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mrs. Koeze.

MRS. KOEZE: Mr. Chairman, I am trembling, as you know, before this microphone. Most of you know that I am the mother of 5 children and deeply concerned, and only by the grace of God did my kids never land in a court. But I am worried about the grandkids that are coming up. I am not so sure about them. However, I want you to know that I am in favor of a family court. But after listening to the testimony this afternoon, I am sure I can't solve it and I am a little bit concerned that lawyers couldn't solve this problem. I wish somebody would help me with my decision.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and Delegate Koeze, with a little fear and trembling, I will try again. I think this is the direction that we really mean to go. There has been one thought suggested that we did not consider — I think we considered in the committee every other argument that has been raised here today — and Delegate Nord raised that question, and as far as I am concerned, I think the only amendment, and I don't know that it should be here, but the only provision that I think we should consider at this time — and if Delegate Nord wants to propose it, why, I would certainly concur — is that children not be tried as adults. Now, that much I think, if he would like to incorporate that in the bill of rights, I have no quarrel with.

However, as to any other provision, I think I have examined every proposed amendment that is circulating on the floor and I feel that Delegate Judd touched upon the point involved there, that we are trying to develop a unified court structure. I think certainly the probate judges are most concerned in this matter, and I am a little disturbed because of the fact that this might be created as a division of the circuit court. If that is the wise and right thing to do, it should be done. I would like to leave it to the discretion of the legislature to do it. Now, the circuit court is an adversary court and it is also a criminal court, and I don't see any reason why a family court could not be established as a division of that court with a judge who is solely designated to preside in that division. It is a special court but it would be a division of the circuit court. He would not be a judge that would be hearing other cases.

But the minute you start talking about setting this up in a nonadversary court, that would preclude the probate court itself from handling these matters, and if you speak about handling these matters in a noncriminal court, that would preclude the possibility of bringing in the parent who may be an adult delinquent in matters of support of his family whose delinquency in that regard, being criminal, should be brought to the attention of the judge who has before him also the matter of the dependent and neglected child. In other words, I would like that judge to have the full power and authority in those areas to handle the whole aspect of the problem.

Now, this is fine in the largest cities but not necessarily fine in the smallest areas. And I think Delegate Habermehl touched upon the problem in the real small counties. Do you realize how small some of our counties are? We have 5 counties that are under 5,000. We have 13 that are between 5,000 and 10,000. That is 18 that are under 10,000 in population. We have one county in Michigan that has 2,400 people, and that county has a probate judge. The amount of juvenile work that he would handle, the amount of juveniles that are in the whole county would be very few indeed. And as Delegate Habermehl has pointed out, you don't get highly qualified people sitting as probate judges in those areas, and they are working all alone, without any assistance, without any requirement that they themselves be qualified, that they be trained or anything else. And they have to work with all of these problems all alone.

How much better it would be if we could give the legislature the flexibility necessary to accommodate the problems in those very small counties. In a community of 2,400 people I can conceive that you might have a county court or a probate court combining the jurisdiction of the circuit court commissioner and possibly the JP in such a small county.

Judge Baird said that in his court when he has a juvenile matter, he can schedule a hearing on that at a time when there is no other business coming into the court, an entirely separate proceeding without anybody else being around. It is not a problem, he says, to physically separate the hearing in that kind of a matter.

I would have no quarrel whatsoever in a right being established in the constitution that children 17 years of age and under not be tried as adults, and I don't think the legislature today or any time in the future is ever going to regress to the point where they are going to treat our children in any way except possibly in a more enlightened and advanced way than we ever have in the past.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford. Mr. Ford passes. Mr. Martin.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Chairman, this is, as is obvious from the discussion, a very important matter to a great many people all over the state of Michigan. We made a tremendous step forward back in 1908 when we created a court which had exclusive jurisdiction over children, and it is one of the reasons why we have moved forward at least in certain parts of Michigan in the development of a highly competent and well staffed court for the handling of juvenile problems.

I have been working on some of these problems for a number of years as chairman of the Michigan crime and delinquency council, and we have this primary concern with the problems of children and how they shall be handled, and we don't want to see something done here that we are going to be sorry for. We don't want to see us regress from the enormously important step that we took in 1908 which has been responsible for what we have now.

Now, one of the problems is that many of these courts are not staffed either with judges that are able to handle the work or with staff which is able to handle the work and a great deal has to be done in that regard, and the proposal of the committee to make the creation of districts possible which can be properly staffed with properly paid judges is very important. But what we are doing with this particular phrase here is to cause concern in everybody's mind all over the state of Michigan who has anything to do with the problems of child welfare, and for that reason it seems to me we have just got to move cautiously.

Mr. Staiger has mentioned the possibility of some wording that might calm some of these fears and Judge Dehnke has made some suggestions. I have thought of some wording that might serve that purpose. But it is pretty nearly impossible to work this out in the manner we are trying to work it out, and for that reason, if the committee were willing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move that this particular section or this amendment be passed for the time being to give us an opportunity to see if we can work out some language which will not leave everybody in doubt and concerned about what we are doing on this particular point.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Do you so move, Mr. Martin, or do you desire the position of the committee?

MR. MARTIN: I didn't understand.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: From your statement, Mr. Martin, the Chair was in doubt as to whether you so moved or whether you inquired of the committee.

MR. MARTIN: I inquired of the committee. I would like to be cooperating with them instead of making it difficult. Mr. Everett nods his head. I take it perhaps that means assent. Mr. Danhof?

MR. DANHOF: Well, Mr. Martin, I can only tell you that the committee worked long and hard with it. I think it simply develops down — I suppose the question is on the motion of Mr. Martin. I suppose I should confine my remarks to that.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair is not sure, Mr. Danhof, that Mr. Martin has made a motion yet.

MR. MARTIN: In order to make it clear, I will make it a motion, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Martin moves that further consideration of the pending amendment be passed temporarily.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to how many speakers the Chair has listed?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair has listed 6 speakers, Mr. Danhof, including yourself.

MR. LAWRENCE: Mr. Chairman. Mr. Chairman. Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lawrence, for what purpose does the gentleman rise?

MR. LAWRENCE: Is it in order to speak on Mr. Martin's motion?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: It is. Mr. Danhof currently has the floor.

MR. DANHOF: I will yield to Mr. Lawrence.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof yields to Mr. Lawrence on the Martin motion.

MR. LAWRENCE: I would oppose the motion for this reason: there will be an opportunity to have further consideration. We have spent considerable time on this. Let me speak to the nonlawyers in the committee. I come from a county of 172,000 which I think is a medium sized county. On its east is Wayne county.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lawrence, would you please confine your remarks to the pending motion, which is that the amendment be passed temporarily.

MR. LAWRENCE: I was about to do it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Your preface left the Chair in doubt. (laughter)

MR. LAWRENCE: And on the north is a smaller county, Livingston county. The situation in those 3 counties is entirely different, and it seems to me that the committee report as it has come out giving the legislature the right to enact statutes that will give credence to those different situations is the proper way to handle it, and therefore there is nothing to be gained by passing the matter at this time.

Truly the situation in Wayne is different than in Washtenaw and in Washtenaw it is different than in Livingston, and the thing to do, as I see it, would be to pass the committee report — that is, to vote on it, and if anything better can be found later, then we will have ample opportunity to consider it.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Barthwell, do you desire to be recognized on the Martin motion?

MR. BARTHWELL: Yes, sir, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I would like to ask the maker of the motion a question through the Chair, if I may. When he says "so that we can have opportunity to work it out," I want to know who the "we" are, because I read in the paper last night on the other article that we passed so it could be worked out that the caucus appointed a committee to work it out. Now, I would just like to know if I am a delegate to this convention or if I am just sitting here to wait until the caucus decides what is to be done in the convention. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If the gentleman cares to answer. Mr. Martin.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Chairman, I wasn't thinking of this as a political matter. I was thinking of it only as a matter for those of us who were interested in child welfare, and I would be happy to work on it with any of the people who have indicated their interest here today in this discussion.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, if I might, maybe Mr. Martin would do this — in view of the hour; in view of the fact that you have 6 speakers on the list; it is obvious we would not get to a vote for some time — if Mr. Martin would withdraw the motion, I would move that the committee arise. Perhaps with Mr. Martin, Mr. Everett, Mr. Higgs and Judge Dehnke, somebody might arrive at some language. If we could, we can have an amendment tomorrow. If not, we will go on.

MR. MARTIN: I will be happy to withdraw the motion, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Martin's motion is withdrawn. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: In that case, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves that the committee do now rise. Those in favor of the motion will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will now rise.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, President Nisbet resumed the Chair.]

PRESIDENT NISBET: The convention will please be in order. The Chair recognizes Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration an amendment to a proposal of which the secretary will give a detailed report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 94, A proposal pertaining to the probate court; has considered one amendment thereto; has come to no final resolution thereon. This completes the report of the committee of the whole.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Are there any announcements?

SECRETARY CHASE: This announcement of interest to all of the delegates: please be sure to return your photographic proofs to the studio representatives in room G before 5:00 p.m. today. If you were unable to keep your original appointment, please go in at your convenience before 5:00 today.

This announcement also of interest to all of the delegates. As most of you know, the wives of the delegates have been presented with an opportunity to become acquainted with each other and a luncheon has been arranged for Tuesday, March 13, at the Jack Tar Hotel. Would you please remind your respective spouses of this and that their reservations should be turned in rather soon. Turn them in either to Mrs. Tucker in the president's office or to Mrs. Tubbs.

There will be a meeting of the committee on style and drafting in room K at 8:00 o'clock this evening.

The committee on rules and resolutions has been scheduled to meet Friday during the noon recess.

Mr. Nord has filed a resolution for introduction.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Without objection, we will return to the order of motions and resolutions.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Nord offers Resolution 81, A resolution relative to the absence of delegates during committee of the whole.

Following is Resolution 81 as offered:

Whereas, It sometimes happens that during the course of debate in committee of the whole, a substantial number of delegates are absent from the floor and do not attend the debate, but nevertheless are later summoned to the floor to vote without having heard the reasons offered on each side in the debate; and

Whereas, Such votes are not based on the reasons set forth in the debate, and may in fact not be based on any reasons whatever; now therefore be it

Resolved, That if any delegate shall leave the floor of the convention during sitting of the committee of the whole, he shall thereafter be excluded from the floor until such time as a vote is taken on the issue then pending, except if he shall have been excused by the chairman before having left the floor.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Referred to the committee on rules and resolutions.

SECRETARY CHASE: We have the following requests for leave of absence: Mr. Nisbet asks to be excused from the session of Friday for the purpose of speaking in Grand Rapids and Muskegon on matters relative to the convention; Father Dade requests to be excused from the session of next Monday, March 4; Mr. Norris wishes to be excused from the morning session of Friday.

PRESIDENT NISBET: Without objection, the excuses are granted. Mrs. Hatcher.

MRS. HATCHER: Mr. President, I would just like to rise on a personal interest note to say that I certainly appreciate the invitation from the wives of the delegates to con con, and I wonder if the husbands are also invited to this luncheon. (laughter)

PRESIDENT NISBET: I understand this is a ladies' meeting. Judge Gadola.

MR. GADOLA: March came in like a lion. In this convention we acted accordingly. I hope that when it goes out as a lamb, that the lion and the lamb will lie down together in harmony for the good of the people of the state of Michigan. (laughter and applause)

PRESIDENT NISBET: Father Dade is recognized.

MR. DADE: I believe this is Mr. Chase's forty-third wedding anniversary. On behalf of all the men, I want to salute a good man and congratulate him and felicitate a wonderful lady. (applause)

SECRETARY CHASE: Thank you, Father Dade. It's a puzzle to me how she has put up with my idiosyncrasies for all of 43 years.

PRESIDENT NISBET: I was going to say Mr. Chase must be a good man — for 43 years. (laughter) Mr. Cudlip.

MR. CUDLIP: Mr. President, may these remarks be recorded in the journal? (laughter)

PRESIDENT NISBET: Without objection, they will be so recorded. (laughter)

The Chair recognizes Mr. McCauley.

MR. McCAULEY: Mr. President and delegates, as the famous English author, Thomas Babbington McCauley, once said, if you can keep your head amongst this confusion while others are losing theirs, you do not understand the problem. (laughter)

I move we adjourn.

PRESIDENT NISBET: The question is on adjournment. Those in favor say aye; those opposed, no.

We are adjourned until 9:30 tomorrow morning.

[Whereupon, at 4:35 o'clock p.m., the convention adjourned until 9:30 o'clock a.m. Friday, March 2, 1962.]

NINETY-FIRST DAY

Friday, March 2, 1962, 9:30 o'clock a.m.

PROCEEDINGS

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The convention will come to order.

The invocation today will be delivered by the son of one of our delegates, the son of Mr. Haskill, Mr. William E. Haskill, minister and a graduate of Bob Jones University.

MR. HASKILL: Our gracious heavenly Father, we thank Thee again today for the Lord Jesus Christ. We thank Thee for the great many blessings Thou has bestowed upon us thus far. We pray now for this convention as it comes to order and seeks to work out the problems and bring to the state a new constitution. We pray that Thou will grant to each one the wisdom and the understanding that he needs to do his part and we ask that personal interests will be laid aside as the constitution is drawn up for the benefit and welfare of all in this state. For we ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the purpose of considering matters on the general orders calendar.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The question is on the motion. All those in favor say aye; opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will convene and the delegate from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen, will preside.

[Whereupon, Mr. Van Dusen assumed the Chair to preside as chairman of the committee of the whole.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The committee will be in order. When the committee of the whole last sat, it had under consideration Committee Proposal 94, reported by the committee on judicial branch, dealing with the organization and powers of the probate courts of the state of Michigan.

For last previous action by the committee of the whole on Committee Proposal 94, see above, page 1393.

The question is on a minority report amendment thereto, offered by Messrs. Ford, Garvin, Bledsoe, Ostrow, Krolikowski and Barthwell, on which the Chair had several delegates seeking recognition.

Mr. Danhof, do you now seek recognition on the amendment?

MR. DANHOF: Not at this time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Does Mr. Lawrence seek recognition at this time? Does Mr. McAllister seek recognition at this time? The gentleman from Bad Axe, Mr. McAllister, speaking on the Ford amendment to section a of Committee Proposal 94.

MR. McALLISTER: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I just want to explain my position in this matter. The probate judges in my area are for the minority report amendment, and Judge James Lincoln of the probate court in Wayne county is for the minority report amendment. He is a long time friend of mine, and a man who has, in my opinion, extremely good judgment. I promised him I would support this minority report amendment, and that is the reason that I am voting in the manner that I am.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Martin, do you seek recognition on the amendment?

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Chairman, I had an opportunity to confer with various people who were discussing this on the floor yesterday, and also to check it with some of the people who are working on these things as citizens, and after talking also with Mr. Everett and reviewing the case which he mentioned, I am satisfied that under the language of the present constitution, but without this proviso, "except as otherwise provided by law", the legislature would have authority to establish a family court in the probate court if it so desired.

I am not sold on the idea of a family court, and I am not recommending that that be done, but they would have the authority to do that if they wished. For that reason — the one thing that we don't want to see done is to have the juvenile jurisdiction transferred out of the probate court and into the circuit court or into some other court — the language of the minority amendment seems, to me, to do what is necessary and, therefore, I want to support the minority amendment and do not want, at this time, to offer any further amendment to that amendment or otherwise.

I hope that the committee will support the minority report amendment, and I am sure that it represents the feeling of all those around the state of Michigan who have been working for many years on these child welfare problems, including the views of all the probate judges.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Does the lady from Detroit, Miss McGowan, seek recognition?

MISS McGOWAN: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I rise to support the committee report and to ask you to support the committee report, and to vote against the minority report amendment.

The committee, in recommending this provision, did so because it recognized the need of our children with problems and desired to have those problems handled in a separate court in a nonadversary area. The committee left with the legislature the power to change the jurisdiction in the case of delinquent and dependent juveniles. In our committee deliberations we most assuredly gave much thought to our children and grandchildren who may become delinquent and/or dependent juveniles. Should the legislature decide to create a domestic relations or a family court, this in no way changes our belief that the problems of our delinquent and dependent juveniles should be taken care of in a court of a nonadversary type.

We are all well aware of the fact that delinquent childen need special attention in a court of a nonadversary area. The committee report does not change this thought in any manner. In Detroit, presently, we have many courts and agencies handling the problems pertaining to children. We have the recorder's court, the circuit court, the friend of the court, juvenile court, and a division in the prosecutor's office. The committee proposal simply gives the legislature the power to determine what court will handle family problems, including the problems of delinquent or dependent children.

We would appreciate your support of the committee report. We ask you to be courageous and forward looking and vote yes on the acceptance of the committee report.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, in discussing this particular matter, the committee was well aware of the deep feelings of many people, also the emotional aspects that would arise. But, let me state that the majority deliberated at great length, and reached the conclusion that the legislature would not capriciously or arbitrarily abuse this particular section.

Yesterday, Dr. Nord mentioned that there is a question as to what constitutes a juvenile and, as he well knows, basically this is a person under 21 years of age. Yet, in a case that has been most described here — and that is the juvenile delinquent or the youthful offender of the criminal laws — they are tried as adults in this state at the age of 17. There has never been any doubt but what the legislature has had the authority to define and to set the limits as to what constitutes a juvenile. If it could be 17, it could be 16, and if it could be 16, it could be 15, and if it could be 15, it could be 14.

I submit that if you wish to provide for an adequate program of juvenile rehabilitation, that you pay serious attention to the words of the delegate from Alpena, Mr. Habermehl, for this provision is not aimed solely at the large counties which want to create either a domestic relations court or even a separate family court, but it was our considered opinion that in the sparsely populated areas this would allow for a separate juvenile court, if you want to call it that, and allow the combination of counties to provide for this type of a program. As it now stands, in many of our counties it is impossible to raise the money to provide an adequate staff of facilities.

Lest everybody get the impression that all of the probate judges favor this, the Honorable Gerald Meehan, the probate judge of Oceana county, appeared before our committee, and his exact words were, "The Constitutional Convention of 1908 made a mistake when they froze in this particular provision." This, my friends, is a judge from a county of only about 16,000 or 18,000 people, and he advised and recommended, as strongly as he could, that this particular section be made more flexible and that it be loosened up, so to speak.

Judge Mitchell, appearing before the committee and speaking on behalf of the probate judges association, made this statement:

> Section 13 also provides that the probate court shall have original jurisdiction in all cases of juvenile delinquents and dependents. This provision should be contained in any new constitution. Possibly it should be expanded to provide for a court having jurisdiction over various personal family problems, such as divorce, commitment of the mentally ill and other similar problems.

All of you may have received information, or at least I did — and this is from another group, the national association of social workers — that they entertained and passed, in the meeting of the southwestern chapter of that organization, a recommendation that we remove the present constitutional barriers and leave the way open for establishing courts having original jurisdiction over all matters pertaining to children and families.

Let's look at exactly what the committee did. It did not strip the probate court; it did not emasculate the provision. It granted the constitutional jurisdiction to the probate court. It isn't anything that the legislature has to give. It is something that the probate court has. If you are willing to say that you believe that the legislature will capriciously and without reason and without deliberate judgment just tear this away, then I don't think that you are facing your responsibility. In the first place, the legislature probably will not move on the matter unless there develops particular agitation for a different type of court in some area. They usually have enough to do over there without going around and tearing away the jurisdiction from the probate courts. But visualize, if you will, the hue and cry that would be raised if they did try to remove this capriciously or without reason or without providing a reasonable and adequate substitute.

I feel that there has been a considerable amount of emotion going into this particular article. The question is solely this: are you going to freeze it in so that from now on, for all time this constitution is in, there it is, inflexible and immobile, or do you believe that it should be granted, like we grant the general jursdiction to the circuit court? If you do, then support the particular committee proposal. We felt that this would leave the way open to leave it in the probate court, if that proves the wisest choice, but if there is some other means which is better — and I have had considerable mail, as Mrs. Judd has had, and this comes not from groups but from individuals, most of it. I am not sure that they have the vaguest concept of what a family court might or might not be. Our committee put in 3, 4 months of study, and this is something that is going to take more study, study by the legislature, study by the bar association, study by the social workers in the family service bureaus, and so on, to ascertain if a court is desirable. Then if it is, what type of court to have. I submit, if you freeze it in, you are making it inflexible.

To a statement that I made last night, that we would try to work up some other language, I endeavored, other members of the committee tried, members of the convention gave us suggestions, and by the time you try to work it all around, you come up with such a "provided however" section, that you just can't do it. The committee report is clear.

I have no fear, after all these years that the legislature knows what has happened in the probate court, that there will be any danger derived therefrom. I would strongly urge that you support the committee, and that, above all, we get on and take a vote on this particular matter. I understand there are another 4 or 5 amendments pending on the secretary's desk. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The lady from Highland Park, Miss Donnelly.

MISS DONNELLY: I rise to support the minority report amendment for various reasons. The one that has impressed me the most is the fact that the individuals who testified or contacted us, who were most concerned with the actual treatment, care and consideration of the delinquents were Judges James Lincoln and Mary Coleman. I think nobody can argue the fact that James Lincoln handles more than any other judge in the state. I would say the most experienced judge in this field feels that this is very vital. If there is an expert that says it is important to keep it in the probate court, I would say that there is probably the most experienced expert we have had. I think his predecessors and those that I have talked to are in accord.

We are, I think, putting a lot of emphasis on the delinquent minors and ignoring the fact that there are other minors too that must be taken care of. Those are the neglected, the abandoned, the abused children. They, themselves, are not criminals or have not gone against the law in any way, but they have just been misled, mistreated. Someone must take care of them, too. I submit that there is one court that has been doing the job, and it is the probate court. It is not an adversary situation.

As an "old maid", with no children and no hopes for grandchildren, I am still not disinterested in child welfare. As a psyche major who, theoretically, should have been most concerned with this in my undergraduate days, I must agree that they have reached, in my opinion, the most intelligent analysis of the proper way to treat children whom we are trying to help for the future, where our strength will lie.

The advocates of a family court seem to be enthralled with the idea of taking the whole family and whatever kind of a mess it has and putting it together. The fact that the husband beats the wife or the wife beats the husband is not the issue, in a sense, of how are you going to take care of the children, primarily. This is a criminal action, and their conduct in that area should not be brought into what we are going to do with the children who are involved. The fact that the circuit court, through the friend of the court, is also involved in this in divorce proceedings, is not primarily the purpose. Certainly, in Wayne county, from the experiences I have had on these instances where we have had trouble with the children, we very readily had Judge Lincoln handle it completely and most effectively.

The argument that the large counties want this, that I heard yesterday, hours ago, is not true, obviously. The counties that have the problem of delinquency, the really serious problem of delinquency, want the probate court to handle it.

The issue about the fact that outstate, in small areas, there isn't time, does not seem to be adequate to my mind, because if we do combine these judges to handle the outstate probate problem, there will be more time for the state employed social worker, or whatever name they give them, to handle it.

The issue is, primarily, do we wish children to be in an adversary position or don't we. What direction do we want to go? In 1908, they went one way. I believe this is the proper way, and I think the only way to keep it proper is to accept this "as otherwise provided by law".

Mr. Danhof's issue about trust the legislature amuses me somewhat, because we couldn't trust the legislature on the court administrator. They created the court administrator, but we couldn't trust them not to take it away. In this instance, the constitution created the juvenile independence in the probate, and now we are going to say we can trust the legislature to not take it away. I think, somewhere along the line, we are going to have to think consistently and make up our minds in which direction we are going. I submit, this is not the time to trust the legislature. If we couldn't trust it on the court administrator which it created, then we surely cannot trust it in this area which was created by the constitution. I urge your support for the minority report amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Baginski.

MR. BAGINSKI: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, yesterday when I rose to talk to you, I mentioned the fact that juveniles need people who are trained, who are career people, who know their responsibilities in the handling of juveniles. This morning's Free Press, on the second page, tells us about a juvenile who was lost in jail for 11 months. The story here is, this boy, 15, was picked up by the juvenile authorities and placed in the Wayne county youth home, where he was to be examined for possible commitment to an institution. The prosecutor's office came in and, because of the crime that he was accused of, insisted that a waiver be granted, and the boy was turned over to the recorder's court. At recorder's court, they decided that he was well enough mentally to aid counsel in defense, and they proceeded to try him with a sanity commission and, possibly, send him to the Ionia state hospital. In the meantime, his parents came to our court, to the civil part of probate court, filed a petition to have him committed, and our judge committed him to the Ypsilanti state hospital or the Northville state hospital. But, when we mean commitment, we don't mean admission. He was placed on the waiting list. In the meantime, though, he was in jail under the jurisdiction of recorder's court. When the judge and the prosecutor heard that he was committed to an institution for the mentally ill by probate, they immediately dropped their proceedings, but they failed to return Johnny Smith back to the Wayne county youth home, and he is in jail and he has been there for 11 months.

You see what happens when people who are inexperienced in this sort of work, in an adversary court like the criminal court, recorder's court. They are used to handling criminals and things of that sort, and they just let Johnny lay right there in the jail, promptly forgot about him instead of sending him back to the jurisdiction of Judge Lincoln.

These are the things that we are fighting for. Leave this matter in probate, in the juvenile court, under the jurisdiction of people who are trained to handle this sort of a case.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Ford.

MR. FORD: I wasn't going to say any more on this until Bob brought in this recommendation from the southwestern Michigan chapter of the national association of social workers. I think that this is a quick way to demonstrate how much confusion is injected by people who are talking about a family court. In the first place, Mr. Higgs is talking about a family court, and he is talking about something entirely different than Miss McGowan is talking about, because he referred to New York, and in New York they call it a children's court, and in New York, recognizing that you have almost 8 million people in one city, they have a situation whereby they have the manpower and the need and everything else that goes with it, to have a special juvenile court. We call it a juvenile court, they are now going to call it a children's court. They are not going to handle divorce proceedings or criminal proceedings in that children's court. There is talk here about the family court in the nature of a domestic relations court, and that seems to be the concept that this social workers group has. Reading from the letter that Bob alluded to:

> In our work, we become acutely aware of the needs for more adequate judicial service for children of the families in Michigan. We believe that services similar to those now provided in juvenile court in a few counties should be made available throughout the state.

Why is it only provided in a few counties? Is it there because the people in the rest of the counties are insensitive to the needs of children? Not at all.

The inconsistency of this section recommended by the committee is almost inconceivable. If you will look at the majority recommendation for the reason for adopting the first part of section a, you will find that it says:

> We found in many counties of the state that the work load of a probate judge was small and required but a portion of his time.

Further on, it says:

> We have therefore authorized the legislature, and required the legislature on recommendation of the supreme court, either to unite counties into probate districts, somewhat comparable to our circuit courts, or combine the office of probate judge with any judicial office inferior thereto in any county with less than 25,000 population. We believe either alternative will tend toward a better administration of the work of such courts and at the same time reduce the expense of operation.

What they are saying is that the court wherein this function now resides is not busy enough so we are going to start combining them or we are going to give them more duties to perform. They are going to take from the court that is already not busy enough to sustain itself under its present form, a principal, basic, fundamental function of that court, the juvenile function, and create still another court to handle it.

If we start out and look at this from a practical point of view, there is one full time juvenile judge in the state today. The probate court judges are part time juvenile judges. In Wayne county, we have the only judge that devotes his time exclusively to juvenile affairs. Why? Because it is the only county that has the volume and also the facilities to handle this on a full time basis. Surely there are other counties that need it fully as well as Wayne county, but they haven't found it possible to add the extra judge, even though, in adding him, they wouldn't have to justify his existence solely on the basis of this single function. They go on to say in their letter, "Courts in a few counties should be made available throughout the state," and that "they should not be limited to juvenile delinquents and dependents."

This is the key to where we lawyers, some of us, fall away from these people. "Children and families involved in divorce proceedings are surely entitled to as much consideration." Now, you get to the crux of it. Some of these people who are talking about a family court or a domestic relations court are not talking about a juvenile court that will specialize in the problems of children or dependent children, they are talking about lumping all of the human problems together on the theory that if mother and dad are fighting in a broken home, maybe they ought to lump the children into the whole proceeding. All of you lawyers know that to the extent that it is possible to do so, circuit court keeps the children out of the courtrooms, and keeps them away from the divorce proceedings. All of you know that divorce proceedings become vicious and antagonistic over affairs that are very difficult, if not impossible, for the children, who are the real victims of divorce in this state, to understand.

Let's take a look at Wayne county, for example, if we try to lump the divorce proceedings together with the juvenile proceedings. We now handle our juvenile problem with 1 full time judge. We have 18 circuit judges, and, conservatively, ¼ of their time on the bench is occupied in the hearings of motions and in the hearing of divorce matters. One out of every 3 cases started last year down there that went finally through to conclusion was a divorce case. If you are talking about combining these functions, do you realize what you are doing in Wayne county? You are going to have to take 6 of the 18 judges off of the bench and put them over here in this family court and have them trying divorce cases. Where do we gain anything? All that we gain is that we bring the children into the proceedings that thus far we have tried our very best to keep them out of.

The problems involved in trying to straighten out a child at the one level, on an informal basis, are entirely different than trying to settle the fight between the 2 parents of the child at another level. It is just as bad, in the opinion of some of us, to lump the children's affairs together with this antagonistic proceeding, as it is to try them in the criminal court and have the kind of things happen that Marty talked about.

When you talk about a domestic relations court, a childrens' court, a juvenile court, or a family court, you are talking about 4 different definable things. They are not all the same. They are not interchangeable. They are specialized functions and, in some states, they have specialized meanings because of the experience and the pattern of those states. Remember that Michigan is one of the forerunners and front runners in the concept of, by constitution, guaranteeing that children would not be lumped together in the adversary or trial court. This is why the other states have gone to these specialized courts and these specialized names, and this is why it hasn't been necessary in Michigan to seek this method in the past, even though we are out in front of the rest of them, even though other states look to us. Because 52 years ago our constitution guaranteed that you wouldn't have to get yourselves into the position that New York is in, that California was in before it went to its domestic relations court.

Just one final word. To paraphrase, with no disrespect, a very fine little saying, I submit that a family that litigates together, hates together.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will advise that there are currently 5 delegates seeking recognition. The Chair has been extremely liberal in construing the subject under debate. There are 7 pending amendments to section a, in addition to the one currently under discussion. The committee has currently devoted over 2½ hours to the subject of the present amendment. The secretary will read the pending amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The pending amendment:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: I will ask the remaining speakers to confine themselves, as closely as possible, to that subject. The Chair will recognize Mr. Plank.

MR. PLANK: Mr. Chairman, I thought I was out of order because it didn't seem like the previous speakers were on this amendment at all.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair concurs with Mr. Plank.

MR. PLANK: I am very happy to find out I am with the group, or at least some of them. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question, if I may.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If Mr. Danhof cares to answer it.

MR. PLANK: I am wondering, if this language we are discussing is left in, why we have the rest of the verbiage there, Mr. Chairman. If you are going to leave it up to the legislature in the future, why don't you leave it up to them now?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: What are you talking about, Mr. Plank? I can't quite follow your thought.

MR. PLANK: Well, you say, as "prescribed by law", and my interpretation of that is anything the legislature would like to change, they can. Why don't you leave it up to them in the beginning, then?

MR. DANHOF: Because, Mr. Plank, the committee wanted to emphasize that we were granting to the probate court, where this jurisdiction now resides and where, I will agree, there has been a development along the lines of picking out and having juvenile counseling — and so, we granted it to them initially. There it will repose and there it will stay until and unless the legislature takes it away. There is quite a bit of difference between the legislature having to give it to them and granting it to them, and making them take it away. We think it not only serves to emphasize that, as we have pointed out in our report; it should not be taken away from the probate court unless there is some adequate remedy and adequate facility provided which will be substituted in the place of the probate court. Therefore, we granted it to them in the constitution, so there is nothing the legislature has to do. It is with the probate court and it will stay there.

This is quite something else than anything other that the probate court has. All of the other jurisdiction of the probate court is what the legislature has given, not what has been granted by the constitution. This is a constitutional grant and I think you will agree that if you are somewhat prone to remove things, the spotlight is on you if you are going to take something away, unless you have provided a good, adequate remedy to take its place.

MR. PLANK: Mr. Chairman and Mr. Danhof, you give them the power to take it away. You are saying that the spotlight will not be on them now if they took it away as it presently stands in the constitution, in the 1908 constitution?

MR. DANHOF: Well, in the 1908 constitution, there was this, and they have defined it, and there is where they have left it.

MR. PLANK: That is right, except they don't have the power to take it away and here you are giving them the power.

MR. DANHOF: We agree, but we have granted it to them and they have got to take the thing away, Mr. Plank. It is not a question that they have to do anything further to give it to probate court. I submit that it will not be removed; they are not going to take it away from the probate court of Wayne county. But if the legislature in the future is going to have to deal with these problems, or somebody is, if there is to be any other type of a facility made available — I don't particularly care what it is called but if there is going to be allowance for any type of study or any type of research or any other type of a facility — we have come a long way since 1908, and we should make provision that as we go forward in the years to come, there can be arrangements for the study and perhaps for the investigation of other types of facilities, maybe not domestic relations, maybe purely juvenile. Maybe they should be separated from the probate court, from the other proceedings in the probate court, from the mentally ill, from the commitments, from the processing of estates. This state is going to grow. We are going to get more counties that are going to have large centers of population, not less, and this is why we decided on this particular wording.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Plank.

MR. PLANK: I still don't see why, if you are going to leave it up to the legislature, why don't you just leave it entirely up to them and don't put the other verbiage in there. I think you are not being consistent, and I certainly would urge the delegates here to make the constitution consistent with their language in trying to straighten this out. I am going to say that I support the minority report amendment here.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, when Delegate Ford was speaking with regard to this language, he stated that Michigan is a front runner in having this particular provision that his amendment seeks to strike, and that other states look to us. And he said, "Look at the position New York is in because they don't have it. They have all these special courts." I would like to say that this is not true. Delegate Ford, apparently, doesn't know what position New York is in or he would not have spoken thus. He stated that what I was speaking about — and he said that Mr. Higgs, in speaking of a family court in New York, is talking about a children's court. If Delegate Ford was listening closely yesterday or listening closely in the committee hearing, he would have heard that in New York last November, they adopted a new judicial article. The children's court jurisdiction, together with their domestic relations court, which they also had, and parts of the jurisdiction of the surrogate court and other courts were transferred to a family court. That is the situation that New York is in.

When Delegate Baginski spoke about the 15 year old in this regard, I just don't see what this language has to do with that. Delegate Baginski skipped over it real fast, but if you were listening closely, you would have noticed that the 15 year old was waived over to the circuit court. There is only 1 court that has the power to do that, and that is the probate court, and the very same experts in that particular case apparently goofed, because what they did is, they waived him over to circuit court and then they tried to get him back. That was where the problem lay there.

When Ray Plank spoke on this and urged the support of striking this because he wants to be consistent, that won't do it. We are, I think, very frank to say that we did consider doing what Delegate Plank proposed, that is, taking out the section altogether, and I think Chairman Danhof has partially answered that. At least, we considered that, but we decided that it would be better to make the positive statement for emphasis as to where it lay, so that no one would be confused as to what we were doing, by adding the language "except as otherwise provided by law". But we were also giving recognition to the probate court. Some of the delegates here, I think, feel that there may be some danger in abolishing the probate court; that by including this language, it might somehow be possible to abolish the probate court. I want to sincerely urge to you that we have no such intention. When we write the probate court into the constitution, it is there. It won't be abolished. It can't be abolished any more than the circuit court. If you strike that phrase, you will place the probate court in a higher position, actually, than the circuit court.

I would like to conclude — and maybe this is a good point for it — I don't take the credit for writing this, but Delegate King wrote this yesterday afternoon, and I think it is a very fine piece of verse. He entitles it, Ode to Probate:

Blessed be the house of our con con.
We are the friend of the recent born
But across the road in that hall of sin
Are seated men of caprice and whim,
Not to be trusted, those mean lawmakers.
Who would incarcerate juvenile lawbreakers.
Under the banner of probate, so pure,
We shall go forward, their jurisdiction to secure.
Lobbied by emotion for our children, they endeavor,
Probate judges are constitutionalized forever.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mrs. Cushman.

MRS. CUSHMAN: I rise to support the majority report. Once again, I think, we have got to realize that we are writing a constitution, not for today or next year, but a constitution for 50 or 100 years. No one can deny that we have changed tremendously in the last 50 years. We must realize that conditions may equally change in the future. We have got to keep our constitution flexible to meet possible changes.

We are not now advocating putting children in an adversary situation, nor do we ever advocate such a thing. We are not making any real change in the jurisdiction of the probate court. All we are doing here is making it possible, if at some time in the future we develop a new concept of court arrangement — and we have done this in the past many times — if we develop such a concept, it would be possible to implement it. Therefore, I urge you to keep the constitution flexible. Support the majority report. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mrs. Judd.

MRS. JUDD: Mrs. Cushman has made the point I wanted to make. It seems to me Delegate Ford has been raising up a ghost here that I think we should lay. He has been trying to pin upon the proponents of the majority report the intention of setting up a specific type of new court to handle family affairs. This is definitely not the case. It is just exactly because we do not yet know what kind of court or kind of method of handling these affairs should be set up, and it is just exactly because counties differ so in their needs for handling these matters that all the committee proposes is to remove the obstructions to this kind of future reform. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Stevens.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I rise to support the committee proposal and oppose the amendment for the following reasons: 1, I believe the discussion here has been, for the most part, purely academic; 2, the principal purpose seems to be to protect the self interest of certain probate courts in counties of larger population; and 3, it seems to me that the proponents of the amendment have no sympathy and no familiarity with the counties of low population. It seems, as pointed out by Delegate Habermehl, that we do have a need for some kind of a combination of courts which will provide, among other things, a satisfactory place for the care of juveniles in these sparsely settled counties. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the minority amendment offered by Mr. Ford on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Habermehl.

MR. HABERMEHL: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. Quoting from the same news story:

> Johnny Smith is 15 years old. For the last 11 months he has been in the Wayne county jail a lost boy. His incredible story came to light Thursday, to the shock, among others, of juvenile court authorities.
> Johnny was taken before Juvenile Court Judge James A. Lincoln, who waived jurisdiction over the then 14 year old boy. The state supreme court — this horrible adversary court — > ruled, 2 months after Johnny Smith's arrest, the juvenile authorities could not waive jurisdiction on 14 year old offenders. It was too late for Johnny.

Further, this horrible adversary court, the recorders court, dismissed charges against Johnny in June of 1961. Since that time he has been under the jurisdiction of this same expert, Judge James Lincoln. Unfortunately, under Judge Lincoln's jurisdiction, he somehow or other became lost and, since June, since the recorder's court waived the jurisdiction, he has remained lost. It seems to me that isn't too good a recommendation for the expert that circularized all the members of this delegation.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Martin.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Chairman, I think almost everything has been said on the subject that can be said, and I just want to wind it up, if I can, by saying that what we want here — and not talking about people in Wayne county, but people over the state who are interested in these problems — is to have the probate court strengthened throughout the state to do the job of juvenile supervision and handling which it is supposed to do in these serious problem cases. We want that court properly staffed. We want it set up by districts, wherever that is necessary. We want the judges properly paid, and we don't want to have the legislature tempted to do something with this juvenile jurisdiction which it can't do now. If that happens and we get back into these adversary proceedings, we will have committed a serious mistake. I hope that the minority report amendment will be supported.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the minority amendment offered by Messrs. Ford, Garvin, Bledsoe, Ostrow, Krolikowski and Barthwell:

Division is requested. Is the demand supported? It is supported. Those in favor of the amendment will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment, the yeas are 62, the nays are 57.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is adopted. The secretary will read the next amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Leppien offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 7, after "may" by striking out "combine 1 or more counties into probate districts, or"; so the language will then read, "The legislature may combine the office of probate judge with any judicial office inferior thereto in any county with less than 25,000 population with supplemental. . . ."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Leppien. Mr. Leppien, do you desire recognition?

MR. LEPPIEN: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, very humbly, I want to point out first that the county from whence I am a representative of the senatorial district to this convention was the first county in the state of Michigan to have a probation officer. As a result of that, due to the work of Delegate Martin and the association that he heads in this state, we had a 3 year program of probation.

We have heard a great deal about combining courts for the purpose of giving better service to children. I wish to respectfully point out to the delegates present that the combining of the probate courts in counties will do just the reverse. If we will stop to think, first, that in order to strengthen the work for our juveniles on any level, it is necessary to pinpoint the program so that public officials and others involved will make it their business to see that we come up with a program that does actually strengthen the program, rather than reduce it or diffuse it. I think that is exactly what the combining of counties for the districting of probate judges' jurisdiction accomplishes.

There are 3 phases that are very vital, in my book, why this should be eliminated. The first of these is that the person who finds himself in the north country on vacation — and it has been well pointed out in this convention many times in other discussions — that were we to take the population of the state of Michigan for census purposes in a given summer month, instead of when it is taken, the results, of course, would be far different. Thus we find in the north country many people who, because of reasons unknown to us, could become mentally deranged and find themselves in an area where we have a districting — if this proposal is adopted by this convention and then put into the constitution — and the mentally deranged person would have a real, real rough time attempting to get and secure for himself, if he were able, somebody to file the necessary petition for the determination of the alleged mental derangement, and as a result of that it seems to me that we in no way can afford to do that. The necessity of keeping a probate judge on call at all times is a very, very important part of our entire governmental structure, both for the adult and for the child.

The second thing that I want to bring to your attention is the fact that if we proceed to adopt the committee proposal, we would then have the question of the young minor coming home from service, wanting to be married for obvious reasons, or even just reasons and, necessarily, they need to have a waiver of the waiting period, or the determination of whether this male or female child should be granted the right to be married.

I will grant you that all attorneys do have, and will continue to have, when they are working in circuit court, some relief signed today, and they find the circuit judge over in county C instead of county A, where this is taking place, that they can secure some man — constable, process server, deputy sheriff or what have you — to take that paper over and secure the signature of the judge, wherever he may be in his district on the circuit level. But, I respectfully submit to you that this cannot be done in the case of the minor who wishes to be married. They have got to find a way. The unfortunate young man and young woman in this condition or position find themselves confronted with the fact that there is no one available on the county level, where they reside, and that is the only place of jurisdiction for them to go to obtain relief from their problem.

The third thing that I want to point out is — and I think this is very, very important to our election processes — other clerks of counties in this convention can testify as to the importance of the county election commission, whose duty has to do with the problem of determining the number of ballots, and all of the other things in the makeup and the process of an election, in the conducting of it, and the probate judge, by statute, has been made a member and chairman of that commission, a nonpartisan member, if you please, in order to lend assurance that the purity of the election will be guarded at all times. I am sure that we all agree that this should continue with at least one member of this commission being nonpartisan. I submit that this is the only person under our judicial system that can do just that job.

In closing, let me say I appreciate that the attorneys are attempting, through this suggested proposal of districting probate judges, and wish to accomplish the fact that we have better justice by having attorneys preside at all probate courts. But, I submit, too, that in the absence of qualified attorneys in all of the counties, we do have very good lay probate judges.

I respectfully solicit and seek the support of the delegation in striking from Committee Proposal 94 the suggested words "combine 1 or more counties into probate districts". Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lundgren.

MR. LUNDGREN: Mr. Chairman, I don't know whether this question goes to Bill. I would support your amendment if you had gone a little further. I think we are going to have an amendment on the floor in a few minutes that does.

One question that still bothers me, as a lay person here, is the question which I raised yesterday morning on the floor, and I wish the judicial committee could give us an answer because I think this is where it belongs, rather than over in the legislature. I would like them to spell out just where and what type of court they mean they will join the probate court with. That, I think, we should have on the record here, and I would like to have it answered by the judicial committee.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Lundgren, might the Chair ask that you defer that question until we get an amendment which deals precisely with that point?

MR. LUNDGREN: All right, I shall defer.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Radka.

MR. RADKA: I appreciate Delegate Leppien's amendment, and I reluctantly support it. I support it only with reluctance because I, too, feel it doesn't go far enough. The reason I feel this way, if you will look on your amendment sheet, I think that the entire section that has been added should be stricken. I speak to the amendment alone, as offered by Mr. Leppien.

I come from an area that we are aiming at with this combination probate court or district probate court plan. I come from an area where the heaviest county population is somewhat over 14,000, and we get down to counties that have populations of around 4,000. So this particular provision that you are asking be placed in this constitution is actually aimed at the area that I represent. Our probate courts, and our particular counties, are looked at as local institutions. I don't know where the proponents of this particular article have received the urge or the impetus to want to combine probate courts. They certainly have not received it from the people of the low population counties in northern Michigan and the upper peninsula.

I now practice law in a circuit. There are 3 counties in our circuit, Alpena, Montmorency and Presque Isle. Our county is not the lowest population county. The heaviest population county is Alpena. The circuit judge, generally, is elected from the heavy population county. The judge rides the circuit. We have 4 terms a year, but we often feel that the judge, living in Alpena, spending most of his time there, gives a distinct advantage to the attorneys and the people in Alpena county. I am a little bit concerned about what will happen when we create district probate courts. I would say that the probate judge will undoubtedly be elected in the county that has the greatest population, and I am a little bit concerned that the people in the low population counties are not going to really have their own local probate judge.

There is a difference between a probate court and a circuit court. Up in our area, this probate judge is not a jurist who sits behind locked doors so many hours a day, that you have to contact by appointment 3 or 4 days or weeks ahead of time. He is a servant of the people and the people in our area regard him this way and they use him or her, as the situation may be. I would venture to say that if any of you people would come up into our area and go into a probate judge's office and sit there for one day, you would never again ever consider the thought of abolishing a county probate judge in any county in this state. When you are talking combination of courts under this provision, if it were put into a constitution, the people in my area are not going to see "combining probate courts", they are going to read this thing as a provision that will allow the abolishment of somebody's probate court. And I submit to you that the people in these low population counties don't want this.

And another thing, I don't particularly know where the proponents of this particular idea ever got the idea, other than from people who are not aware of our situation up there. You will recall I asked 2 questions of Mr. Higgs. Judge Baird, from Otsego county, expressed his opinion but it was only his personal opinion. The committee received no testimony from individuals in the northern Michigan area. All they received was testimony from the president of the association, and Mr. Everett advised me that his county has a population, the president of the association's county, of some 38,000, so it didn't affect him.

I would say to you that we people in northern Michigan, in the low population counties, want our own local county probate court. We have no complaints. The people want the courts. They are willing to pay the little it may cost, and we don't feel that you should give the power — if you go all along with this particular provision — to the Supreme Court of Michigan to abolish some of our local institutions that mean so much to us, such as our probate courts.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Judge Leibrand.

MR. LEIBRAND: Mr. Chairman and delegates, I was a member of the judicial committee, and I voted for this particular phrase that Delegate Leppien's amendment seeks to strike out. I voted for it because I was under the impression that the smaller counties would want it. We heard some complaint there that the burden of maintaining a full time judge, the cost of maintaining a full time judge in the smaller counties, bore pretty heavily upon them and that, as a result, some of these counties or most of these smaller counties had probate judges that were not full time judges. They were, perhaps, farmers, real estate men, school teachers and that sort of thing, and my vote was impelled by the fact that it would enable a district to have a full time judge and probably a judge with a legal background. But that vote came, as I say, because I thought I was doing a favor for the smaller counties. I would like to hear on this floor from delegates representing smaller counties — we have already heard from Mr. Radka — if they want their own probate judges, I am all in favor of them having them. I would like to hear from the delegates from the smaller counties.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Tubbs.

MR. TUBBS: Mr. Chairman, I hope I can be heard. My voice is not in good trim, as you see and hear. The suggestion for districting of probate courts, which is sought to be stricken out by this Leppien amendment, came from many sources. For about 10 years, I have been a member of the probate and trust law section of the state bar, a section composed of 1,000 lawyers and probate judges from every corner of the state. A couple of years ago, I was chairman of that section, and I was asked to appoint a committee to study this subject and make recommendations for possible changes. At that time, the constitutional convention had not been determined upon, but while the committee was in the midst of this deliberation, we became a constitutional convention committee, rather than a legislative committee.

I am a little familiar with some of the smaller counties, though not all of them. I have talked to probate judges from many of the smaller counties. I have talked to lawyers from many of the smaller counties, and I don't believe I can get emotional on this subject.

We are trying to make the best use of judicial manpower and set up courts that will be of service to the people. I have one particular county in mind, at this moment, where the probate judge occupies an office in the courthouse. The office says "so and so, attorney at law". Down in the left corner it says "probate judge". The county is paying the overhead for that man to practice law, and he told me that the probate court work some weeks took more time, but usually didn't occupy more than an hour or 2 a week. Then there is that famous county up in the far end where there are 2,300 people, and under the present statute they have to pay $5,000 to a probate judge, so that is about $2 per capita, and if he works an hour a week, I would be very much surprised; that is, if he works more than that.

We are simply attempting to use manpower in the best way possible. Ever since the founding of this state, we have had a circuit court in every county, but we have not had a circuit judge in every county. Much of the work of probate is administrative in nature. It can be handled by the registrar of probate, and is, in most counties, at the present time. The judge has to be there about 1 day a week to sign orders and things and conduct any hearings that are necessary.

I do not believe we are going to destroy any offices in this state that are essential to the conduct of court business in this state. I urge the rejection of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Stamm.

MR. STAMM: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am rather reluctant to stand here and argue with the lawyers, but, again, I do think that I am as well qualified to be a judge of the operation of the probate court as 90 per cent of the attorneys in this convention, because I neighbor to the probate court in my everyday occupation, and I see the many, many things that go through the probate court.

I think, sometimes, the name court is a misnomer and we put too much emphasis on the fact that the person who is in charge of that court must be a professionally trained attorney, because so many things that go through that court require more someone with understanding and compassion and the ability to counsel in the matter of human relationships than to interpret the technicalities of the statutes.

As Mr. Leppien has indicated, many of us depend on the probate court in the matter of committees that are in operation; in emergency situations within the county. I was surprised to hear counsellor from Grand Rapids indicate that most of the work was done by the registrar in the probate court. It seems to me that it backs up my argument that we should consider this whole matter of the probate court and possibly give it another name, take the word "court" out of it, so it would be a little bit closer to the people. I was raised on the idea that the probate court was actually the peoples court. It was a place where families could go with problems in relation to a juvenile who was running into difficulty either with the law or with school administration. Many of these things are emergency problems. You can't go in and expect a clerk typist sitting in the court to make the final determination as to what should happen to the child, whether the child should be taken into the custody of a juvenile officer or possibly placed in a juvenile home.

As Mr. Leppien indicated to you, there are emergency situations that arise every day in many of these areas that require the counsel and the wise guidance of the gentleman who occupies the office of the probate court, and these emergencies cannot wait until some circuit riding attorney manages to hit the county seat and take the matter under advisement. Many of these things have to be decided now and immediately, and I do think that there definitely is a need to continue this type of service within the county.

Possibly, there is a matter of expense, but I have known of cases where the state subsidizes circuit courts in these areas, because of the matter that there is a need for the court, and it is part of the state branch of the judiciary so the state provides the funds to subsidize these matters.

I have seen cases where the children have been neglected, and I don't know what would happen to these youngsters if it wasn't for the matter that the court could issue an order that the children be taken and a special guardian be appointed immediately or the children placed in some home until such time as the court may be able to conduct a hearing.

I would like to encourage you, if you do feel that the people in these areas of our state that you are considering lumping all together because of the fact that they are not harboring as many residents as some of our other counties in the southern section of the state, should be entitled to this court, I think you should support Mr. Leppien's amendment. It seems to me it has merit. Of course, I sympathize with the attorneys too; I realize that you have had a real rough job. I can't see how the 20 of you could even get together long enough to get out a report, because I work with you attorneys, and I know that all you have to do is say "good morning", and if you are saying "good morning" to 2 attorneys, you will have 2 answers from the 2. I don't say it facetiously. Go into the corridor, pretty soon, and try it out yourself and see what happens. The both of them will not agree on the fact that it is a good morning. One will say, "It's a little cold"; and the other will say, "The sun is a little bright."

But, I do encourage your support of this amendment. I do think that we should emphasize the fact that the people of the state still have a place in this judicial article. I think that is important.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Escanaba, Mr. Follo.

MR. FOLLO: Mr. Chairman, I too come from an area of the state which is sparsely settled and which has counties of very low population. It seems to me that much of the discussion here is somewhat irrelevant, because I don't think that the probate judges are threatened as much as seems to be indicated by the debate. As I read the proposal, it seems to me that it says the legislature may do this. The legislature is not likely to act hastily. It will only be upon petition of people in the area, and if there is strong opposition to it, they will not act; they will not combine counties.

It always impresses me that people who oppose changes of this kind are the very people who advocate strict economy. Here is a chance, if the people of a county want to economize and feel that 2 counties or 3 counties could be combined with a probate court, it could be done.

I believe that we have been putting too much back in the constitution, restricting our legislature more and more, or at least as much as our old constitution. It seems to me we ought to look ahead and allow our legislature to act, allow the people to do the things for themselves, if they wish. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake.

MR. BRAKE: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I admit some uncertainty in this problem and I would like some further thinking from the committee and, in order to lay a background, there are some things I would like to go over. I recognize that there are some things that take place in the probate court where the answer ought to be given by a competent attorney acting as judge. And I recognize that if that is to be done it must be on a circuit basis for these small counties or they will have to have state subsidy in the payment of the salaries because the little counties can't pay that kind of a salary. On the other hand, it seems to me that the circuit idea raises some serious problems, and I would like to know what the committee proposes, what they are thinking about as an answer.

We get along very nicely with judicial circuits for circuit judges. If the judge comes in once a week or every 2 weeks, in some places once a month, we have lived with that. We get along quite nicely with it. But there is a difference in the courts. When the circuit judge comes to town, it is the lawyers who come to see him. Maybe they have their clients and their witnesses with them. But the circuit judge is not very accessible to the general public and need not be very accessible to the general public.

On the other hand, the probate judge is visited by the people — not by the lawyers, particularly, but by the people — day after day. It is a strange thing that we have such different experiences, a probate judge talking about taking care of the probate work in an hour a week. Of course, the counties with which I am immediately familiar are a little larger than these 25,000, but not too much larger, and there is always a crowd in the waiting room of the judge's office wanting to see the probate judge — not lawyers, but the people themselves. And, as I visit these smaller counties, stop in to say hello to the probate judge, it seems to me there is always somebody waiting. Their problems may not be very important to us, but there is something that they want to see the probate judge about, and I don't believe they are ever going to be happy if they have a probate judge 1 day a week or something of that kind. They want to see him when they go to the courthouse. They want him to be there, and my experience is that he generally is there.

I would like to know from the committee: is it your thinking that there will be maintained an open office in each of these counties in the circuit, with a registrar there and a staff? Is it your thinking that the registrar's powers should be increased so that they can take care of some of the problems that the judge is supposed to take care of? How do you propose that the demand of the public for constant access to the probate judge is going to be satisfied?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake yields to Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Brake, members of the committee, to answer Mr. Brake's question, perhaps, will take a little more time than just yes or no, so let me start with this: not a single probate judge that came before us — and in answer to Mr. Radka's problem, we had them from all sized counties, and we requested and we heard from more probate judges than we heard from any other branch of our judicial system, and every one of them, from Judge Lincoln, who comes from the largest county in this state, down to Mr. Baird, who represented, we thought and we hoped, the top of Michigan, to Judge Meehan, who came from a county of 16,000, to Judge Mitchell, who came from a county of 38,000, to Judge Coleman, who comes from Calhoun, which is not a big metropolitan but a larger county — agree, in essence, with this particular idea.

Basically, we envisioned this, Mr. Brake, that there is probably more money passing through the hands of the probate judge than there is through the hands of the circuit judge; that estates are growing larger, not smaller, and that a trained, competent individual was needed.

You are quite right that we felt that for judicial purposes — it is the thinking of the committee, and has been, that the office of the probate judge is going to grow and become a judicial office and not a county office, and these myriad of things that the legislature, because it has had no other official around, has dumped into the lap of the probate judge will have to be and, we admit, may be transferred to other officials. It was the thinking, basically, of the committee that the probate judge and the probate court was a probate and a juvenile judge in a court and not a dumping ground for everything that the legislature couldn't find anybody else to handle.

We envisioned, as you say, that through statutory enactment, when a district was set up, there would be in every county a probate office, a probate registrar or clerk, whatever the name may be, and that they may be accessible to handle the probation of estates. We inquired very diligently, and in particularly of Judge Meehan, and of the other judges, whether they could handle additional counts, and the answer was very emphatically yes.

Naturally, the county of Kalamazoo or Saginaw is not going to be grouped together in a probate district. They are single circuits. They certainly aren't going to be grouped together in a district. We envisioned that the probate registrar would be, if necessary, given additional powers over and above what they have now for the normal, everyday administration of estates.

Judge Coleman has been quoted on this floor quite considerably, and for good reason. Probably she is the best looking of all of the probate judges in the state of Michigan. Her statement, given to us on December 19 was that, first, probate judges should be elected by districts. The exact size of these districts is a matter better left to the determination of this committee or to the legislature. This was her particular statement. She also stated they should be attorneys, and she is head of the juvenile division.

We further felt that by grouping these together we could give a more efficient juvenile program to these particular counties. We made inquiry of Mr. Downs, who is a probate judge in a very small county, Charlevoix county, about the juvenile programs; and Judge Meehan, who appeared before us, gave emphasis to the fact, as you did, that by grouping the counties we could have a greater population to have additional money, additional manpower, so that we could provide for adequate probate facilities.

Now, if the action of this committee indicates the action of the convention, the probate court is going to be the juvenile court, and if there is one place where there needs to be additional juvenile work, where the only person sometimes in the office, I will admit, is the judge, and if he happens to be an attorney or happens to have other business, he isn't too much concerned with the juveniles that come before him.

This was the basic thinking of the committee. I will be perfectly frank with Mr. Brake, we didn't write in all these details. The problem that Mr. Leppien is getting at is really something that Judge Mitchell put out to us, and basically, it is this: "Our association recommends that your committee examine the counties of the state to determine whether some should be joined together to effect a more economical operation in all areas of government." This lies at the heart of the problem. We have passed the local government article, and there isn't anything in there. As he points out, if this is not done, then some other method should be found for making possible the grouping. We aren't grouping anything. We are making it possible. We think that every judge — and we had them from all sizes, and we had the list and their testimony is on the tape, and I had Judge Meehan's testimony transcribed, and I mislaid it through a myriad of papers, but he emphasizes very strongly that for many months he handled Manistee county, which is north of Oceana, and he said there was no problem at all.

The case that Mr. Leppien puts out is going to be the exception, it is going to be the rare exception. I submit that there isn't anything in this day of automobile traffic or anything else, we have cars and all of these highways that we are building with our earmarked money — certainly makes it possible for a probate court that does not have to be grouped in any county.

I will agree with you that many detailed, nonjudicial duties have been delegated to the probate court. We submit that as this state grows, this will have to change. Your probate judge is going to have to become a probate court. Estates are getting of greater size. More and more counties are taking the idea that you don't probate an estate on your own; you have an attorney, and unless some type of flexibility is left in this, I think you are freezing in, for all time to come, in those areas which are going to decline for some time in population before they grow, an inadequate system of justice for parts of this state.

It isn't going to affect my county. If you really believe that the people and the juvenile program should have some idea of success, in having stricken the proviso that we have on the bottom so that it now is in the probate court and in no other, and if you want and if you support an adequate juvenile program, and if it is going to be in the probate court, then, I say, by all means, you should allow this type of provision to be written in. I don't think it will be abused. I think if they are grouped together — and it does not work — there is nothing to prohibit them from going back or reducing the size of the circuits. That was the thinking of the committee, insofar as those particular questions.

Having struck out the language "except as otherwise provided by law," to allow any type of operation efficiently of the court, both the probate part and the juvenile part, we urge that you defeat the amendment and allow this to stand in this particular section.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Brake, the Chair believes you retained the floor, do you seek further recognition? Mr. Leppien.

MR. LEPPIEN: Mr. Chairman, through the Chair I would like to ask Delegate Danhof 2 questions. One question is, do you envision in your thinking on the additional duties of the registrar of probate, such things as the creation of a delayed birth record, the waiving of the waiting period for marriage licenses, items of that kind which all of our legislators in times past, when county clerks have appeared before various committees of the legislature, have indicated very strongly are judicial determinations and not for laymen?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Not those items that relate to a judicial determination. You talk about a waiver of marriage. We will assume for a moment, if you will, Mr. Leppien, that you have a judge that has maybe 2 or 3 counties. I am not convinced that in those areas where there will be or there has taken place, that the judge will be so inaccessible that he cannot be reached for this particular purpose. I know that you can make the case and say, "Well, he is going to be 35, 40, 50 miles away," and I will agree. All I can tell you is that we inquired of the judges in those areas where, perhaps, this would take place. The only reply that we received was that the occurence of what you are mentioning is of a rarity which would not justify the nonincorporation of a particular item like this.

I would envision that the registrar would be given more power in the everyday operation and the probating of estates, not, of course, to determine final accounts, but in those matters which are the matters of filing and accountability, until such time as the judge would come and examine them and sign the final orders, perhaps along that particular line. You say filing a delayed birth registration. Most of these are not a matter that has to be done as of this date. I have filed many of them. You will file them and they will go to the court and eventually you will get a call that the judge has signed them. This is not a tremendous area of conflict and, as I said, we inquired particularly of Judge Meehan — he doesn't come from a real small one but it is smaller than Mr. Brake was talking about — and also Mr. Baird, as to whether or not this would really be a handicap, because we were concerned with it. The answer that we received from every one of them was no.

MR. LEPPIEN: Delegate Danhof, I gather from the remarks just made, that you are interested in strengthening probate courts. That is correct, is it not?

MR. DANHOF: That was our intention. It is mine. It is the committee's intention.

MR. LEPPIEN: That is your intention, is it not?

MR. DANHOF: Yes.

MR. LEPPIEN: Then I submit, very respectfully, to this committee, that we are dealing with the rights of human, everyday people, and if it is necessary that this convention adopt some form of tax program that will provide for the subsidizing of probate judges in counties too small to support an adequate legally trained person, if that is necessary — and I am not saying it is, but if that is necessary — then, I submit, very respectfully, that we ought to face that in this convention and provide for it and keep the probate judge home in the county, in order to make him available at all times for many miscellaneous things. I have only mentioned 2 or 3. Every county clerk, I believe, every court official below the circuit court would well testify, and proof of what I am saying is that in our county — and I am sure it is true in other counties — the judge of probate never leaves, vacation, conference, or anything, without arranging with one of the circuit judges, who are always on duty, to be there to take his place when needed on a day to day basis.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Shackleton.

MR. SHACKLETON: Mr. Chairman and delegates, a brief statement and a question to Delegate Danhof, please. In some of these more sparsely populated communities, there are businesses of various sizes, many of them solely owned, individually owned. An owner of the business may have employees ranging from 8 or 10 up to, maybe, 50. Assume, on a Thursday night or a Friday morning, he prepares the payroll checks for these people, payday being Friday, and then is inconsiderate enough to die that night or on Friday morning. How are those people going to be paid Saturday or Sunday until a special administrator has been appointed? If the judge is 2 or 3 counties away, how can this be accomplished?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Shackleton, I would submit it probably would be signed faster than in the county that you come from. I think a lawyer would take the estate of this businessman — if he has 40 or 50 employees, it would probably be of sufficient size — and, probably, a special administrator would be appointed within about 72 hours, I am sure. If he did nothing else but file a petition and mail it to the judge, he would get it back by Monday morning. I submit, it would be just as fast or faster than in a county where you have 1 or 2 probate judges, where probably you would file it and they would put it on the routine and it would be filed. You say, "Well, the people have to be paid." I agree that they have to be paid, and you get them paid out as fast as you can. I am not even sure that they could be paid by the special administrator until you got everything all squared away.

That particular type of an emergency is not one which, I think, Mr. Leppien was referring to. He is referring more to the commitment of the mentally ill, which is of far greater importance, and even there you have a 3 day waiting period which the prosecuting attorney can handle in the county. I don't think that that would be a particular problem. You file the petition; you file the order, and you prepare and file your bond, and if it is in good form, you have a registrar, and I would imagine in about 48 hours you would have it over and back, which is probably as fast as you could do it in the county of Saginaw right now.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Sleder.

MR. SLEDER: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, the area I represent, the twenty-seventh senatorial district, there are 7 counties, and of these 7 counties, 5 of them have a population of less then 10,000; 2 of them have a population of over 30,000. The 2 counties, Grand Traverse and Wexford, are not particularly interested in this provision because they have their own probate court and, under the provision, would continue it. However, the other 5 counties are deeply interested in this provision and each 1 of them, of course, is opposed to it. They feel by the fact that if we take and combine any 1 of these 3 or 5 counties, or in any way it might be brought about by the legislature, it will take away 1 of the areas of local government, keeping government local and keeping it down with the people. We will build the probate courts in the same manner that we have the circuit courts.

The workload of the probate courts will pile up like they have in the circuit courts, and therefore the people will not have the service nor will they have the closeness to the court system. In our area, of course, a great deal of it deals with the children, and this is important in the fact that the local probate judge has a firm acquaintence with the people of his county. And, beyond this, there is one thing more that really does concern me, and that is when we look ahead of what the committee has planned and has put a provision in that the probate judges must be attorneys. This fact, I am sure, that the only way it would be possible for any of the smaller counties to afford an attorney would be by a combination of 3 or 4 different counties, and then when we put in the provision that they must be attorneys, this is where I really become concerned.

With all due respect to the organization, the bar association — we sometimes think that Delegate Marshall has a strong representative area, that he has a bargaining position, but let me tell you, the bar association certainly can out do him at any time. My experience, as mayor of Traverse City, where our city charter required an attorney to be the municipal judge, was that we had set, as a council, the salary that the municipal judge should have, and the local bar association, after we had to ask our present municipal judge not to run again, because of his conduct in office — he was a lawyer — we asked them to submit another name on the ballot. The trouble we had, they would not propose any one of their members until the salary was set by the city commission as to the terms that they wanted. Therefore, we went in on the election without any candidate for municipal judge.

This same thing can happen when we come to the probate judges. If this provision is in and we must combine our counties and where we have — and I realize in the big counties where the bar association consists, in a county, of probably 40 or 50 attorneys — but in these small counties, we combine 3 or 4 counties, and how many attorneys do we have? We have 6 or 7 attorneys, or maybe 5, and these 5 or 6 attorneys set around the "tea table" and they say, "none of us will submit our name as probate judge until the board of supervisors sets the salary where we want it," and, gentlemen, you are in a bind then. Because you have to meet their demands if you are going to fill the office.

Therefore, I feel that we have 2 things here correlated, and that is increa .g the size of the probate court and then, secondly, after we increase the size, we are then going to ask that they be attorneys, and then, we, when we do this, are in serious trouble, because the area, in the smaller communities where this applies, is definitely too small to contain many lawyers. As I say, with a small number in their association, they do control and they will control the probate courts and the salaries that will have to be set by the boards of supervisors.

I therefore, because of these reasons, highly suggest and recommend that if we are to better serve the areas of northern Michigan, the upper peninsula, where we do have sparsely populated counties, we must continue with the same or similar form of probate courts that we have operated with over the past 50, 60 years.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Sharpe.

MR. SHARPE: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, I rise with a great hesitancy this morning. I have listened for hours and hours to conversation from attorneys. I would like to ask Mr. Danhof a question or two if he would care to answer through the Chair, Mr. Chairman. You stated a few moments ago that we had passed the local government committee report and we did not mention the probate judge within our committee. I would like to ask you, Mr. Danhof, what did you expect the local government committee to do in this respect, when your committee had jurisdiction over the matter?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Sharpe, I did not refer to the probate judge. I was talking to the question that was raised, in essence, by Mr. Leppien in combining counties. That was what I was referring to when I said that we had passed the local government committee and there was nothing contained therein in this particular regard; that if there had been a provision, or if we had taken some action to combine counties, to make counties of sufficient size, then, with the "every county" idea, I would go along. This is what Judge Mitchell was referring to and what I was quoting. I was not referring to the mentioning of the probate judge, Mr. Sharpe.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Sharpe.

MR. SHARPE: All right. Thank you.

Mr. Danhof, you disturbed me with another remark you made when you stated that in many cases, the judge of probate is not concerned with the juvenile problem. I don't know whether this is true or not, not being familiar with all of the probate judges in Michigan, but I will guarantee you that in my county and in the county I represent, of Shiawassee, this is not true. I want to submit this to you also, that the probate court is a court with personality. Like Mr. Sleder so ably said, the judge of the probate court knows the people with whom he is dealing, and the impression that the judge makes on the juvenile that comes before him could, very likely, leave an indelible impression upon his imagination and his life that would carry down through his entire life.

As you know, as most of us know — and I would like to remind the nonlawyer delegates once again that this was drafted by a 21 member committee of 20 lawyers and 1 lonely druggist, and he had a tremendous job on his hands, I imagine, setting here for a few days listening to these arguments, but it looks to me like there could possibly be some personal prejudice coming out of this report, when you have stated that all these individuals must be lawyers, and Judge Coleman also, you emphasize, stated this, and I do admit that there was a very attractive judge, but she is also an attorney, and I don't blame her for wanting to perpetuate the attorneys in all the courts in Michigan. This, I do not believe, is what the people in Michigan necessarily want. If the bar association wants that, that represents a small segment of our population. I go along with Mrs. Koeze, when she said that maybe we should lock the lawyers out and draft this judicial article. I don't think she is so far wrong. I think I have said altogether too much right now. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair will advise the committee that on the current amendment, 7 out of the 11 speakers have been nonlawyers, and the Chair will bring the matter back into balance by recognizing Mr. Martin, an attorney from East Grand Rapids.

MR. MARTIN: Mr. Chairman, I don't want to speak as an attorney in this matter. I do want to talk about the problem of the children, though, because that is at the heart of this committee proposal. Some 2 years ago, at the request of the legislature, the Michigan crime and delinquency council made a study of the handling of children, the problems of handling children in the juvenile courts, probate courts, throughout the state, and this was a statewide study and as comprehensive as we could make it and it was made with the cooperation of the probate judges association. What we found was that there are many counties in the state, and among the larger counties which have full time, well paid probate judges, who have adequate staff to do the prehearing investigations that have to be done with respect to these children, and to carry out the probation responsibilities, where they are placed on probation. But, we also found that there are many counties in the state where the judge is on a part time basis, there is no staff whatsoever to carry out these responsibilities, the judge doesn't even have decent quarters in which he can interview these youngsters when they do get into trouble, and these are the problems that do come to the probate judges. And so, the bearing of this proposal is to try to see if we can't get full time probate judges who have experience in this field and who can devote enough time to it to gain more experience, who would have adequate quarters and adequate staff to work with, trained staff — because it takes trained people to work with these children who get into trouble — and it appears to be absolutely impossible to obtain this in the very small counties which can't provide that kind of pay for their judge or personnel for staff purposes.

In addition, of course, in many of the counties, you couldn't justify full time staffs for this kind of work, if you just take 1 county at a time, because there aren't sufficient problems to be dealt with. So, the committee's thought with respect to district probate courts, where they can be justified and where they would justify adequate staff and adequate pay, is the right answer to this.

The legislature, obviously, isn't going to do something like this unless it is going to benefit the people of the area and the children of the area, particularly. So that the recommendation, I am sure, comes from the probate judges because they, more than anybody else in the state of Michigan, are acutely aware of the problem of trying to deal with children who are in trouble without having any staff to give them the background to deal with the problems that these children have. It isn't just a matter of having a child come in and say, "You are it", or "You go to boys' vocational school", or something like that. These are difficult cases and they have to be worked with by trained people. This, as far as we can see, is the only way to get that kind of treatment for these children throughout the state. The big counties that have full scale staffs meet the problem all right, but the smaller counties simply are unable to do it, and I am sure that is the reason that a recommendation of this kind comes from these probate judges who are trying to solve this problem.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. William Hanna.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to realize that we have a greater problem than merely combining counties into probate court. I personally believe that there should be some form of county court where some of these semi administrative and judicial functions can be rested in a judge.

But, I think we confuse ourselves when we talk about distances or size. If we are perturbed, as Mr. Sleder mentioned, that in his district the counties were of such size that such a combination would result in long distances, then, on the basis of size, if you compare Kalkaska, Antrim, Charlevoix and Emmet counties, if each of those counties, 4 in number, should have a probate judge because of distance, then Marquette county should have 4 probate judges. In fact, if you look at the population of those 4 counties, if they are entitled to 4, Marquette should then be entitled to 6. Our problem is that Marquette county now is almost 5 times the size of Charlevoix county. What we are doing at this convention is trying to solve an inefficient county court system known as the probate court, because of the lack of population, or, for that matter, size, in certain areas of the state.

This same problem of having an inefficient court system exists when you are talking about the sheriff system. If local government will look at the sheriff's department, you will see that if it were not for the state police, you have little except a jail keeper in the north. Facilities of the probate court are only a part of the problem and I would like to submit that if we do not combine probate courts, then we should allow the combination of counties so that you have a sufficient tax base, a sufficient population and, with due regard to distances, an area that can be served by 1 court, and we are facing up to 1/10 of the problem.

Mr. Sleder raised the problem of securing a judge in Traverse City, but I submit to you that there is more to that story, because Traverse City's charter is one of the few small city charters, and the only 1 in the north country that I know of, which contains a very unusual charter provision. His charter provides that the municipal judge of the city of Traverse City can not practice in any court, the circuit court of that county. Now, even in Muskegon county, our charters do not restrict our municipal judges from engaging in private practice in the circuit court, undesirable as that practice may be. But when you put that charter into a county the size of Grand Traverse, you are seriously restricted, and the question before that council was 2 fold, one, if you are going to deprive an attorney of the right to earn an adequate living, you have to pay him an adequate salary. They could have very easily left the salary alone and have allowed him private practice before the circuit court. If he will examine his charter, he had 2 alternatives.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The gentleman from Charlevoix, Mr. Shanahan.

MR. SHANAHAN: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, the comments of Julius Sieder apply very much to me and the area that I represent, partly because we overlap, somewhat, 3 of the counties that he mentioned as being small, 2 of them less than 10,000, and 1 just over 10,000, also in the Charlevoix district; Charlevoix is a little bit larger, not much. The problem, as he outlined it, is very real, but there is something else that has not been mentioned, and I think it should, and that is a matter of distance. When you talk about size, there are 2 considerations, one is the population; the other one is the area.

If anybody will take a few minutes to look at the upper peninsula, a map of it, and see the distances that are involved — considering the hazards of winters far more rugged there than it is in Lansing, or even in Charlevoix — you can see the problems that can develop. Very briefly, the upper peninsula has about 1/3 of the area of the state and has about 1/5 of the counties, between 1/5 and 1/6 of the counties, so they are large; and not only that, contrary to the way it is in the lower peninsula, where the county seats ordinarily — not always, but ordinarily — are fairly near the center of the county; in the upper peninsula you find them generally at the edge of the county and on the far edge from a neighboring county. So, there again, consider distances to be traveled under adverse conditions at a time when you must get to your probate judge, in this case.

Much of the economy that is proposed by eliminating probate judges through consolidation or a circuit is lost when it is realized that in each of the counties involved it is necessary to maintain an office, somebody is there to look after things, and then there have been some proposals in regard to the delegation of powers, so that much of the so called economy goes away in added administrative costs. It goes without saying that as the need for assistance to the probate judge increases, added clerical help, if that is what it is, is provided. I have before me a list of the probate courts and judges in the state of Michigan and I note, in passing, that some of the counties have 2 probate judges and, of course, Wayne has 6. That simply means that as you get more than one can take care of, even with added help, it is necessary to have additional probate judges.

The thing that we still are talking about — I hope I am still talking about it — is the fact that there is a need, a real need for a probate judge in each county who is available, who is known locally, which has on the other side of the coin the fact that he knows people locally, in order to provide the services that are necessary in a particular county, and by keeping each county with its individual probate judge, we are going far in maintaining local self government.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: May I make an inquiry as to how many speakers the chairman has on the list?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair has Mr. Dell, Mr. Habermehl, Miss Donnelly and yourself.

MR. DANHOF: In view of the hour, Mr. Chairman, I would move the committee do now rise.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof moves the committee do now rise. Those in favor will say aye; those opposed, no.

The motion prevails.

[Whereupon, the committee of the whole having risen, Vice President Hutchinson resumed the Chair.]

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair recognizes the delegate from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration one proposal on which the secretary will give a detailed report.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, the committee of the whole has had under consideration Committee Proposal 94, A proposal pertaining to the probate court; has adopted 1 amendment thereto, has under consideration another amendment; and has come to no final resolution thereon. This completes the report of the committee of the whole.

Mr. Van Dusen has called a meeting of the committee on rules and resolutions this noon immediately upon adjournment.

I have the following requests for leave of absence: Mr. Lawrence wishes to be excused from the afternoon session of Monday. Mr. Hoxie wishes to be excused from Monday's session to attend a meeting of the board of review; Mr. Snyder and Mr. Suzore wish to be excused from Monday's session; and Mr. Tweedie wishes to be excused from the sessions of March 5 through March 9.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, the requests will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The Chair recognizes the delegate from Genesee, Mr. McLogan.

MR. McLOGAN: Mr. President, I rise to a point of personal privilege.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The gentleman will state the point.

MR. McLOGAN: Ladies and gentlemen of the convention, my respect for lawyers and for farmers has been fortified by this convention. I sometimes feel that both groups represent the last vestiges of rugged individualism, people who will speak out for what they think. I am not an attorney, but I would suggest that we cease and desist from a practice we seem to be falling into of castigating the bar association and the legal profession in general. Lawyers can fend for themselves. They would not stoop to any alteration of or protection from the constitution purely for self gain. Thank you. (applause)

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: The Chair recognizes Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I would simply like to remind the members of the committee on rules and resolutions that it will be entirely in order to bring their lunches to the meeting that has been called immediately following the noon recess.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Habermehl requests leave of absence from the session of this afternoon.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Without objection, the request will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Huron, Mr. McAllister.

MR. McALLISTER: At this time, I move the convention recess until 2:00 o'clock.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: Mr. McAllister moves that the convention stand in recess until 2:00 p.m. All those in favor will say aye. Opposed will say no.

The motion prevails and the convention stands in recess until 2:00 o'clock p.m.

[Whereupon, at 11:40 o'clock a.m., the convention recessed; and, at 2:00 o'clock p.m., reconvened.]

The convention will be in order.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. President, a quorum of the convention is present.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: General orders of the day. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen.

MR. VAN DUSEN: Mr. President, I move the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole for the purpose of considering matters on the calendar of general orders.

VICE PRESIDENT HUTCHINSON: On the motion of Mr. Van Dusen, all those in favor will say aye. Opposed will say no.

The motion prevails. The committee will convene and the gentleman from Oakland, Mr. Van Dusen, will preside.

[Whereupon, Mr. Van Dusen assumed the Chair to preside as chairman of the committee of the whole.]

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair noted a certain lack of enthusiasm when we moved to resolve into committee of the whole, which is, perhaps, understandable. It was mentioned when the committee was sitting a day or so ago that one of the delegates had suggested that the bell be rung every 5 minutes just to keep people alert. This noon, in the rules committee, it was suggested that perhaps a clock might be placed back here so that all of the delegates could observe it, but Mr. Gover suggested that perhaps a calendar would be more appropriate. (laughter)

The committee of the whole is currently considering section a of Committee Proposal 94, which deals with the organization and jurisdiction of the probate courts of the state. The question is currently on an amendment to that section offered by Mr. Leppien, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Leppien's amendment is:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Leppien, the Chair will recognize Mr. Dell.

MR. DELL: Mr. Chairman, there is a possibility that my statements are not pertaining to the amendment before us here. It is in the body of section a, and it is brought about by a statement by Mr. Sieder this morning.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: There are a number of pending amendments, Mr. Dell, if you would prefer to defer your remarks until we have one that is more appropriate.

MR. DELL: If it is permissible, I could speak on it at this time.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: If your remarks are confined to the Leppien amendment, you may proceed, Mr. Dell.

MR. DELL: They are not.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Habermehl had sought recognition this morning, but has been excused. Miss Donnelly had sought recognition this morning. Miss Donnelly, do you desire to be recognized on the Leppien amendment?

MISS DONNELLY: Yes. Believe it or not, I rise to support the committee. I believe this is very vital for the future of good administration of justice throughout the state.

Originally, people have said they don't like it because they want nonlawyers, or we are throwing them off and we are being obnoxious about that. If you will read 96f, we keep those who are once elected on until they are defeated, so you don't need to panic about your individual nonlawyer judges. There are only 33 of them in the state that are involved in this.

As to availability, we had testimony from 1 of these esteemed judges who was a lawyer. He campaigned and was elected on the theory that he would be available 1 day a week and he isn't even available that often — and that was a Monday — because many is the time I saw him down here on a Monday, so obviously he wasn't even available to these people that 1 day a week. His basic theory was, if you efficiently handle your office, you do not need that amount of time for the small areas.

We want to basically remember that the people outstate in the small areas often have rather large estates where they have serious problems and they should be handled by someone who is very competent to handle them in the area of training and knowledge of the broad law and the effect of what their orders will mean. Mr. Leppien's county, with 190,000, I don't think will ever be touched under this. I don't think anybody would anticipate it. We have 17 counties, if the math is correct, under 10,000. These counties would probably be affected, but I think they would be benefited.

I submit that with Alexander Graham Bell and his aid, plus Henry Ford, or whoever else you would like to think of, these judges will be available whenever they are absolutely needed.

As to the unwed mothers, I don't think it is so immediate that 2 days or 1 day's phone call or 3 days is going to change the facts. We all know this condition doesn't arise immediately. It isn't that kind of an emergency. So, I submit it is not a good argument. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Leppien to section a of Committee Proposal 94. Does any delegate desire to have the amendment read again? If not, those in favor of the amendment will say aye. Those opposed will say no.

The amendment is not adopted. The secretary will read the next amendment.

A DELEGATE: Division.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: A division is requested, is the demand supported? It is supported. Those in favor of the Leppien amendment will vote aye, those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Leppien, the yeas are 45, the nays are 65.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is not adopted. The secretary will read the next amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hubbs offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 10, after "law,", by inserting "however in all counties under 25,000 population the entire salary expense of any court established under this provision shall be borne by the state,".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, interminable interlocution with interlocutory results prompts me to indulge in some hortatory oratory.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment, the Chair presumes, Mr. Hubbs? (laughter)

MR. HUBBS: Yes, Mr. Chairman, and along that line I am also indulging in this hortatory oratory for a reason. Not being an attorney but a salesman, I believe in conditioning my audience to the material to follow, and I have therefore submitted this amendment. Before I get into the details of the amendment, however, I would like to mention to some of the attorneys present, or all of the attorneys present, that we laymen don't dislike them. In fact, I rather like attorneys myself, and someone this morning said, over in this corner, that some of us who were not attorneys were rather envious, and I am particularly envious. I would like to have been an attorney, and 2 reasons I can think of right now make me envious of attorneys. One of them, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that you have not seen fit to confer upon me the degree that you conferred on Mr. Farnsworth, that of honorary barrister. The other reason I am somewhat envious of attorneys, I understand that most of them had an opportunity to take a course in college called, how to be on either side of a question. Incidentally, the textbook of this course is entitled, Developing The Opposite Point of View, and was written by a man known as I. M. Divided. The initials stand for "impounded mandamus".

The reason that I offer my amendment, as you will all know, is that if the people who have written the judicial article have their way, it is likely that in the near future when we proceed into another section of the judicial article, that our justices of the peace may be done away with and a county court provided for or will be provided for by action of the legislature. Now, I know that if I start talking about justices of the peace, all kinds of people will rise up to tell me what horrible people they are and that some of them are inclined to inebriation and things of that sort. I think there are a lot of good ones, and I think we outstate in counties of small population have a problem. My main problem, being in that type of situation, is economics, and I am unwilling to support, through tax money levied on personal property and real estate, any more government than I have to. I have too much government now and if the judicial article writers have their way, I understand they are going to have attorneys for judges, and county courts. This, in my opinion, will inevitably be more expensive than the present system in my area.

Therefore, my amendment is designed to provide for payment of salary to any court so established under this article by the state rather than the local government. I can come up with a lot of good reasons for this. I haven't provided that the state shall pay the expense of operating the new offices and judicial chambers required. I think local government may begin to carry that burden, but if they want us to have quality justice outstate, let them provide payment for quality justice by sending the tax money up from Lansing to pay the judicial salaries that will be involved, and that is why I have offered this amendment at this time. It comes in a little bit early as regards justices of the peace, but these fellows are tricky, you know. They don't wait until you get to justices of the peace to make some provision for them.

Line 7 says, "The legislature may combine 1 or more counties into probate districts," and that is all right, in a way, "or combine the office of probate judge with any judicial office inferior thereto in any county with less than 25,000 population, with supplemental salary as provided by law, and shall do so on recommendation and report of the supreme court."

This doesn't leave it up to local option; it doesn't leave it up to the legislature. It says the legislature may, but shall do so on recommendation and report of the supreme court and therefore I say that if you are going to tell us by action of the legislature and the supreme court exactly how expensive our court system in our areas is going to be, then I suggest that you pay for it. Thank you very much.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs. Mr. Stafseth, do you seek recognition on the amendment?

MR. STAFSETH: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I think the situation that is before us is something similar to that which came before us when we were trying to encourage engineers into the county road engineering field, and I think that the solution that we effected might be a very good solution for this particular problem dealing with the probate court. That is, if you have a probate judge who is a licensed attorney, that the state supplement his salary; I am not saying pay all of his salary, but suplement it. The reason I say this is that the county, then, could have a choice. If they are up in the sparsely populated areas of the upper peninsula, or in the upper part of the lower peninsula and they feel that they want to have a layman that is conducting himself very well, they have this choice.

However, with the supplementing the salary of a licensed attorney, they would have a choice of saying, "Well, maybe we should have this licensed attorney," and I am sure that under those conditions you would have far better attorneys coming out and doing a job more conscientiously to sell their program.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Barthwell.

MR. BARTHWELL: Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I probably will not say, as eloquently as Mr. Hubbs did, that I, too, favor the state assuming the responsibility for the salaries of judges. To me, this is very basic because I have listened in the committee for long hours to schemes as to how you are going to get the best people to submit themselves for the judges of the state.

I contend that in a capitalistic system there is only one thing that attracts the best people and that is money. So, as long as we are not going to pay these people adequately, and it has been stated that they are not adequately paid, I very definitely favor the state assuming the responsibility for the salaries of the judges. This has been done in many of the new judicial articles. In New York state and in Wisconsin, Illinois — a lot of the states — the state has assumed the responsibility of paying the salary of these officers. So, I am in favor of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: On the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs, the Chair will recognize Mr. Lundgren.

MR. LUNDGREN: This is just a brief statement. I think we have hit upon something here. Mr. Hubbs, I don't think your amendment is going to pass. I hate to foredoom you ahead of time, but we have hit on something here that state government has got to look to.

When we provide, within the constitution here, all these new courts and other things that we are going to provide, one of these days — as has been expressed to me several times by people over in the "big house", the legislature — when we continue to provide new commissions and new this and new that, one of these days we are going to have to start providing the money that the state says we shall do. I think we have gone through that with the erection of new jails throughout the state where the state has come in and condemned the jail, and the counties have had a dickens of a time raising the money to build a new jail.

I only talk to this point because I think we are on something that we have to give consideration to. When we decide that we are going to create new courts and new this and new that in communities that have a hard time now providing the proper place for their laws and everything to be taken up and discussed and acted upon, we have to recognize if we bring into these communities new ideas, that we should also provide some way, in some manner, some means of providing the moneys to operate such.

Mr. Hubbs, I think I would support your amendment here. I don't know how far we are going to go with it, but it is something we should consider.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment there to the amendment that I would like to have read.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Madar's amendment to the amendment of Mr. Hubbs is as follows:

1. Amend the amendment, by striking out "however"; and after "counties" by striking out "under 25,000 population"; so the language of the amendment will then read, "in all counties the entire salary expense of any court established under this provision shall be borne by the state."

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Madar to the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that I just want to be fair to everybody, and I think that we, in Detroit and Wayne county, should get a few dollars out of the state, too, besides what we are getting now. Of course, none of us are getting enough.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the Madar amendment. Mr. Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to Mr. Madar that he check into something that prompted me to put my amendment up in the way that I did. I have been told that the members of the judiciary in Wayne county are partially paid by the state and partially paid by the county, and that their eligibility to the retirement system of Wayne county depends on their receiving at least half of their pay from the county of Wayne. Now, if the state pays all of their salary, will they still be eligible to obtain their retirement from the county of Wayne or will they not?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Would the gentleman care to answer, Mr. Madar?

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, I don't believe that this applies to the probate judges, as their salaries are paid for right now by the county. However, I might say that we are willing to go ahead and accept the money from the state. I don't suppose the judges are going to like it, but you can bet your bottom dollar that the taxpayers are going to appreciate it very much.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, I am reliably informed by counsel that in the county of Wayne, the probate judges are paid by the county, just as they are in my county. But, by the way, I should like to point out to you, as far as my amendment is concerned, it does not say that the judges, in particular the probate judges, should be paid by the state. It says, "however in all counties under 25,000 population the entire salary expense of any court established under this provision . . . ." In other words, the county will continue to pay the salary it does now, unless the combinations are made and the justice courts are taken into the probate court or something of that sort. That is all my provision does. It says that if they change and give us quality justice, they are going to have to pay the quality salary required.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Madar.

MR. MADAR: Mr. Chairman, in answer to Mr. Hubbs, I didn't have to go to my counsel, though I will admit that Mr. Hubbs has excellent counsel — I am sure Mr. Hutchinson is an exceptionally good attorney.

A DELEGATE: Iverson.

MR. MADAR: Oh, was that Mr. Iverson? Hubbs, will you stop getting — (laughter) Mr. Hubbs, I wish you wouldn't keep getting advice from our Wayne county attorneys. Go ahead and use Mr. Hutchinson, you've got him available there.

Frankly, I realize that this is also pertaining to other courts which might be established. That is the reason why I left that portion in there of "any other court established under this provision shall be borne by the state."

Now, so far as I am concerned, I will admit that I don't have any hopes of seeing this pass. In fact, I think we would be rather foolish to pass this as we would be if we passed the other amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Madar to the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs. Mr. Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, I have received some further counsel and I have no objection to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Madar. Mr. Danhof.

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, in this regard, the salary of probate judges, I think that this is something that should be considered very seriously, and I think Mr. Hubbs has a point. I am not sure that it is involved in this particular article. We have a section coming up that deals with salaries. But, let's review, for a minute, how probate judges are paid. They used to be paid on a fee basis. That meant — and I can recall, it hasn't been that long since I have been practicing law — that they were on a fee basis, and that meant this, in some courts, and I won't name where, when you wanted an order confirming sale and you said, "Send me 2", you got 6; you didn't send 4 back, you paid for 6, because if you didn't, then the next time service was a little slow. At $1.50 an order, you see, this was an extra $6. It was determined that this was not a particularly good feature, and we have recommended that in all courts we not work upon a fee basis, and so, they went on salary.

The legislature has provided for a scale based on population, and this has been amended from time to time, and it sets up that the legislature provides that in counties of such and such a size up to such a size, the probate judge shall be paid so many dollars, and the minimum is $5,000. I don't know, off hand, exactly what the maximum is, but those from Wayne county can probably tell me in a hurry. In addition to that, some counties will pay more. The salary of the circuit judges, if we are talking salaries, and with the Chair's indulgence, maybe we can do that — and I am not sure, and I am willing to state here that if the legislature provides that there shall be districts, that at the time they do that, they should provide for a state salary, but I say that it is not the time here and now to write it in.

We aren't making mandatory that there be districts. I think that when and if there are, this is all part and parcel of the question of how they will be accomplished and how they will be paid, and I think that there would be a very proper time and a very proper place to raise this before the appropriate legislative committee. Because we agree, as Mr. Barthwell said, that perhaps justice is something that should be dispensed equally, and if probate judges are to develop into a district where there is a full time operation, so it will be as you have with circuit judges where you have a base pay by the state and supplementation by the counties within the circuit that desires to do so. There is nothing in here that prohibits that type of arrangement to be made, but I submit that it is not here, nor is it the place where we should work on the salary idea. The salaries of probate judges have gone through an evolution from where they were really low to where they got into a fee basis, whereby those probate judges in the heavily populated areas made a very sizeable salary or compensation. Consequently, the legislature determined that it should be on a salary, and this, I think, is valid.

I think, as time progresses, if, as Mr. Hubbs concludes, that some of these consolidations will take place, they will take into account the salary provision. They have done it in the past. I submit, they will do it in the future if they combine counties. And I think they should be made aware of the fact that if the salary is too high and the counties cannot bear the load, then it will be as we have with our circuit judges, where the bulk of it is paid direct from the state funds. The question of whether all salaries of all judges should be the same is something we will debate for a longer time for another day, but I submit that it is not here and now to write this particular provision in.

I can agree with the philosophy, perhaps, behind it, and with the concern that Mr. Hubbs has for his particular area, but I submit that there is nothing mandatory about these provisions, and I am sure that the men, as Mr. Lundgren wants to refer to them, at the big house" — and I think it is a little better than that — will give due consideration to all of these aspects before they make any type of recommendation or pass any type of legislation. I would urge the defeat of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The Chair would state that he has been somewhat indulgent with the chairman of the committee on judicial branch so that the subject might be somewhat more explored, but will request the succeeding speakers to confine themselves exclusively to the Madar amendment until that has been acted on. Mr. Mahinske, do you seek recognition on the Madar amendment?

MR. MAHINSKE: My question goes to both the Madar amendment and the Hubbs amendment. I think I know what your intent is here, but you don't say this, either one of you. You are talking about the entire salary expense of any court. When I interpret "entire", I am not restricting this to judges. Is it your intent to restrict this salary expense to the judge's salary expense?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, fellow delegates, when I drafted this amendment, this question that Mr. Mahinske brings up was considered by myself, and I started thinking about it a little bit and it was suggested to me that I should put in here the entire judicial salary, and in my notes, I made a note to that effect. But then I started thinking about all of the services that the justices who hold court in their own buildings provide, that is heat, light, space, and so on, and I realized that salary expense, as I had put it, might not be a bad thing. In other words, I am willing to bargain a little bit with you. If you want to pay for some clerks and things like that, why, we will pay the heat and light bill and provide a place for them to do their work. So I left my amendment deliberately the way it was, assuming that the increased expense of the courts, that I assume, are going to arise out of this provision, are going to include other things besides just the judicial salaries that you are thinking of.

MR. MAHINSKE: Then I would like to direct another question through the Chair. Did you also take into consideration that before this provision would be executed, we would be combining the probate court with an inferior court or a court of inferior jurisdiction? What you are asking here is the state to pay the entire expenses of any court established under this and part of the function and probably the greater function of this court would be strictly local matters and not probate matters at all. Did you take this into consideration?

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Mahinske, yes, I did take that into consideration. But the whole tone of the judicial article suggests to me integration and direction from above, and therefore I assumed that if the judicial people desired to control the court from top to bottom, from the top, that they provide the salary from the top even though the matters that they are concerned with are local. I do not think that since the judges are likely to be elected locally, that this is going to result in lack of control over the judge, as someone might suggest. I think if he isn't any good and we are still electing people, why, then, we can get rid of him. But, with strict reference to Mr. Madar's amendment, I don't see anything wrong with it.

I think that Mr. Danhof, as the Chair has suggested, was given a great deal of latitude when he talked almost exclusively about the salaries of probate judges. My amendment had nothing whatever to do with the salaries of probate judges, as the system now exists. It only says that for courts established under this provision, the state shall bear the entire salary, and it doesn't have a direct reference to the present salaries of probate judges whatever.

I think that all of the persons who are concerned with economy in government at the local level and high cost of government bearing on property holders will vote for this amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Mahinske.

MR. MAHINSKE: In response I would like to state, in view of the remarks made, that I would be opposed to this amendment to the amendment, and to the amendment, because I think that it would encourage the application of this provision for economic reasons, primarily, and judicial reasons secondarily. For these reasons, I would be opposed to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Barthwell, do you seek recognition on the Madar amendment? The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Madar to the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs. Mr. Ford, do you seek recognition on the Madar amendment?

MR. FORD: Yes, Mr. Chairman, because the Madar amendment is a laudable amendment only because it strikes at one of the bad features here of the whole thing, in that it would take out some of the discrimination that is built into this thing. But we are kidding ourselves if we adopt this and think that we are correcting anything. All we are doing is putting a patch on a worn out tire.

Really, what Mr. Hubbs is doing here is destroying the possibility of ever having a local court system in a county under 25,000, because what you are asking the legislature to do is vote, not on the need of the local communities for a court system but on the question of how much money they can afford to pay for a court system for local communities. If the Madar amendment is adopted and then the Hubbs amendment is adopted, this would then have statewide effect. It is bad, in its entire effect, but if it is going to be bad for one part of the state, it should be bad for all of the state, and I don't think that the discrimination should be either in favor of or against counties above or below a certain number; 25,000 happens to be the one we are talking about here. I would urge the adoption of the Madar amendment only as a method of defeating the Hubbs amendment ultimately.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Madar to the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs. The secretary will read the Madar amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: The amendment offered by Mr. Madar is:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Those in favor of the Madar amendment will say aye; those opposed will say no.

The amendment is not adopted. The question is now upon the amendment of Mr. Hubbs. Mr. Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ford, in recommending the Madar amendment, was attempting to defeat my amendment, and in his remarks, he said that the criteria that the legislature would use in judging whether these local courts should be created or not would be whether they could afford them or not. I suggest to the economy minded people here that the criteria that the legislature should use is not whether they could afford it or not, but whether the people in the local area could afford it or not, and what I am saying is that we can't afford this expensive kind of justice at the local level, and would prefer to creep along with our own type, and if necessary, do what we can to make it better. I therefore suggest that if we are going to have quality justice, let the legislature provide the money to pay for it. I urge that you adopt my amendment at this time, to take into account something that I see coming up in later proposals. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Dell, do you desire to be recognized on the Hubbs amendment?

MR. DELL: Mr. Chairman, I guess this is as good a place as any if I am going to have my day in court.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: You may proceed, Mr. Dell.

MR. DELL: My problem was: being connected with the county since 1931 on the financial end of it, and trying to meet some of these salaries, and this morning when Mr. Sleder brought up the question of the county board of supervisors setting the salary, as I read this amendment here, or, rather, this section, and it is the section which Mr. Hubbs has mentioned, too, in that the salary would be supplemental, provided by law, and shall do so on recommendation and report to the supreme court, I just wonder, does that mean that the supreme court would control the salary and would tell us what salary we would pay to our probates?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: To whom do you direct your question?

MR. DELL: I guess Mr. Danhof.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Danhof, would the gentleman care to answer?

MR. DANHOF: Mr. Dell, I had assumed that yesterday after a great deal of debate, we had taken care of this "shall" or "may". Again, it gets strictly down to that question. The salary will be as provided by law. If the law says the state will pay it, the state will pay it. If the law says the county will pay it, then I guess the county or counties, as the case may be, if there are more than one involved, will pay it.

Again, we get down to the use of these words that Mr. Brake and myself and numerous other people have gone round and round on. You get down to the question that, no, of course not, the legislature will set the districts and will set the salary. We would again get down into this for the recommendations — in order, when it can be placed before them — the recommendations will come regarding the size of the counties, the size of the caseload, what the past history has proven, what amount of time, perhaps, will be spent on it — we hope it will be full time — and what, in light of this, based maybe upon the present schedule, if you have the present schedule, what additional implementation or what additional amount should be put there, too, for the additional duties that may be involved.

That is just exactly what is involved insofar as the salary provisions are concerned. Anything beyond that, I can't tell you exactly all of the details, but that is what we had in mind. But, as I said, this is the same thing we went through yesterday on these words. We had put this as strongly as we could so that the legislature would follow the recommendations, both upon the size of the district — in other words, in the size of it, if it is 2 counties or if it is 3 counties — and what the salary should be for that particular type and size of district. That is the idea.

CHAIRMAN VANDUSEN: Mr. Dell.

MR. DELL: It was just a question of whether or not it would go back to the supreme court in setting the salary. Now I am rather confused, and I think I understand now why there was 1 druggist on this committee with 20 attorneys. It was his position to provide the aspirin. (laughter)

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs.

MR. HIGGS: Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate Mr. Dell's concern in reading this sentence, and we did go through it yesterday. The specific answer to the question, I think, as I understand it — and I am not sure I understood the chairman — but the answer to the question that Mr. Dell raised, in my mind, would be no, the supreme court would have nothing to do about setting the salary.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Barthwell. Mr. Barthwell passes. Mr. William Hanna.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hubbs, if, next week, I could show you that having a probate court in every county costs your inventory of personal property more money than if your county was combined with the county next to it, would you change your position?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hubbs? The Chair will state that he is not sure the question is germane to the Hubbs amendment, but will, nevertheless, accept Mr. Hubbs' answer.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Mr. Chairman, it goes to the reasons that he raised for wanting his amendment.

MR. HUBBS: The reason I raised for wanting my amendment, Mr. Hanna, is that I am afraid that in the combination of courts that might result from this, the cost would be increased. I have not said that I was against the combination of probate judges. However, you will notice I was not in that argument this morning. But I will say that I would be against the combination of probate judges for a good many reasons other than cost alone.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Your argument, so far on the floor, was to the cost question.

MR. HUBBS: Generally speaking, the cost of soaking into the probate court, or some other court, the justice system, which is going to be the inevitable result of this article.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hanna.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hubbs, is it your understanding that your amendment goes both to the giving of the probate court additional jurisdiction, and to the question of the probate court being placed on a multiple county basis?

MR. HUBBS: My amendment has nothing to do with whether it is placed on a multiple county basis or not, and it has nothing to do with whether the probate court has any more jurisdiction than it has now or not, as far as I know. All it says is that if courts are combined under this provision, the salary expense shall be paid by the state.

In other words, I am anticipating that the county courts, which may be set up under the terms of the judicial article, will be a more expensive operation than we presently have outstate, and as I have said earlier, if they are going to increase the cost of justice at the local level, I want the people who want it to be increased to be willing to pay for it.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Mr. Chairman, if I may question Mr. Hubbs further. Mr. Hubbs, the probate court's jurisdiction and duties are prescribed by law. Are you saying that each time the legislature gives the probate court an additional function, that it should increase its salary, and each time it decreases or takes away from the probate court a function, it should decrease its salary?

MR. HUBBS: Have you read my amendment, Mr. Hanna?

MR. W. F. HANNA: Yes, sir.

MR. HUBBS: I have not said any of those things. I would think I can get expert testimony here to state as to what I have said, I didn't say anything of that kind.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Excuse me. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hubbs, you are saying that if they give to the probate court the jurisdiction now held by justices of the peace, that you want the state to bear the entire salary.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hubbs.

MR. HUBBS: I am saying that if the jurisdiction of the justice courts, or any lower court in the county, is given to the probate court, that the increase that I expect will be present will be borne by the state. The entire cost, it says in my amendment, the entire salary expense.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Hanna.

MR. W. F. HANNA: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Hubbs, what if they give them half the justice court jurisdiction?

MR. HUBBS: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to indulge in a colloquy with Mr. Hanna, without going through you, and therefore I suggest that he is asking the questions in an attempt to put words in my mouth about what I want to do that I don't want to do. All I want to do is make sure that we have quality justice at the lower level with quality expense attached, and that the state pays for the increased costs which are sure to result. That is the objective of my amendment. That is — I am sorry that we had the little digression here with Mr. Dell's question — I would like to have you get back to it. Now that the Madar amendment is lost, I would like those of you who are seriously interested in the economy of government at the local level to support my amendment and vote for it, and I will then sit down.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Higgs, do you desire recognition at this time on the Hubbs amendment?

The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs, which the secretary will read.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Hubbs' amendment:

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Those in favor of the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs will say aye.

MR. HUBBS: May we have a division?

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: A division has been requested by Mr. Hubbs. Is the demand supported? It is supported. Those in favor of the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs will vote aye. Those opposed will vote no. Have you all voted? If so, the secretary will lock the machine and tally the vote.

SECRETARY CHASE: On the amendment offered by Mr. Hubbs, the yeas are 23, the nays are 79.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The amendment is not adopted. The secretary will read the next amendment.

SECRETARY CHASE: Mr. Radka offers the following amendment:

1. Amend page 1, line 7, after "court.", by striking out "The legislature may combine 1 or more counties into probate districts, or combine the office of probate judge with any judicial office inferior thereto in any county with less than 25,000 population with supplemental salary as provided by law, and shall do so on recommendation and report of the supreme court.".

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Radka, on which the Chair will recognize Mr. Radka.

MR. RADKA: I have learned that you don't have to say much to offer an amendment. All you have to do is throw the delegates the ball and they will run with it. Mr. Leppien threw them the first phrase of the text of this amendment this morning, and you ran around with it all morning, and now we have 4 separate phrases which we can consider all together. I would say that there is no need for us to express ourselves any further on the proposition of whether or not we should give anyone the power to combine probate courts in particular counties. We had all the testimony on that this morning and we have had a vote on it. I would say that since the delegates here feel that our justices in the rural, lower populated counties might be in jeopardy, that rather than writing it in the constitution and impressing it upon us by saying that the supreme court will have the power to consolidate probate courts in these rural areas, you ought to at least give our people the right to approve it. I would say that it is all right to combine our probate courts, but let us also, by referendum, say that we approve the combination. Let us be the judge of our own justice and our own courts.

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: Mr. Radka, the Chair believes you are speaking on the second of your 2 amendments.

MR. RADKA: No, I am not because the second of the 2 amendments I am just offering as a possible solution. I don't want to belabor—

CHAIRMAN VAN DUSEN: The matter currently before the committee, Mr. Radka, is your amendment to strike out the words "The legislature may combine 1 or more counties into probate districts, or combine the office of probate judge with any judicial office," and so on and so forth. It says nothing about a referendum.
